Mr. President, I presume, as a matter of course, that the resolution before the Senate will be agreed to by a majority of the Senate, and that a committee will be appointed which will bring its work quickly to an end, for fear that an ample and exhaustive investigation might attract public attention to the detriment of the Republican party. I prophesy that the work will be speedily done and speedily reported, and that thereafter those engaged in it will hug close to their faint hearts the sad delusion that all is well.

Mr. President, I ask leave to insert at the close of my remarks, without reading, an extract from an address issued by a convention of Missouri Democrats held at Kansas City, January 8, 1910.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Missouri. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Extract from the address to the voters of Missouri adopted by the committee on address at the Democratic convention in Kansas City, held January 8, 1910:
> Concerning questions likely to be uppermost in the coming campaign the members of this conference, appointed by the Democrats of Missouri, make this address to the people of the State:
> THE TARIFF.
> We regard the early and just reformation of our tariff laws as the most urgent and the most important economic question to be dealt with in the immediate future. The Dingley law, passed in 1897, and which remained in force until 1909, prescribes the highest rates of duty on imports ever imposed up to that date by any statute of this or any other industrial nation.

The tax rates imposed by that law were so exorbitant as to substantially exclude the importation of many important lines of manufactures, and in all cases to so burden importations as to make them difficult and often hazardous. Taking quick advantage of the favoring opportunities thus afforded, the great monopolies were organized in most of the more important lines of American manufactures.

The first business of these monopolies was to crush competition, or to so hamper and circumscribe it as to make it ineffective; and, this being accomplished, the next move, under one excuse or another, was gradually to advance the price of their commodities to consumers. After years of experience under the operations of this law a deep-laid and widespread conviction was forced on the public judgment—among Republicans as well as Democrats—that the law had become the shelter of monopoly and an instrument of extortion. As a result of this conviction, an emphatic, almost peremptory, demand came from every quarter of the Union for a speedy revision of the tariff, with a material reduction in the rates. It was known that the Democratic party, consistently and always opposed to a high protective tariff, would, if given power, make substantial reductions on all the rates with a view to reaching a revenue basis as speedily as possible, and so the magnates of special privilege, with a view to weakening the Democratic position, induced the Republican bosses to play a confidence game on the American voters. The Republican party, through its national platform and through the oft-repeated declarations of Judge Taft, its presidential candidate, made during the campaign of 1908, committed itself to a solemn promise that if it continued in power that party would thoroughly revise the tariff with a substantial reduction in the rates. The people were deceived and the scheme succeeded. The Republican party did "revise the tariff" by the passage of the Payne-Aldrich law, but they did not reduce the rates of duty. On the contrary, on many articles of prime necessity and in universal use the rates were increased and on many others the high rates of the old Dingley law were left undisturbed.

The general average of the rates prescribed by the new law are materially higher than those prescribed by the Dingley law. In truth, it is manifest that the framers of the new law had in mind almost exclusively the interests of the great protected producing monopolies, with little thought or care for the great consuming public, whose demands had extorted the promise of lower taxation during the progress of the campaign. It is a plain case of party betrayal through the instrumentality of powerful party bosses, and the vacillation and weakness of party candidates.

For example, the monopolistic and almost prohibitive rate on woolen fabrics prescribed by the Dingley law were left practically unchanged in the new law, while the rates on cotton manufactures, unaccountable as it may seem, were greatly increased, and this, notwithstanding the fact that authentic and uncontradicted data were laid before Congress during the tariff debate showing that for years past the leading cotton manufacturers of New England had been reaping a clear profit of from 25 to over 67 per cent per annum on their capital stock, and that even on a greatly inflated capitalization. So it is clear that instead of the Payne-Aldrich law being in compliance with the anteelection promise of the Republican party, it has still more strongly intrenched monopoly and increased still higher the price of necessaries to the people.

In fact the startling, unwarranted, and audacious advance in the most of living expenses since the enactment of that law, six months ago, is the most striking event in current history. What pretense of justification is put forth by the makers of that law for its enactment in defiance of the public will and in violation of their party promise? They chant the old, old song—it is necessary for the protection of American industries, American workingmen, and American farmers. This they do now, as ever, in utter disregard of their platform declaration, oft repeated, that the true measure of protection is the difference in the cost of production in this country and competing countries abroad, and, notwithstanding the well-known fact that the tariff rates imposed by the Dingley law and the new law alike are enormously in excess of that difference in cost as to the protection of American industries, it stands admitted that this new enactment certainly does protect the already overprotected and opulent manufacturing monopolies.

As to the "protection of American workingmen," we have this to say: That great army of so-called common laborers who work outside the protected industries, so far from sharing in the supposed benefits of a protective law, are its victims by REASON OF THE RESULTANT HIGHER COST OF LIVING.

The amount of their wages is in no way dependent upon the tariff, but depends on the labor demands and supply, and upon other conditions in no wise related to the tariff, while undoubtedly their living expenses, in common with all, are directly affected by the burdens of the tariff taxation. Mechanics trained as experts in specialties receive in this, as they do in other countries, higher wages than mill operatives, but, as in the case of common laborers, their wages are in no sense dependent on the tariff, but depend mainly upon their organizations, upon skill, and upon the demand for and supply of such labor. But this class, like all others, must bear the burden of the increased cost of living resulting from monopolistic control of our productive industries through protective laws. It is a question of extreme doubt whether even the operatives in manufacturing industries are the recipients of any substantial advantage under the economic system now prevailing. The Republican contends that the item of labor constitutes the chief difference in the cost of production here and abroad, and only a few years since the Republican advocacy of high protection was predicated almost wholly on the proposition that the tariff should be high enough to cover the alleged difference in the labor cost as between America and competing foreign countries, thereby, as they contended, equalizing labor conditions and maintaining the American wage standard at home.

But now it is known of all informed men that the tariff rates of the new law are far in excess of the difference in labor wage at home and abroad. Who gets the benefit of that? Not the workingmen, for their wages for the most part remain the same, and where wages have been changed in recent months there have been more reductions than increases. Who gets the benefit? The manufacturers. Who foots the bill, who suffers? The consumers, including the employees of the manufacturers, who, in common with all, must bear the heavy additional cost of living. America, the boasted land of plenty, has become by far the most expensive country of the world in which to live. Already we have reached the point when thousands, perhaps millions, of men earning wages and salaries find it difficult, after every reasonable economy, to make their incomes meet their reasonable expenditures, and men working in protected industries are not exempt from this depressing condition.

AS TO THE "PROTECTION OF THE AMERICAN FARMERS."

We affirm that, with rare exceptions, and particularly in respect to the vegetables along the Canadian border, it is impossible that the tariff can directly or materially affect the price of staple farm products raised in all America. As long as there is shortage in the world's food supply, and as long as we produce an excess above our home demands for export, protection to the farmer against foreign competition is a shallow pretense and a myth. While we continue to be exporters of food products, the price of our productions will be regulated by the world's supply and demand, which will vary from one period to another without regard to tariff legislation; and if in the future it should happen that the domestic demand should outstrip the domestic supply, then humanity and justice alike would protest against augmenting the price of food necessary for the sustenance of the people by artificial means. The American farmer knows he does not need home protection against foreign competition, and he knows also that he bears his full share of the burdens protected monopolies impose upon the customer.

This conference is firm in the belief that the struggle for a just downward revision of the tariff should be pushed forward without halt or the least abatement in purpose or energy, until monopoly shall be unhorsed and full justice done the American people. We regret that the Republican Senator from this State turned his back upon the progressive reform element of his party, ignored his party pledges and his duty to his own constituency, and surrendered himself without reason to the mastery of that legislative bossism which under the leadership of ALDRICH and CANNON dominated the last session of Congress.

Finally, being unalterably opposed to a high monopoly-breeding tariff and strongly favoring the old Democratic policy of a "tariff for revenue," we confidently call upon the Democrats of Missouri, and all who sympathize with their views, to give emphatic expression to their convictions upon this great question at the next November election.

PUBLIC EXTRAVAGANCE.

The enormous and rapid growth in recent years in the volume of public expenditures, national and State, presents a question scarcely less important than the tariff. Taxation is substantially the only means of raising the public revenue. The public Treasury is supported almost wholly by contributions from the people collected by taxgatherers. Taxation being a burden imposed on the citizens for the maintenance of government, it follows logically that the old Democratic doctrine that that burden should be made as light as possible, consistent with good government economically administered, is sound. Large expenditures make high taxation necessary; and conversely it follows that the acquisition of a large revenue by excessive taxation leads to extravagance and needless expenditures. Honesty and economy in administration with the least possible burden of taxation should furnish the true standard of American Government. But that has not been the rule in recent years. In fact, that is not the rule upon which the Republican party administers government. That party seems possessed with a mania for money spending, and we are living in an era of astounding public extravagance. For example, the appropriations made for the first two years of Taft's administration ($2,052,000,000) will exceed the appropriations for the whole four years of Cleveland's last term ($1,860,000,000) by $192,000,000; and this enormous increase occurs in an average period of about twelve years.

Assuming that the appropriations for the last two years of Taft's administration will equal those for the first two years—and if the Republicans control the next Congress there will be no probability of a decrease—the total expenditures of his administration will aggregate the colossal sum of $4,104,000,000, as against $1,860,000,000 expended during the whole of Cleveland's last term. These vast expenditures have exhausted the enormous revenues extorted from the people by excessive taxation until the current Treasury deficit will approximate $100,000,000.

During the delivery of Mr. STONE's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Missouri suspend for a moment? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, without prejudice.

Mr. KEAN. I hope the consideration of the resolution will be allowed to continue also, and that the Senator from Missouri will be permitted to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. STONE's speech,

Mr. DEPEW. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 3360. It is a very important amendment to the organic law of the government of Hawaii, and especially the land laws, and it is quite essential that it should receive early consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not object to the Senator from New York calling up that measure after we have disposed of the pending resolution. Probably we can have a vote on the resolution now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by adding after the word "as," at the end of line 3, page 2, the words "beef, hogs, and sheep."

The resolution calls for only a specific investigation as to meat. I want to see whether the price of meat has been increased by the farmer. I am inclined to think that it has not; so I move to add these words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to have the amendment read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, after the word "as," insert "beef, hogs, sheep, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I move to amend the resolution on page 2, in the fifth line, by inserting after the word "iron" the word "steel." It is true that from a generic standpoint steel might be included in iron, but I desire to have it specific.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, after the word "iron," insert "steel."

Mr. KEAN. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF HAWAII.

Mr. DEPEW. I now call up the bill (S. 3360) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900.

I will state that it is a bill which amends the organic act for the government of Hawaii, the most important part of it being in relation to the land laws. The proposed amendment to the land laws has been unanimously passed by the legislature of Hawaii, has received the approval of the governor of Hawaii and the Secretary of the Interior, and it is necessary that action should be had on the bill at an early day to correct conditions which exist in reference to the disposal of the public lands in those islands.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill comes from the committee?

Mr. DEPEW. It comes from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. It was unanimously reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I should like to ask what is the legislative status of this bill? Is it now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has just been read and it is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I would not wish to object to the present consideration of this bill, but there are some matters in it to which I should like to call attention for about three or four minutes, without going into an elaboration of them, for I am compelled to leave the Chamber. Some of the novel features of the bill seem to impress it upon my mind as a bill of the very greatest importance, as it departs so largely from the policy of the Government in other Territories or in the States of the Union.

In the first place, on page 4, the bill authorizes the legislature of the Territory to loan the public moneys, and it—> may provide for loans of public moneys, or guaranties of private loans, on proper security to settlers on the public lands for necessary permanent improvements of their homesteads, and for loans, subsidies, or guaranties to persons or corporations for the improvement and increase of transportation facilities.

It seems to me it is a very serious question as to whether Congress should authorize the legislature of the Territory to subsidize railroads or any other corporations for the purpose of making improvements of that sort. I call attention to that.

Further, I call attention to the fact that the bill provides for an entirely different system of practice and policy in regard to the land laws. For instance, while we have the control of the land laws in all our States and Territories, where the public domain exists, in the hands of Congress, or, at most, in the hands of the President of the United States, this leaves the control of their public lands to the legislature or to officers created by the legislature. Of course I fully realize that a different system has always prevailed in the Hawaiian Islands in regard to their lands, and that the process of extending our land laws over the Territory of Hawaii may be attended with some difficulty. At the same time, I doubt the wisdom or the propriety of passing over to that Territory the control of the public lands to be managed and disposed of as may be provided by the laws of the Territory.

The eighth section of the bill provides for salaries. I am not one of those who think that the salaries given either by our States, by the governments of our Territories, or by the United States should be niggardly; but there seems to be a marked departure here from the rule which has heretofore prevailed. For instance, as to the supreme court of the Territory, for the chief justice the salary is fixed at $6,500, while the associate justices of that supreme court receive $6,000 each. That, so far as salary is concerned, puts the salaries of the judges of the territorial courts on a higher plane than the salaries of the United States court judges of the same jurisdiction. That, I think, ought not to be.

Much to my regret—and probably I am not to be excused for it—I have not examined this bill thoroughly enough to go into the details of it, but I make these suggestions to the Senate in a general way that they may know the importance of the bill, not only as affects the immediate matter of legislation, but as affects the policy of the country in regard to these great public questions.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from New York, as he and I and two or three other Senators whom I see before me have a rather important committee meeting at half past 2, if it would be disagreeable to him to allow this bill to go over?

Mr. DEPEW. As the matter to which the Senator refers is very important, I am perfectly willing that the bill may go over, and I ask that it do so, retaining its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the calendar.

HOMESTEADS IN IDAHO.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5167) to provide for an enlarged homestead. This is a bill which relates alone to the State of Idaho and has for its purpose the extending of the homestead law, which we passed a year ago, to that State.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, before the word "nonmineral," to insert "arid," so as to read:

> That any person who is a qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States may enter, by legal subdivision, under the provisions of this act, in the State of Idaho, 320 acres or less of arid nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated surveyed public lands which do not contain merchantable timber, located in a reasonably compact body and not over 1½ miles in extreme length.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 1, at the beginning of the line, to insert:

> Which by reason of rainfall or other sources of moisture will raise crops of grasses, grains, vegetables, fruits, or profitable crops of any kind and.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. My colleague is now present in the Chamber. The amendment came from the Committee on Public Lands, but I think it will not be urged, and I ask therefore that it be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would say in explanation that there has been an agreement reached in regard to the form that this bill shall ultimately take, and it has been agreed that the amendment referred to, commencing at the top of page 2, be not accepted.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "until," to strike out "such" and insert "the," so as to read: "until the lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. That leaves the bill as reported from the committee stand with the amendment, in line 6, page 1, by inserting "arid" after the word "of."

Mr. BORAH. That amendment has been adopted.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY AT SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3501) providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the confederate cemetery at Springfield, Mo.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator from Missouri if he will not let us go to the calendar under Rule VIII and take up the bills in their order? I shall make no objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri, but after this bill is disposed of I will ask that we may proceed with the calendar regularly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I object.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

REGULATION OF FEDERAL COURT PRACTICE.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as the first business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over. It has gone over many times before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN. The bill may be passed over. There are some amendments necessary. I want to perfect the bill. It is not in the shape I should like to see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

DESCENDANTS OF THE SIGNERS.

The bill (S. 1425) to incorporate the Descendants of the Signers was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

THE GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 2777) to establish the Glacier National Park, in the Rocky Mountains, south of the international boundary line, in the State of Montana, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DIXON. I offer the amendments I send to the desk.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the bill been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it had better be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers certain amendments.

Mr. DIXON. There are two amendments. One is a new amendment, and the other is in lieu of the amendment heretofore offered by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask to have the bill read. I do not recollect that it was read before. I am quite sure it was not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 14——

Mr. CARTER. I understood my colleague to request that the amendment offered by him be reported as a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of this bill if there is a printed report accompanying the bill which can be read?

Mr. DIXON. Did the Senator from Mississippi address his inquiry to me?

Mr. MONEY. I do not know who has charge of the bill. If you have, I address myself to you.

Mr. DIXON. The bill was introduced by my colleague. I made the report from the Committee on Public Lands.

I will be delighted to say a few words regarding this country, which, undoubtedly, outside of the Yellowstone, is the greatest region of natural scenery on this continent. If the Senator from Mississippi so desires, I will read from the report, but I have in my hand 7 feet of a better and more eloquent speech, taken with a camera by Mr. Walcott, formerly Director of the Geological Survey, of merely one corner of this wonderful country, which, if any Senator is interested, gives in better language and with more eloquence than I can command a description of this wonderful country. The then Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, made the original report on the bill, supplemented by a report by Mr. Chapman, of the Geological Survey. If, after having seen these truly wonderful photographs of that region of sublime grandeur, the Senator from Mississippi cares to hear the report I have made from the Public Lands Committee, I will read something of it.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. DIXON. Before reading it, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that this country lies where the Continental Divide cuts the boundary between Canada and the United States in Flathead County in northwestern Montana. To the north of this country the Canadian government has already set aside perpetually as a national park the country contiguous to the country sought to be set apart by this bill. There is an area of about 1,400 square miles of mountains piled on top of each other. There is no agricultural land whatever, except a little down in one valley on the west slope, where possibly half a dozen, maybe ten, settlers have located.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will permit me at this point, I want to say I did not rise for the purpose of objecting to this bill at all, but to get the information he has just given as to how much land on the public domain will be withdrawn from the use of settlers by this act. I have no objection to the park. I wanted simply the information he has given me, and, so far as I am concerned, he need not go any further.

Mr. DIXON. In this region are some 60 glaciers, remnants of the old glacial period, I presume the only ones within the boundaries of the United States. I rode up there some years ago. I could not adequately describe the country, but I think without any contradiction that, so far as concerns tremendous mountains and glaciers, it is unequaled. There are 250 lakes within the area. The old ptarmigan, which is closely akin to the prairie chicken and as white as snow, still lives on those remnants of glaciers, the descendants of those who made their home there a quarter of a million years ago, when the polar ice sheet extended hundreds of miles farther south. The country is unique in itself and without parallel in the United States. It is already within a forest reserve—all of it.

Nothing is taken from anyone. The rights of these few settlers and mineral entrymen are protected in the bill, where they have heretofore initiated their rights. I would be glad if other Senators who seem to be interested in this matter would examine these 3 yards of camera reproduction made by Mr. Walcott, of the Geological Survey, who has been one of the ardent and original promoters of the Glacier National Park.

Provided further, That rights of way through the valleys of the north and middle forks of the Flathead River for steam or electric railways may be acquired within said Glacier National Park under filings or proceedings heretofore or hereafter made or instituted under the laws applicable to the acquisition of such rights over or upon the unappropriated public domain of the United States, and that the United States Reclamation Service may enter upon and utilize for flowage or other purposes any area within said park which may be necessary for the development and maintenance of a government reclamation project.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. DIXON. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. This matter appeals very strongly to me, and I think we ought to have this park by all means. I want to ask the Senator about these railroad routes. Is it contemplated that they will run directly through the park or up the valley skirting it?

Mr. DIXON. I suggest that the Senator turn to the map printed as a part of the report in the files on his desk.

When the bill was first introduced in the committee, at the suggestion of the Department of the Interior this amendment was prepared. The Senator will notice on the western boundary of the map of the proposed Glacier National Park the Flathead River. That is the only route into Canada from the United States for a distance of probably 200 miles. Last year, pending the first introduction of this bill, the Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound Railroad perfected their surveys and filed their plats of the definite line of the route, as did a branch of the Great Northern Railroad. These two routes cross the Flathead River probably a half a dozen times, sometimes being on the national park side and sometimes on the other, and it was to protect these surveys where construction is about ready to begin that the amendment was offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. You think it is all right?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator tell me how large an area Canada has which will be added to this park?

Mr. DIXON. About half as large as ours. The government at Ottawa——

Mr. GALLINGER. I know the Dominion government has taken some action along that line.

Mr. CARTER. In that behalf I will say I understand that the government of the Dominion has set apart all of the country of this character east of the main range of the Rocky Mountains. That is as far as the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament extends. It is expected, however, that the parliament of British Columbia will set apart a considerable portion to the west.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the question should first be put on the committee amendment on page 3, and then, following that——

Mr. DIXON. The amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk provides for striking from the bill the first amendment proposed by the committee. The amendment which I now send is substituted in lieu of that, because the committee amendment, drafted in a hurry by myself, was a little bit crude, and the present amendment is to take the place of the amendment proposed by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Should not the question first be put on agreeing to the committee amendment?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to inquire whether or not there are any settlers along the Flathead River who will have to be dealt with by the Government?

Mr. DIXON. As I said a while ago, possibly six or eight settlers have squatted on the east side of the river within the boundary.

Mr. HEYBURN. There are a post-office or two there?

Mr. DIXON. I think there is no post-office. There is no mail route north of Columbia Falls. There is practically no settlement. But in the bill we have taken care of any rights of settlers heretofore initiated.

Mr. HEYBURN. The boundary is the middle of the stream.

Mr. DIXON. The boundary is the middle of the stream.

Mr. HEYBURN. There are a number of islands in that country, as I recollect. Is the bill sufficiently definite to dispose of those islands in the river or will it be a question which is the main channel?

Mr. DIXON. The Senator asks something with respect to which I am not in a position to give him a positive answer. I rode through that country eighteen years ago. I do not recall any islands in the river.

Mr. HEYBURN. There are a number of them. I recall them distinctly.

Mr. DIXON. The bill makes no——

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course that could be disposed of by a determination of what is the main channel of the stream.

Mr. DIXON. I should think so.

Mr. HEYBURN. When this question was up before for consideration here I suggested that the filing of the Milwaukee and the branch of the Great Northern—I think it is—should be shown upon this plat. I will ask the Senator if that question was given consideration?

Mr. DIXON. I will say to the Senator I personally went to the Land Office and the Forestry Bureau to get those plats put on the map. As a matter of fact, the plats were filed last May and June, but unfortunately they are still hanging fire in the Land Office.

The Land Office referred them to the Forestry Division some time last fall, and no report has been made, and there was no way you could get hold of the maps. I understand the reports will be in within the next few days. I examined them with a good deal of care. Both lines of road cross the river probably six or seven times in a distance of 50 miles. They wind to the east side of the river within the proposed park, and sometimes to the west, according to the character of the country. The plats are filed in the Land Office and have been for eight months.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was aware of that.

Mr. DIXON. Under a recent decision of the Secretary of the Interior it is held that these filings do not attach or give any right until final approval. For that reason I offered the last amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. That question has been in the courts. I was going to say it is an open question. Yet I think it can hardly be so considered. It has been passed upon more than once.

My object in asking as to the filings was because of the provision in the law under which they file for depot ground—the 10 or 20 acres. I was anxious to know whether or not the railroads had so filed their plats that their depot grounds—the 10 or 20 acres—would be on the park side or on the other side of the river.

Mr. DIXON. The truth is no depot grounds, I think, are shown on the plats.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think you will find they are. I have never known——

Mr. DIXON. At this time the country is already in a forest reserve.

Mr. HEYBURN. But still, under the right-of-way act, the railroad companies always designate and claim their depot grounds, and very properly, for they must have them; and it seemed to me material. On a line of this length there would be a large area of ground that the railroad company would be entitled to claim for depot purposes.

It has been held, and it is the practice, that when they take a 20-acre depot site, they may do what they please with it, and the railroad company might possibly have the exclusive right, because of the ownership of these recurring tracts of land, to select towns and communities that would build up there to the extent of pretty large places. I wanted to see their filings in order that we might determine how much ground the railroads would get within the park, or whether they had selected their depot grounds upon these islands, or on the other side, the west side of the river.

Mr. DIXON. I will say to the Senator I have examined the plats very carefully. They are filed in four or five sections. If there was a depot site or town site there it escaped the vigilance of my eagle eye at that time.

I want to say further that the land is at this time within a forest reserve, and I do not think they could acquire, except by special consideration, any town site or anything except what they might need for depot purposes. In that stretch of 50 miles, I do not think there will be more than one or two or three depots. The country on the other side of the river is in a forest reserve. It has not yet been extensively occupied for settlement, and except for one little bend in the river, there never can be any settlement on the eastern side of the river. I doubt if there will be an extensive settlement along that line of road near the proposed park in the next one hundred years.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was referring more to business places. Every park naturally offers business opportunities in the way of hotel and other conveniences.

Mr. DIXON. The main entrance to the park will probably be down at the lower end, not affected by this bill, where the Great Northern main line already runs.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does not the Senator from Montana think there should be some provision here to take this out of the forest reserve? A park within a forest reserve can not possibly be successful.

Mr. DIXON. That is what this bill expressly does.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it will no longer be in a forest reserve when the bill becomes a law?

Mr. DIXON. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is quite an important consideration. Then, it no longer being in a forest reserve, as an offhand estimate, I should say nearly a thousand acres of land would be available to the railroad company under the general law which they have only to designate for depot grounds. They might thus secure a considerable holding within the park. For that reason I felt interested to know on which side of the river they had filed their line.

Mr. DIXON. I will say to the Senator, from a pretty fair personal knowledge of that country, that they would and could not file for any thing but water tanks and depots.

Mr. HEYBURN. But they are going to carry the people who are to go into the park to enjoy it. We are creating the park under the impression that many people will go there; otherwise there would be no use in creating it. There are a number of considerable streams coming down from the east to the Flathead River. There are a number of very beautiful lakes at the head of or along those streams, and it will be found when this country is opened that there is an immense field lying immediately east of the Flathead River from the Canadian line down, where people will go to camp and to enjoy the park, according to its purpose, and the railroad will naturally make arrangements that they may alight at a convenient place to explore those rivers and those lakes.

Mr. DIXON. If they do acquire a hundred acres of land, I would say "God bless them," for it will be for the accommodation of the people who will go there.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course.

Mr. DIXON. I can not see how it will be possible for any condition adverse to the Government's interests to arise from their acquiring depot sites.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not opposed to this measure. I voted for it in committee, and shall vote for it here. I am thoroughly in sympathy with it. My only desire was that there might be no controversy in the future as to rights along the Flathead River. While the glaciers may be approached from the southern branch, and perhaps are now altogether approached from that way, yet from my knowledge of the country I am sure there will be other interesting and convenient methods of reaching those glaciers.

Mr. DIXON. There are glaciers upon the west side of the park.

Mr. HEYBURN. The existing railroad now naturally takes you to the southern border of the park, but the other road, when constructed, will give access along a very considerable line.

Mr. DIXON. At this time I can not resist the temptation to extend a cordial invitation to all of you to come to Montana next summer and see for yourselves the wondrous beauties and the sublime grandeur of this region in Montana which, as it becomes better known to the people of this country, will cause you to wonder why you have heretofore spent your time and money in European sight-seeing, when this wonderful glacier park lies almost at your very doors. Three weeks spent in northwestern Montana amid these placid lakes, set among snow-capped mountain peaks, flanked with virgin forests of pine, spruce, and hemlock, the very home of the speckled trout, the deer, elk, moose, and caribou, will bring the ruddy glow of health to your cheek, appetite to your stomach, and let you return to your eastern homes with a better knowledge of your own country and prouder of the fact that you are Americans.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the section just amended by the Senator from Montana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment heretofore agreed to the following:

And provided further, That no lands within the limits of said park hereby created belonging to or claimed by any railroad or other corporation now having or claiming the right of indemnity selection by virtue of any law or contract whatsoever shall be used as a basis for indemnity selection in any State or Territory whatsoever for any loss sustained by reason of the creation of said park.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not know that any railroad company or any corporation or any other corporation has lands within the park to be created, but the park is in the neighborhood of the Great Northern Railway, and possibly within the land grants of the Northern Pacific Railway; and if that be true, it is possible that the railroad company or corporation having lands within the park may use the lands lost to it as a basis for selection somewhere else.

My reason for the doubt is to be found in the fact that the statute which repealed the indemnity-selection law excepted from the operation of the law contracts which had theretofore been made by the Secretary of the Interior with certain corporations. But the act is silent as to what the corporations are. Whether any corporation with which the Secretary of the Interior had a contract has or has not any land within this grant I do not know. But if there are within it no grants belonging to any of these excepted companies, the amendment can do no harm; and if contracts have been made or if any laws have been passed that would give them the right of selection, this will protect the park from that right.

Mr. DIXON. I will say that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon ordinarily would be well timed. I have no objection to the amendment going in the present bill, but it seems to me it is wholly unnecessary, because the southern boundary of the park, on an air line to the Northern Pacific Railroad, the only road in Montana which has had a land grant, is distant at the nearest point, I should say, more than 100 miles. The Great Northern Railroad had no land grant. The original land grant of the Northern Pacific was only 40 miles on each side, and the lieu-land indemnity strip extends 10 miles further, which would make only a possible limit of 50 miles. At no point does the southernmost part of the proposed park come nearer than 100 miles to the Northern Pacific Railroad. I am sure that they have no lieu selections within the proposed park limits. There could be no part of the park territory within the original land grant or within the lieu limit strip. Out of abundant precaution it is a good piece of legislation. If there were any grounds for it I would have no objection, and I have none now, as far as I am concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3360) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 13, 1900, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over, and also the next bill on the calendar, Senate bill 5436, to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1035) authorizing and directing the Secretary of State to examine and settle the claim of the Wales Island Packing Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over under the objection of the Senator from Utah.

The bill (S. 1981) to amend section 1 of an act approved January 30, 1897, entitled "An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks to Indians, providing penalties therefor, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over on objection.

WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

The bill (S. 1324) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to examine the accounts of William R. Little, formerly a trader at the Sac and Fox Agency, in Oklahoma, and to pay to him or his heirs such sums as he may be satisfied are equitably due from Indian members of the Sac and Fox tribe, to the extent of any funds in his hands or to come into his hands and control belonging, respectively, to such Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORIES.

The bill (S. 5876) to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER and Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under objection.

APPEALS IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

The bill (S. 5836) to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled "An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court, and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over under objection.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM H. MILLER.

The bill (S. 1105) for the relief of the legal representatives of William H. Miller, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill also go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over under objection.

W. B. GRAHAM.

The bill (S. 4778) to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under objection.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 6072) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next order.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that this and the next bill on the calendar may go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator from Ohio ask that these pension bills may go over?

Mr. BURTON. I understand that they are general bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; they are omnibus bills.

Mr. BURTON. Special pension bills are incorporated in these bills?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all.

Mr. BURTON. Then I have no objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. They are all private bills.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pension the following-named persons at the rates stated:

Moses Ashenfelter, late of Company I, Seventy-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Anthony L. Bledsoe, late of Company H, Eighty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

CHEYENNE RIVER AND STANDING ROCK LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 12438) to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 20, after the word "settlement," to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That in any event not more than 2 sections shall be granted to the State in any one township, and lands must be selected in lieu of sections 16 or 36, or any part thereof, within the township in which the loss occurs, except in any township where there may not be 2 sections of unallotted lands, in which event whatever is required to make 2 sections may be selected in any adjoining township.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. I propose an amendment to be placed after the word "respectively," in line 18, on page 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 18, after the word "respectively," insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the lands allotted, those retained or reserved, and the surplus lands sold, set aside for town-site purposes, or granted to the said States or otherwise disposed of under the provisions of this act shall be subject for a period of twenty-five years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GAMBLE. I call attention to order of business 36 under Rule IX, the bill (S. 3286) to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 460), entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect."

I move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill for the reason that House bill No. 12438, which has just passed the Senate, covers the identical proposition.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF THE CANAL ZONE, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 12316) to provide for the government of the Canal Zone, the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. At the request of the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

JAMES L. BRADFORD.

The bill (S. 1232) for the relief of James L. Bradford was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McENERY. That bill, I believe, has already been read once.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was read.

Mr. McENERY. It was retained on the calendar in order that an amendment might be made. The Committee on Public Lands recommended that the preamble be stricken out. With that view I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana offers amendments, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 3, after the word "That," strike out "the said," so as to read:

That James L. Bradford be, and he is hereby, authorized within six months after the approval of this act to file a bill in equity against the United States in the Court of Claims, which the said court is hereby authorized to hear and determine as other suits in equity are now tried therein, to determine the question how far and to what extent the said—and so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Page 3, line 9, after the word "said," strike out the remainder of the section and insert:

James L. Bradford is entitled to claim the value for improvements for clearing, draining, and buildings on certain lands described in suits in equity in the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Louisiana, numbered 13253, 13254, 13255, 13256, 13257, 13326, 13327, said suits having been brought to annul the title of said James L. Bradford, one of the defendants, to said lands described in said suits, and said James L. Bradford consented in writing to a decree annulling his titles to said lands, provided the right to claim the value for improvements on the same be reserved in the decree annulling said titles to said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McENERY. I move that the preamble be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

PITTSBURG BREWING COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 14676) for the relief of the Pittsburg Brewing Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to reopen and consider the matter of the assessment against the Pittsburg Brewing Company, made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on the September list, 1907, and to adjust the same and make such refund of the tax paid thereunder as he may deem just and equitable.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA AND SANTA FE RAILROAD.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 101) authorizing an extension of the tracks of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad on the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 4, after the words "Santa Fe," to strike out the word "Railroad" and insert "Railway," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company to extend its tracks on the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in such manner as he may deem expedient, for the purpose of connecting said tracks with the government terminal switch tracks on that reservation: Provided, That such extension shall be made without expense to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The title of the joint resolution was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing an extension of the tracks of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway on the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the consideration of House bill 15448. I will suggest to the Senator from Utah that a short executive session is desired.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw the motion.

CHANGES IN HIGHWAYS PLAN FOR THE DISTRICT.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15448) to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to prepare a new highway plan for that portion of the third section of the permanent system of highways plan lying west of Rock Creek, north of Massachusetts avenue and the Observatory circle, east of Thirty-sixth street west, south of Cathedral avenue, southwest of Cleveland avenue, south of Calvert street, and southwest of Connecticut avenue, under the provision contained in the act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and the amendment to that act approved June 28, 1898.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 10, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 9, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Rev. John Van Schaick, jr., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill carries a number of important items that should become law as soon as possible in the interest of the administration of the Government, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the privileged report by the conferees on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I do not think it will require more than fifteen minutes to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. This being calendar Wednesday, the gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill. Paragraph 4, Rule XXVI, reads as follows:

On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of Rule XXIV, unless the House, by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith, shall otherwise determine.

Now, this is calendar Wednesday. The gentleman from Minnesota asks recognition to ask unanimous consent to postpone the operation of calendar Wednesday for the purpose of considering a conference report. It would be in order for the gentleman from Minnesota to move to dispense with calendar Wednesday entirely, and on a vote of two-thirds of the House Wednesday for that day would be devoted to business under the rules of the House other than that called for by Rule XXIV.

It is perfectly clear to the Chair that if the gentleman can dispense with it entirely by a two-thirds vote, the House ought to have an opportunity to defer it for a time by unanimous consent for convenience in consideration of conference reports, and possibly for other business of that nature. The Chair might instance certain matters that might arise, like privileged questions, where, on a fair construction of this rule, similar requests for unanimous consent might be admitted. But the Chair does not have to meet such cases until they arise. It seems to the Chair that a conference report is of such a nature that the Chair should feel authorized to submit the matter to the House for unanimous consent without violating the spirit of the rules relating to calendar Wednesday and the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, pending the request, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether it makes any difference to this particular bill whether it is considered to-morrow or to-day.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; all the rights of the gentleman from Arkansas will be preserved.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that this is not a final report. If it were a final report, then it might not be so material whether it was adopted to-day or to-morrow; but the purpose is to adopt the report so far as the two Houses have agreed, insist upon our disagreement as to the items that are in disagreement, and hold another conference, and, if possible, dispose of the bill some time during the remainder of this week. There are some appropriations carried in the bill that are very urgent. The departments are inquiring almost every day respecting the probability of when they are liable to pass. That is my only reason for making the request at this time, so as to dispose of that part of the agreement where the two Houses have been brought together, and afford an opportunity for further conference on the items in disagreement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman about how long he thinks this would take.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know of anything that would consume any great amount of time, certainly not more than fifteen or twenty minutes unless there was unexpected debate. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the item of $75,000 for the International Agricultural Exhibition at Buenos Aires is in dispute; also the item for furniture for the Cleveland, Ohio, public building. The Senate amended our appropriation of $100,000, adding $60,000. That is still in dispute. The question of the court of customs appeals and the salaries of the judges and officers in that court is in disagreement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the dispute about that?

Mr. TAWNEY. Also for the Immigration Service, $25,000; and two items for printing, one for the Monetary Commission and one for the Bureau of the American Republics.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the dispute about the salary of the court of customs appeals?

Mr. TAWNEY. The proposition about the court of customs appeals is in relation to compensation. The House fixed the compensation at $7,000 for the judges and changed the law in respect to the amount that the other officers and employees of that court should receive.

I think we will be able to reach an agreement very soon, in another conference on that, in accordance with the action of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What does the Senate propose?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman will recall, perhaps, that in the Senate they struck out our provision entirely and proposed nothing. They originally proposed what was recommended to this House by the Committee on Appropriations. A point of order was made against it, as it was made against the provision in the House, and of course it went out on the point of order. Thereupon the gentleman in charge of the bill moved to strike out our provision, in order that the matter might get into conference; and I have every reason to believe that we will reach a conclusion very soon, in the next conference that we have upon this proposition, and that it will be in line with the original proposed action of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word about this rule if the gentleman will permit. Of course I take it that the Speaker and every Member of the House wants to see this rule operate in a way that will expedite business instead of retarding it; and it seems to me that whether the unanimous-consent proposition ought to be entertained or not, this proposition could be entertained properly to defer the operation of this rule pro tanto by a two-thirds vote, for the purpose of considering this conference report, and then, when we get through with the conference report, go on under the rule.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that the rule does not so provide.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know it does not.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that the day may be entirely dispensed with on a two-thirds vote, and the request for unanimous consent—which would require not only two-thirds, but the whole membership of the House—is to dispense with it for the consideration of this conference report for the time being.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that it is not my purpose to suspend the operation of the special calendar day entirely.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was trying to help you out.

Mr. TAWNEY. My purpose is merely to defer it or postpone it for a few minutes, until this conference report, which involves appropriations that are needed, incident to the administration of the affairs of the Government, may be considered; and rather than move to dispense with the special calendar, I have asked unanimous consent for sufficient time merely to dispose of this conference report, and then we can go on with the business on the calendar for to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The action of Members is frequently determined by the way they have slept or how they have digested their meals; and this proposition, it seems to me, is right in line with the spirit of the rule, that if you can postpone calendar Wednesday in toto by a two-thirds vote, you can postpone it pro tanto by a two-thirds vote. That would be perfectly legitimate.

Mr. TAWNEY. The rule, however, reads the other way, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not care how it reads. [Laughter.] Every rule and every proposition is to be construed by the rules of common sense.

Mr. PAYNE. May I suggest to the gentleman that this provision is put into the rule, that it can be suspended for the day by a two-thirds vote——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. And with only five minutes' debate on a side, for the purpose of having a speedy determination of the matter. Now, if it is held to be in order that the gentleman from Minnesota can come in here and ask to suspend calendar Wednesday for the purpose of considering a conference report, and make a motion to that effect, and the motion fails to receive a two-thirds affirmative vote and is defeated, then it is possible for the Chair to recognize some other gentleman to move to postpone it for his bill, and so the speedy determination of the House as to whether they will dispense with the rule at all will be lost and the rule will be so construed as to occasion great delay. It seems to me, for that reason, the suggestion of the gentleman is open to objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, believing that this would establish a bad precedent, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection. The call rests with the Committee on the Census.

THIRTEENTH CENSUS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Census, I call up Senate joint resolution 66, amending section 18 of the act of July 2, 1909, entitled "An act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses," which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Senate joint resolution 66.

Resolved, etc., That section 18 of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1909, providing for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses (36 Stat. L., p. 7) be amended by adding at the end of the section the words: "which may include a minimum and maximum rate of per diem compensation to be fixed by him, the maximum rate in such cases not to exceed an average of $6 per diem for the period of employment and actual necessary traveling expenses, and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per diem during necessary absence from their usual place of residence."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is on the Union Calendar. It is a small matter, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that this resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would explain what the resolution covers, pending that request, in order that the House may be informed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is an amendment of section 18 of the act providing for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses. Section 18 of that act provides for the appointment of a number of special agents and fixes the compensation on a per diem basis of not less than $3 nor more than $6 per day.

The last clause of that section provides, however, that the director may employ special agents and pay them on what is called the piece-price basis; so we have the two policies of paying special agents, one, per diem, and the other the piece-price policy. This amendment simply enables the Director of the Census, in his discretion, to combine the two. It is thought desirable that special agents may be authorized to make investigations and be paid by schedule, and yet a uniform rate per schedule would be inequitable throughout the country, because of the great differences in conditions. A basis of pay for the city of New York or the New England States which would be equitable there would be entirely inadequate for many of the Western States, because of the sparse settlement and because of the relatively smaller number of manufacturing establishments that are to be investigated. Therefore the Director of the Census desires the amendment that this resolution provides, so he can fix a piece-price basis for special agents in making investigations, and also that he may provide a maximum and minimum rate of pay that special agents may earn on that basis. For instance, in a city where there may be a dozen or twenty manufacturing establishments to be investigated by a special agent, if the pay should be a dollar a schedule, the entire investigation might be made in two days and the agent might make ten or twelve or fifteen dollars a day. In some other locality, where there are only one or two or three establishments, the pay would not be more than a dollar and a half or two or three dollars a day on that basis, and again the agent might be required to travel 25 or 30 miles to some place to investigate one single establishment. Therefore the director desires to have the authority to fix the minimum rate of pay and the maximum. There are a good many reasons for it aside from those that I have suggested. If the special agents are put on a piece-price basis and there is no limitation to the amount they can earn the temptation will always be before the agent to do hurried and slipshod work in order to get in as many reports as possible, to increase to as high a standard as possible the average daily earning.

On the other hand, if this work is all to be done on a per diem basis, there is constant temptation before the special agent to nurse the work and make as few reports as may be consistent with the safety of his tenure of office as a government employee, so as to prolong the period of his employment. I think it will be clear to anyone who gives the matter any study at all that this amendment is a good one, in the interest of reliable investigations and economy, and it will bring about better results, and they will be gotten more cheaply than under the law as it now stands.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain what difference there is in the proposed amendment with existing law as to the proviso for the allowance for traveling expenses?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is not any.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the allowance for subsistence?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is not any. There is no change at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the phraseology as carried in the latter part of this proposed joint resolution is the same as in the existing law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The same, exactly.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Indiana is for unanimous consent to consider this resolution in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 66.

Resolved, etc., That section 18 of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1909, providing for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses (36 Stat. L., p. 7), be amended by adding at the end of the section the words: "which may include a minimum and maximum rate of per diem compensation to be fixed by him, the maximum rate in such cases not to exceed an average of $6 per diem for the period of employment and actual necessary traveling expenses, and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per diem during necessary absence from their usual place of residence."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Indiana is——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be recognized in his own right?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Indiana has yielded.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the gentleman from Indiana has no time to yield. This is under the five-minute rule, and the joint resolution is being considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and if the gentleman from New York desires to offer an amendment he will be entitled to recognition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the first word after the enacting clause.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana has frequently criticised committees for reporting bills purporting to amend various sections of different acts by simply inserting or adding specific language and without reenacting the provision as amended. Now, will the gentleman state to the House his reason for adopting the very practice which he so many times has so severely condemned on the part of others?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to explain my attitude to the gentleman in this connection, if it is of any particular advantage to him or the country, or even whether it is or not. In the first place, this is a Senate joint resolution which came over to the House from the Senate and was referred to the Committee on the Census and the Committee on the Census of the House reported it back unanimously without any change.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman believe that because it is a Senate joint resolution there is anything particularly sacred about it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to explain that the initial wrong, if there be one, is not upon the House committee, and is not upon the gentleman from Indiana. I do believe that scientific legislation requires that where a section of a law is amended, the amended section ought to be set out and reenacted, but when you come to look at the practical side of it, a week ago today we had up a bill in which an amendment was sought to be made to section 8 of the census bill. That amendment was presented in what I regard as the scientific way, and it opened up the whole section for amendment, and involved all kinds of irrelevant debate, and it took practically from noon to 6 o'clock to get that bill through. Therefore, it is not a safe proposition to be scientific in certain matters in this House at this particular time in regard to the census.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman offers as an excuse for asking the House to indulge in unscientific legislation the fact that some other body is the original offender, and that it may take a little more of the time of the House in order to do things properly. I thought it advisable to emphasize the fact that those Members of this House who set themselves up as critics of all other committees, who indulge in unrestricted criticism of the work of other committees of the House, might hold their own committees to the same rigid rules. I trust that hereafter the gentleman from Indiana will not think the Committee on the Census so privileged that it can violate the fundamental principles of what he conceives to be a scientific method of legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to find out from the gentleman from Indiana where these special agents are to be appointed from. May they be appointed from any place in the United States to take the census in any other portion of the United States, or is there any limit to the district from which they may be drawn?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The law does not impose any limitation at all, but the custom has been, and the practice of course will be, that special agents will be selected in the locality where the work is to be done. Examinations are being held all over the country for the appointment of these special agents. The law does not require an examination, but the director does, and he has caused examinations to be held all over the country for special agents, in the view of employing them in the various communities where the work is to be done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But is it the purpose of the director to select the special agents for the taking of an industrial census alone from those who take the examination?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I suppose it is, or he would not hold these examinations in all these States for special agents—the examinations that he has held.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you not think it would be in the interest of economy to require that these special agents be appointed within special zones, and in that way save long-distance traveling expenses?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not think so, because it may occasionally be necessary to send men from one State to another on certain lines of manufacture, and he ought to have the right to do so. Let us always keep in mind that the object of the census is to get an accurate census, to secure a correct count, a trustworthy investigation of manufacturers and mines and mining; and we should not hamper this great work by requiring the employees to be in any particular locality. The director will distribute them. It has always been the custom, and I have no doubt the present director will distribute the special agents throughout the country equitably, so far as the good of the service will permit it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you not think it would be a good thing to require the shortest distance of travel by the agent in reaching the work?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is a question of competency.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from Kansas will yield to me, I might furnish the information that he requested of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a matter of my personal knowledge that in many instances when the examinations were held for special agents last November there were not a sufficient number who applied, or were successful in taking the examinations. In those cases where there is not a sufficient number of men on the eligible list, they are delegating to the men selected from representatives of the Census Bureau who are dispatched to these various localities to supervise the work authority to select men without civil-service examination. So that I hardly think the practice suggested that is indulged in by the bureau of dispatching those on the eligible list to all parts of the country, when the returns show that there have not been enough applicants, is not followed. The gentleman may recollect the order required that they should have some acquaintance with economics, accounting, or should be college graduates.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am familiar with the scope of the examination, and the requirements under it, and think it was unreasonable in its requirements.

Mr. STAFFORD. In consequence of it very few took the examinations, and many of these failed to qualify.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But I still think it would be good legislation to prevent sending these special agents clear across the continent to make an enumeration of manufacturers and mining.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CAMPBELL. My time has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin where he got his information as to how these special agents are appointed without requiring them to pass a civil-service examination. Is it because he is consulted with reference to appointments? I am told that some Members of the House are able to get special agents appointed.

The SPEAKER. The Journal clerk calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York has not been voted upon or withdrawn. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the amendment temporarily.

Mr. MANN. I wish to ascertain, if possible, in reference to these appointments, whether the men now proposed to be appointed temporarily are appointed at the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin or other prominent Members of the House who have influence either with the administration at the Census Office or the supervisors who are named in those districts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why does not the gentleman ask that question over at the Census Office?

Mr. MANN. Because I am not in communication with the Census Office with reference to any appointments. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Incommunicado.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois has taken as much interest in the question of filling the various positions for taking the census as I have been perforce required to take by reason of the published notices in the daily press in regard to this special character of work. Representatives generally received some time in September or October notice from the Census Bureau that special examinations would be held for special agents. While at home I had a number of requests from constituents, who called upon me as to the requirements of that examination. When they had taken the examinations they requested me to ascertain whether they had passed. I learned upon investigation that very few had taken the examination, and that of those few only a small number were successful in having passed the examination. Upon further inquiry I learned that in those cities where, perhaps, there were a large number of men out of employment, with the peculiar capacity who could qualify, that in those instances, such as in Cincinnati, a sufficient corps of men to perform that work had become eligible for appointment.

In my city—I suppose by reason of the fact that most of the men were employed in other lines of work and not seeking public employment—very few qualified; in fact, only about two in the entire State. So I made some inquiries as to the method of appointment of these special agents where additional men were required, and learned that the authority was going to be delegated to the representative of the bureau who would be in charge of that work, and that he would have some sort of examination to test their ability. I suppose the same information could have been obtained by the gentleman from Illinois if he were not so busy with the affairs of legislation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is not because I am busy. It is probably because I am a little bit independent. I do not kneel at the shrine of the Chief of the Census Bureau. [Applause.] And it may be, and probably is, the case that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and other gentlemen are now able, through political influence, to secure appointments which the census law provides shall be made through a competitive examination, but which examination has been made so severe that they knew they would not secure appointees, and now perhaps dole them out as political perquisites.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I think that is a very unfair criticism of the statement I have made of the conditions, because in some localities there have been many men who have qualified and who have been appointed to these positions. I suppose the reason why there were so few who qualified in Milwaukee was because of the fact that men of the high character necessary for this work were engaged in private employment. I take exception to the remark of the gentleman that I have in any way cringed or fawned upon any person whatsoever in gaining appointments.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman understood me to say that——

Mr. STAFFORD. I have only received the courteous treatment at the Bureau of the Census that the gentleman from Illinois would receive, and I believe he would receive much more courteous consideration by reason of his reputation of being the great objector of this House.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that while there may have been nobody in Wisconsin to accept the appointment under a civil-service examination, yet the gentleman from Milwaukee will be able to find plenty of them to take it as a political appointment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. I rise to oppose the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois. It seems to me that if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has accurately informed the House on the proposition, we have a condition deserving some consideration at the hands of the House or of Congress. He states that these examinations for special agents were so severe that very few of the applicants were able to pass them. One of the conditions he states is that the applicant must be a college graduate. Now, the suggestion that comes from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] seems to me to be apt, that if these examinations are made so severe that very few people can successfully pass them, the department can rightly be criticised for making them so severe, unless it can be shown that the men they send out from the department to do the work possess the qualifications that are demanded of those who apply when examinations are held. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he can enlighten us on this point: Do these men who are sent out from the department possess the qualifications that the department asks that the applicants for the examination should possess?

Mr. STAFFORD. Very likely the gentleman from Nebraska has a misapprehension as to the way this service is being conducted. It was not intended, even under the examination scheme, that the special agents should be in control of this special work, but that experienced men, connected with the bureau for many years, would be sent to the respective localities to supervise the work.

Mr. NORRIS. Who does the actual work?

Mr. STAFFORD. This supervising work has been performed by men who have been long connected with the bureau.

Mr. NORRIS. Who takes the place of the men who fail in the examination?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will allow me, the men sent out from the bureau are men who have long experience and ample qualifications for the work of supervision. The work of special agents is performed by the best available men that this local supervisor sent from the bureau can obtain.

Mr. NORRIS. And he selects them without an examination?

Mr. STAFFORD. He selects them as the result of an examination that he may prescribe. In some cities, as I have stated, for instance, Cincinnati, there were ample men found who were able to take this examination for the position of special agent.

Mr. NORRIS. Right there, was that after examination had been held and the applicants had failed to pass?

Mr. STAFFORD. It was under this examination that was had pursuant to the call of the Civil Service Commission of last November.

Mr. NORRIS. And the gentleman says these applicants failed because they did not possess the necessary qualifications?

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not say they failed. I said there were numerous applicants who qualified, and some did not qualify, and others may have failed.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the gentleman to say that in the entire State of Wisconsin there were only two who were successful in passing the examination.

Mr. STAFFORD. So far as I am informed, only two qualified for appointment as special agents.

Mr. NORRIS. What kind of examination was passed by those who did do the work?

Mr. STAFFORD. This work has not been inaugurated yet.

Mr. NORRIS. But the examinations have been had, have they not?

Mr. STAFFORD. The first civil-service examination was held in the fore part of November.

Mr. NORRIS. But nobody passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Two persons became eligible for appointment. Now, that same character of work was performed five years ago, and there was at that time no civil-service examination held in selecting the men.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the amendment that I offered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees, and the Committee on the Library was called.

THANKS TO GOVERNMENT OF ITALY FOR CERTAIN GIFTS.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Library to call up House joint resolution 93, on the House Calendar.

House joint resolution 93.

Whereas the Government of Italy, as an expression of its gratitude for the action of Congress and of the American people in behalf of the sufferers from the earthquake of December, 1908, has presented to the Library of Congress a copy of each engraving seen in the "Catalogue of the best prints and engravings in copper which exist in the Royal Copperplate Collection:" Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to convey to the Government of Italy the thanks of the Government of the United States for the gift, valuable from the standpoint of art, and more valuable as an expression of the good will of the Government and people of Italy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is a very small matter to raise a question in regard to the way words are printed in a resolution, but I notice in the preamble of this resolution, which it is necessary to retain as the resolution is drawn, where they refer to the catalogue of the best prints and engravings in copper, that they print these words without capitals, although wherever the same description is given in all of the letters and papers relating to the catalogue the words are capitalized. It would appear as though we were putting in small letters a descriptive catalogue of the Government of Italy which that Government takes the trouble to capitalize.

Mr. McCALL. What would the gentleman suggest in regard to that—to strike out the small initial letters and insert capitals? I imagine that that would be within the discretion of the enrolling clerk.

Mr. MANN. No; it would not be in the discretion of the enrolling clerk.

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman wishes to strike out the initial letters in the words indicated and insert in place thereof capital letters I shall have no objection.

Mr. MANN. The title is referred to in several places. In the letter of the Secretary of State the words are capitalized, and apparently in all the official communications. I think they ought to be capitalized in the resolution.

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman will make the motion that all the words in the title begin with a capital letter I will accept the amendment. It is very common to capitalize the first letter of every word in the title, whether it is a large word or a small word. I am entirely willing that there should be an amendment offered to that effect.

Mr. MANN. All I want is to have it conform to the official communications. I take it that this resolution will be enrolled and sent to the Government of Italy.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, that seems to be the style adopted by the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman has long since learned that a proof reader of the Government Printing Office knows exceedingly little with reference to capitalization or punctuation.

Mr. McCALL. What does the gentleman suggest we should capitalize?

Mr. MANN. The words "best," "prints," "engravings," "copper," and "exist" in the title of the catalogue.

Mr. McCALL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make that motion to amend, if the Clerk has taken the words suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the preamble by capitalizing the words "best," "prints," "engravings," "copper," "exist."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, for the sake of information, will the gentleman from Massachusetts please tell us why this did not come from the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this matter was brought to my attention by a letter from the Assistant Secretary of State. This gift was made to the Library of Congress, and I suppose he thought it was a proper thing for the Committee on the Library to consider.

Mr. HARRISON. No matter what the subject-matter of the resolution may be, is it not customary for the channel of communication between the Secretary of State and the President and foreign nations to be maintained by the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. McCALL. It is common; but I think either committee would have jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF ALBERT PIKE.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Library, I call up House joint resolution 113, granting permission to the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States to remove the monument or statue of Albert Pike, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House joint resolution 113.

Resolved, etc., That permission be, and is hereby, granted the Supreme Council (Mother Council of the World) of the Inspectors-General Knights Commanders of the House of the Temple of Solomon of the Thirty-third Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry of the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States of America to remove the monument or statue to the memory and in honor of Albert Pike, which was erected by said supreme council on park reservation No. 188, in the plan of said city of Washington, under authority of a joint resolution of Congress approved April 9, 1898, to the lots Nos. 33, 49, 50, and 51, in Benjamin V. Keyser's subdivision of lots in square No. 183, of the city of Washington, D. C., on the west side of Sixteenth street between L and M streets NW., which said lots are the private property of said supreme council, or upon the parking in front of said lots: Provided, That said removal of said monument or statue shall be done under the direction and with the approval of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That said removal of said monument or statue shall be made without any expense to the United States or the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, unless some one desires to ask some questions, I ask for a vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In the original erection of this monument was there any expense paid by the United States Government, or was it erected by this organization?

Mr. McCALL. It is my recollection that the entire expense was paid for by private parties; but I am not sure about that.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to say to the gentleman that it would be a very bad precedent, it seems to me, for us to permit the removal of monuments of this kind if originally the Government had paid any portion of the expense in its erection.

Mr. McCALL. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. The statue was erected by the Masons. It occupies a very prominent space in one of the streets of the city of Washington. I think it would be a very good thing to get more of the space occupied by monuments for future use. Now the Masonic brothers want to remove this statue and place it on their own land in front of the new temple which they are to build. I think it is a very good thing for the Government to permit them to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I would say that inasmuch as the Government did not expend anything in erecting it, it seems to me it is proper that the resolution should pass.

Mr. McCALL. It is my understanding they did not expend anything, although I am not sure they did not expend something in connection with the pedestal.

Mr. MANN. I think they did not do that even.

Mr. McCALL. But I should be willing to throw in the pedestal to have the statue taken out of the space it occupies, and I say this without reflecting on the statue.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REPLICA OF STATUE OF GENERAL VON STEUBEN.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Library, I call up the bill (H. R. 16222) for the erection of a replica of the statue of General Von Steuben, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the expenditure of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be made under the direction of the Secretary of State and the Joint Committee on the Library for the erection of a bronze replica of the statue of General Von Steuben, authorized to be erected in Washington; said replica to be presented to His Majesty the Emperor and the German Nation in return for the statue of Frederick the Great, presented by the Emperor to the people of the United States.

With the following amendment:

Line 10, strike out the words "in return for," and insert in lieu thereof the words "in recognition of the gift of."

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, as this involves a very simple proposition, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask what is the estimated cost?

Mr. MANN. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. McCALL. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the expenditure of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be made under the direction of the Secretary of State and the Joint Committee on the Library for the erection of a bronze replica of the statue of General Von Steuben authorized to be erected in Washington; said replica to be presented to His Majesty the German Emperor and the German Nation in return for the statue of Frederick the Great, presented by the Emperor to the people of the United States.

With the following amendment:

Line 10, strike out "in return for" and insert in lieu thereof "in recognition of the gift of."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] if it is his understanding——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota move to amend the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will move to strike out the last word, or I will speak to the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks recognition on the committee amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. For the purpose of asking a question, and that is, Whether it is the understanding of the gentleman from Missouri, the author of the bill, that this language carries an appropriation of $5,000 for that purpose?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is my understanding, and that was the purpose of the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. It authorizes the expenditure, but there is no appropriation, and we will have to make the appropriation hereafter, if it is done.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to occupy the attention of the House unless——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that this will have a tendency toward bringing about the era of peace the gentleman is so urgent to bring about by making these gifts back and forth between the two warlike nations of the world?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to that I am happy to say that no such gifts are necessary to establish an era of peace between the United States and Germany [applause], because the two countries have maintained a traditional friendship from the time of Frederick the Great.

A few years ago the German Emperor presented to this country a statue of Frederick the Great. It was a token of the traditional friendship between Germany and the United States. Frederick the Great was a friend and wellwisher of George Washington, and the first of European monarchs to formally recognize the independence of the American colonies. In remembrance of these historical facts the statue was presented by the German Emperor and accepted by the American Government. No return has ever been made on the part of this country for this act of international courtesy. It is, therefore, proposed in the pending bill to present to the German Emperor and Nation, in recognition of their gift, a replica of the monument which Congress has authorized to be erected in this city to the memory of Baron Steuben, the great drill master of the Revolutionary Army. A replica of the Steuben statue is generally regarded as a most fitting object of a gift to Germany, for the reason that the baron, who left the Berlin court to tender his services to General Washington, was a friend of both Washington as well as Frederick the Great, and the gift will, no doubt, be received by the great ruler of the German Empire in behalf of his people in the same spirit in which it is to be tendered.

The bill, which has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on the Library, carries an appropriation of only $5,000, $4,000 of which will be the cost of the replica and $1,000 to cover the expenses of shipping, and so forth. I sincerely hope that the bill may be passed without further debate.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and that is: Whether he does not think that it would be better for the liberty and freedom of all the people throughout the world to send to Germany a statue of George Washington instead of the statue of General Von Steuben?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Well, that proposition was not before us and is not before us now, but if my friend from New York will make a motion to that effect I should vote "aye" upon it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, then, in order to test the patriotic sense of the Members of the House, I move to amend by inserting the statue of George Washington instead of the statue of Steuben.

The SPEAKER. Is the amendment of the gentleman an amendment to the amendment or a substitute for the amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Von Steuben" and insert "George Washington."

The SPEAKER. To which amendment some gentleman made the point of order that it was not germane.

Mr. STAFFORD. I made the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] makes the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment again reported so we can tell just what it is?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "Von Steuben" and insert "George Washington."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to be heard on the point of order, although I do not think the point of order can possibly lie against this amendment. I have a right I believe to move an amendment to this bill; it is before the House for the purpose of being amended or perfected.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from New York would have to make his amendment a little more definite; he would have to specify what statue of Washington he desires to have sent. We have a number in the city of Washington.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard.

The SPEAKER. For or against the point of order?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. For the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from New York does not desire to be heard on the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order, as under the precedents it is clearly not germane. The object of the bill is for the erection of a replica of a statue of General Von Steuben——

Mr. SULZER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER (continuing). And it is not a general bill to erect a monument, but it is confined to a monument or a replica of General Von Steuben.

Mr. SULZER. Just a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to know if George Washington is out of order. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. In the present company, yes. [Great laughter.]

The question was taken, and the amendments of the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MEMORIAL ARCHES AT VALLEY FORGE, PA.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 55) providing for the erection of two memorial arches at Valley Forge, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the expenditure of the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection upon the site of the encampment during the winter of 1777 to 1778 of the American Army at Valley Forge, Pa., of two memorial arches at the principal entrances to Valley Forge Park, to be called "Washington memorial arch" and "Steuben memorial arch," respectively, in commemoration of the patriotism displayed and the suffering endured by Gen. George Washington, his officers and men during said winter: Provided, That the money appropriated as aforesaid shall be expended by the Valley Forge Park Commission under the direction of the Secretary of War, and that the location, plans, specifications, and designs for such arches shall be approved by the Secretary of War before any money so appropriated are expended: Provided further, That when such arches are erected the responsibility for the care and keeping of the same shall be with the said Valley Forge Park Commission or as may otherwise be provided by the State of Pennsylvania and without expense to the United States.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 3, after the word "the," insert the words "expenditure of the;" in lines 4, 5, and 6 of the same page, strike out the words "appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert in place thereof the word "authorized;" on page 2, line 1, strike out the word "appropriated" and insert in place thereof the words "authorized to be expended;" and in lines 5 and 6 of the same page strike out the words "before any moneys so appropriated are expended."

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill for amendments.

The bill was again read.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, speaking in support of the amendments of the committee, as this bill appropriates $50,000, perhaps I should say a word in explanation of it in order to differentiate it from other bills. Valley Forge is a spot of very great historic interest, as we all know, equal to that of the battlefield of Gettysburg. Both are in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. That Commonwealth has appropriated over $350,000 in preserving the Valley Forge camp, restoring it, erecting monuments, and some of the States of the Union have also taken a part; and it seems to be entirely proper that the Government of the United States should be recognized in the matter. So we have reported this bill appropriating for these two memorial arches.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman believe this is a good time to be expending money for monuments to be erected by the Government?

Mr. McCALL. I think it is a good time to expend this particular money.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think at a time when the President has stated that it is necessary to issue bonds to pay the running expenses of the Government, that we should be authorizing expenditures for monuments?

Mr. McCALL. I think, Mr. Speaker, we can always afford to be patriotic and to do the proper thing. I do not care to go into a discussion of our general financial situation, but I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that since the Payne bill went into effect a deficit has been converted into a surplus, and we are in possession now of a revenue sufficient to meet the running expenses of the Government. We are not so poor that we can not appropriate for such a worthy object as this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts is sadly in error about what has happened since the Payne bill has gone into effect. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report to the President, stated that the revenues for the coming fiscal year would not be sufficient to meet the expenses of the Government, and recommended that the money necessary to pay the current expenses of the Government be obtained by issuing bonds for the purpose of reimbursing to the Treasury the moneys already expended for the Panama Canal. The President of the United States, seconding the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, has made that recommendation. It seems to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts is hardly justified in asserting that since the 5th of August, when the Payne bill went into effect, there has been a surplus created and a deficit wiped out. There is to-day a deficit in the Treasury for the current year and the lowest working balance we have known in many years in the Treasury.

The Treasury Department is anxious to obtain from Congress legislation which will enable it to market bonds of the United States, which it seems for the first time in a great many years can not be floated at this time at 2 per cent interest. So, I think, the gentleman's suggestion that we are rolling in plenty, with surplus money to spend throughout the United States in the erection of monuments to the dead, is not justified by the facts. I should think it would be quite patriotic if we were to defer legislation to erect monuments to the dead and to consider legislation which would give some relief to those who have become hungry on account of the passage of the Payne bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. I merely rise to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that this bill makes no appropriation. It simply lays the foundation for one, which may be reported by the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman is a member, if it thinks it expedient to do so.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought I had been recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if he desires.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if we adopt the committee amendments, no appropriation will be made; but my experience with Republican Congresses is that where a foundation is laid for it, the appropriation will be made even if the money has to be borrowed to pay the bill when the time comes.

Instead of spending our time discussing these bills to appropriate money which we have not at this time, and can only obtain by borrowing, in order to erect monuments to the heroic dead, who have been permitted to slumber unhonored in this way for so many years, I think it would be much more appropriate that the Congress should devote itself to some remedial measures which would bring relief to the country from the present exorbitant prices which have arisen and of which complaint has been made only since the recent Republican tariff bill went into effect. With its usual capacity for evading the issue, a patriotic Republican House proposes to expend money in erecting monuments and let the hungry come and admire beautiful monuments while the people starve. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that my statement about the relation between the income and the expenditure of this Government was precisely accurate, and I simply appeal to the current Treasury reports. I did not mean to say that we were paying for the Panama Canal out of the current receipts, and nobody thought that we were, but we are getting money enough to pay the running expenses of the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. The Payne bill so changed the law that the entire cost of the Panama Canal, amounting to $375,000,000, will be paid from the proceeds of the bonds. At that time, under the Spooner Act, the limitation upon the bond issue was $130,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report, recommends that the Treasury be reimbursed for moneys not to be expended at this time, but for moneys expended prior to this time, in order to make good the vacancy that will exist in the Treasury, in order to meet the current expenses of the Government, and that is the condition that exists under this celebrated Payne tariff bill, which was to create prosperity, but has brought want and hunger to the people of the country.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard in opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move to strike out the last word?

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking some questions of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], who reported the bill.

In the first place, I desire to know whether the Government of the United States owns any part of the land known as the "Valley Forge Park?"

Mr. MCCALL. It does not.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is, then, for the purpose of improving private property, or property that belongs to a private corporation or to the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. An association.

Mr. MCCALL. I should hardly call it private property. It was condemned under the law of eminent domain, and is held for all time for public purposes as a park.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the gentleman from Massachusetts stated in his opening statement that the Government of the United States had improved the battlefield of Gettysburg at large expense. That is true, but the Government of the United States purchased the land on which the improvement was made for the purpose of preserving the lines of battle and the various movements of the respective armies engaged in that battle, and the States have marked the positions of the regiments from those various States that fought in that battle. But that is not this case at all. Here is a Valley Forge Park Association. Now, we are asked to expend $50,000 in erecting arches over two of the entrances to this private or state park, a park that is owned by a private association, something that we have never done heretofore. In fact, Congress has always refused to expend public money for the purpose of beautifying any private park or any park of this kind owned by a private association. I do not know what estimate the committee had before it when it authorized the expenditure of $50,000. Twenty-five thousand dollars for an arch is a very large sum of money. Whether the committee went into the question of whether or not this was an extravagant amount, I do not know; but I think that, under all the circumstances, in view of the fact that we are at this session of Congress trying to keep down authorizations for new expenditures that have not been estimated for or appropriated for heretofore, and inasmuch as the revenues of the Government will be barely sufficient, if they are sufficient, to meet the ordinary running expenses of the Government this year, we ought to be very careful in making new authorizations for new expenditures.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the Government now is as hard up, when it is proposed to erect memorial arches in memory of the Continental Army at Valley Forge, as the Continental Congress was when it maintained the army there? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I know that the Government of the United States, since the army was maintained there by the Continental Congress, has, during many years, been far better able to erect these memorial arches than it is now. Why, if we have waited for over a century to do honor to the Continental Army that was encamped at Valley Forge, can we not wait a year or two longer? There is no one that will suffer except the memorial association that owns the park, that may be put to the expense of erecting ornamental arches at the entrance of the park. I do not think it is absolutely necessary that it should be done at this time.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that a gentleman who was born at Gettysburg should object to a monument at Valley Forge in memory of the soldiers who fought, bled, and, some of them, died there——

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that I am not objecting to the proposition; I am objecting to doing it at this time. We have waited for over a century——

Mr. MANN. Have we not waited long enough? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. We have waited until a time when we are not capable of doing it without borrowing the money.

Mr. OLMSTED. This bill does not appropriate any money. It only proposes to authorize the construction of these memorial arches at such time as the Committee on Appropriations, presided over by the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, the gentleman knows that that is not the fact, because when the sundry civil bill is under consideration in the House the gentleman from Massachusetts may offer an amendment appropriating the money, and it is in order, and the House could adopt it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will undertake to save enough money to pay for these arches by striking out on a point of order some provision from that appropriation bill that will cover a larger amount than this calls for.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. Does the gentleman from Minnesota know how much the Government has expended at Gettysburg?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know; I know that we are expending about $85,000 a year, but we have expended the money in the improvement of our own property. We are not expending money there for the purpose of beautifying property owned by private individuals or by a private association.

Mr. MANN. The trouble is that the gentleman from Minnesota was not in the battle or in the encampment at Valley Forge. [Laughter.]

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this Valley Forge public park is owned by the State of Pennsylvania, and not by any memorial association.

Mr. TAWNEY. That does not help the matter in so far as we are concerned. We are not called upon to improve the property of Pennsylvania. I want to call attention to another bill reported from this same committee, a bill to appropriate $25,000 for a memorial monument at Fort Recovery, Ohio.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I think we would better consider these resolutions and bills one at a time. The objection of the gentleman from Minnesota seems to be that because the United States has not taken the Valley Forge Park, and has not expended hundreds of thousands of dollars on it as it has at Gettysburg, he wants it wiped off the map entirely. If the gentleman from Minnesota has read the history of his country he will know that Valley Forge is one of the most historic spots we have within the Republic, and that there were nearly 3,000 soldiers of Washington's army who died during the encampment, and most of them are buried there. It seems to me it would be an impropriety not to give this recognition to a great work done by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania at its own expense in preservation of that historic camp.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. MCCALL. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I wish to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts and to the House, in reference to the policy of authorizing the expenditure of money for memorial arches either upon parks owned by the State or upon parks maintained by memorial associations, that the same thing which it is proposed to do by this bill has been done elsewhere. It has been done in North Carolina at the Guilford battle ground. This Congress passed a bill authorizing the erection of two memorial arches there, and it was highly approved by the people of the country, to carry out a resolution of the Continental Congress, in memory of Generals Nash and Davidson.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rises to oppose the amendment?

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, in 1893, almost seventeen years ago, the State of Pennsylvania began the acquisition of the title to the ground upon which was the encampment of General Washington and the Continental Army of 1777–78, for preservation as a free public park, and from that year to the present appropriations have been made for the acquisition of the property and its development, until to the present time almost $400,000 have been expended by the State for that purpose and maintenance and for the erection of an equestrian statue of Gen. Anthony Wayne.

The several States of the Union and patriotic associations have been invited—or, rather, the State of Pennsylvania has authorized the commissioners of Valley Forge Park to permit the United States of America, or any of the States thereof, to erect monuments or other memorials in said park and to accept on behalf of the State gifts of money or of land adjacent to the park; and under that authorization an imposing granite shaft, called the "Waterman monument," has been erected there by a patriotic association, and another monument, marking the location of those Revolutionary soldiers who came there from that part of the former colony of Massachusetts Bay which now constitutes the State of Maine, has been accepted. It is understood that other monuments by other States have been authorized. The development of this park has been gradual and well sustained, with fine conditions to begin with. The original rifle pits and fortifications are clearly marked upon the ground. The situation is most beautiful, and from the heights can be seen a vista of rare loveliness. This park, as I have said, has been gradually developed, and one part of the development has been a boulevard of a few miles in length, at one end of which, as well as the other, it has been thought appropriate should be erected memorial arches, in keeping with the subject, the character of the park, and the manner in which the property has been developed by the State of Pennsylvania, and somewhat in harmony with the dignity of the Nation; and if any criticism is to be made upon the sum of $25,000 for each of these proposed memorial arches, it is that the sum is too small rather than too large.

While Pennsylvania has secured more than 400 acres of this sacred soil, there are more acres yet to be secured, and from the manner in which Pennsylvania has discharged her duty toward the place to this time there can be no question but that the park will be enlarged by the Keystone State hereafter, and the importance of appropriate and imposing arches to mark the main entrances is greatly emphasized.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has answered the question which I proposed to ask him by stating the number of acres, but, if he will permit, I desire to say that it has been my good luck and pleasure to visit this beautiful spot and I wish to indorse every word the gentleman from Pennsylvania has so ably said. The bill should become a law.

Mr. WANGER. While Pennsylvania has created this park to be for the free use of the people forever, is it not appropriate that the entire United States should have appropriate memorials there as testimony of the regard which all patriotic Americans have for Valley Forge [applause] and for the heroic conduct of Washington and his soldiers in the dreadful winter of 1777–78? [Applause.]

[By unanimous consent Mr. WANGER was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

The success of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the conclusion of the encampment of General Washington and his army at Valley Forge, Pa., June 19, 1878, and the intense interest manifested therein by the people, who assembled in great multitudes upon the occasion, to which pathos was added by the death of the eloquent orator of the celebration, Henry Armit Brown, shortly after the closely following celebration at Monmouth, N. J., showed how dearly Valley Forge, with its history of patriotic suffering and endurance, is enshrined in the hearts of the people; and the immediate result was the formation, by patriotic women, of the Centennial and Memorial Association of Valley Forge, and the purchase of the house and 1½ acres of land which were the headquarters of General Washington during the greater and latter part of the period of the encampment.

The inability of this association to meet the interest payments accruing on the mortgage of $3,000, which was one-half of the purchase price of the property, led to action by the Patriotic Order Sons of America in 1886 and the extinguishment of that indebtedness and the acquisition of 3,600 shares of stock by the patriotic order and its representation in the management of the association.

In 1887 the general assembly of Pennsylvania appropriated $5,000 to the association "for the improvement, extension, and preservation of the lands and buildings occupied by Gen. George Washington as his headquarters at Valley Forge during the winter of 1777 and 1778;" and the headquarters building was restored to the same condition in which it was when occupied by General Washington, a warden's lodge erected, and the grounds generally beautified and adorned.

In 1889 the association purchased an additional acre and a half of ground, thereby securing the site of the famous Washington Camp Spring, and a few years later acquired 2 additional acres, whereon was erected the stone barn used as a hospital during the Revolutionary encampment, the total expenditures of the association being about $14,000 or slightly more than that sum.

By an act approved May 30, 1893, the general assembly of the State of Pennsylvania "for the purpose of perpetuating and preserving the site on which the Continental Army under Gen. George Washington was encamped in winter quarters at Valley Forge during the winter 1777 and 1778," declared:

The title to and ownership in the ground covering said site, including Forts Washington and Huntingdon, and the intrenchments adjacent thereto, and the adjoining grounds, in all not exceeding 250 acres, but not including therein the property known as "Washington's headquarters" and now owned by the Centennial and Memorial Association of Valley Forge, * * * shall be vested in the State of Pennsylvania, to be laid out, preserved, and maintained forever as a public place or park by the name of Valley Forge, so that the same and the fortifications thereon may be maintained as nearly as possible in their original condition as a military camp, and may be preserved for the enjoyment of the people of the said State.

This act further provided for the appointment, by the governor, of ten citizens to serve without compensation, and for the acquisition of the site, compensation of the owners, and the improvement of the park, which might be used as a camping ground for the National Guard of Pennsylvania, and appropriated $25,000—

For the purchase or condemnation money of said lands and making the said forts and intrenchments accessible to the public by such means as may be deemed necessary, and for the necessary expenses incident thereto.

By a supplement to the foregoing act, approved July 3, 1895, $10,000 was appropriated to the commissioners of the Valley Forge Park—

To complete the purchase or condemnation money for lands already taken by the State for a public park, known as "Valley Forge"—

And the commissioners were thereby—

Authorized to accept on behalf of the State any gift or gifts of money or of land contiguous or adjacent to the lands taken or to be taken for the said public park, to be held and used for the purposes thereof—

And said commissioners were further—

Authorized to permit the United States of America, or any of the States thereof, to erect monuments or other memorials on the grounds now or hereafter to be acquired for said park, upon such terms and conditions as may, in the discretion of said commission, be deemed suitable and proper.

The following additional appropriations have been made by the State of Pennsylvania for the acquisition of additional land and the improvement of the same, viz: In 1901, $7,400; in 1903, $74,500; in 1905, $115,815; in 1907, $80,500; and by the act approved May 13, 1909, as follows: Fifteen thousand dollars for roads and paths; $1,000 for trees and shrubbery; $30,000 for maintenance and administration, flags, and so forth; $1,500 for lawns; $1,000 for expenses of commission; $2,600 for building gun carriages for the cannon loaned by the United States Government to mark positions of batteries—a total of $51,100 for the two fiscal years beginning June 1, 1909. (The Pennsylvania legislature only meets biennially.)

Accordingly the State of Pennsylvania has appropriated $364,315 to the park commission toward the acquisition and improvement of the land and buildings, including the Washington headquarters building and grounds, which were acquired in 1905 by condemnation at the price of $18,200 and made free to all visitors. The total expenditures for lands by purchase and condemnation has been about $160,000. The number of acres included in the park is 467.1169.

Out of the balance of the state appropriations there was erected an observatory upon the summit of Mount Joy, from which there is a vista of widely extended scenery of diversified character and of marvelous beauty; between 5 and 6 miles of macadam roads and paths have been laid; Forts Washington and Huntingdon and other intrenchments have been restored; trees and shrubs, including rhododendron, have been treated and planted, and much seeding has been done. More than 10 miles of iron fence has been built, and the spring house at the Washington headquarters has been rebuilt; 2 stone guardhouses and 5 log huts (used by park guards), the latter a reproduction of those used during the encampment, have been erected. Also 15 large granite markers to locate positions of brigades, also many iron signboards, and tables and benches, as well as hitching rails, to accommodate picnics, have been provided.

The old schoolhouse built by Petitia Aubrey in 1705, stones of which are marked 1714 and 1716, which was used as a hospital during the encampment, has been restored. Two wells have been dug to secure water on the outer lines of intrenchments; and 2 nurseries planted, in order that trees may be at hand for planting in suitable locations. The underbrush in a large part of the woods has been cleared. Six of the 20 brass cannon donated by the United States Government have been mounted upon carriages of the type used during the Revolutionary war, according to design furnished by the British war office. The main purpose has been to preserve the encampment grounds as nearly as practicable in the condition they are supposed to have been at the time of the encampment, and so as to make practicable the fullest enjoyment of them by the people as a public park.

During the year 1908 there were 108,000 visitors to the park from the various parts of the United States and from foreign countries.

No encampment of the National Guard of Pennsylvania has ever been held at the park and unless a greatly extended area of land is secured none can well be held, owing to the topography of the ground. Possibly one-third of the park is and always has been woodland.

Besides the foregoing appropriations of $364,315 for the acquisition and development of the park, the State of Pennsylvania in 1905 appropriated the sum of $30,000 for the erection of an equestrian statue of Gen. Anthony Wayne within the park, and this, designed by the well-known artist, H. K. Bush-Brown, was located by the commission upon the crest of the land where his command, the Pennsylvania line, was encamped, being the most exposed position on the outer line of intrenchments, looking toward Philadelphia, where the British army lay, and was dedicated in June, 1908.

The foregoing has been done under the auspices of the commission with state funds. A description of this park would be incomplete without reciting what has been done under other auspices.

In 1901 the Daughters of the Revolution erected, on a lot donated by Mr. I. Heston Todd, and had formally dedicated an imposing granite shaft 50 feet high, called the Waterman monument. On the face of the plinth is the following inscription:

To the soldiers of Washington's army
Who sleep at Valley Forge 1777–1778.
Erected by the Daughters of the Revolution.

On the south side of the plinth is another inscription, as follows:

Near this spot lies Lieutenant John Waterman.
Died April 23, 1778, whose grave alone of all
His comrades was marked.

It is estimated that there were 3,000 deaths during the encampment.

In 1905 the Daughters of the Revolution erected east of but not far from where Varnum's Brigade is supposed to have been encamped, a log hut of the exact dimensions erected by the soldiers at Valley Forge, with a tablet above the door bearing the following inscription:

On this spot stood one of the huts occupied by the soldiers of Washington's Camp
during the winter of 1777–1778.
This reproduction was erected by Colonial Chapter of Philadelphia,
Daughters of the Revolution,
May, 1905.
Site was presented by I. Heston Todd.

The Rev. W. Herbert Burk, in a sermon on "Washington the Churchman," in All Saints' Church, Norristown, Pa., of which he is the rector, on Sunday, February 22, 1903, suggested the propriety of a memorial, and Mr. and Mrs. I. Heston Todd having given title to an approved site a short distance east of the star redoubt, the corner stone of the Washington Memorial Chapel was laid June 19, 1903, by the Right Reverend Bishop Whitaker, of the diocese of Pennsylvania, the stone being the gift of Bishop Coadjutor Mackay-Smith, and the words used by Bishop Whitaker being as follows:

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, amen. I lay the corner stone of an edifice to be here erected by the name of the Washington Memorial Chapel, to be devoted to the service of Almighty God, agreeably to the principles of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, in its doctrine, ministry, liturgy, rites, and usages; and in memory of George Washington, communicant and lay reader of this church, and the patriot churchmen and churchwomen who served their God and country in the struggle for liberty.

The Washington Memorial Chapel is intended to be flanked on the west by the Cloister of the Colonies, which is almost completed; and to be flanked on the east by Patriots' Hall, Porch of the Allies, tower, and rectory. Services are held regularly each Sunday in the unfinished memorial chapel, prior to the roofing of which they were held in a temporary frame structure erected in 1903, wherein President Roosevelt spoke in 1904 and Vice-President Fairbanks spoke in 1905, besides the Right Reverend Bishop of Delaware, Bishop of Virginia, Missionary Bishop of Porto Rico, and other distinguished churchmen and citizens, who have participated in functions occurring there.

In view of the action taken by Congress in building monuments, as was done at Yorktown, or in contributing toward the erection of other monuments, as has been done at several places prominent in revolutionary history, where like amounts were contributed by States or associations, it is respectfully submitted that the appropriation of $50,000 asked for for the erection of two memorial arches, one to be erected at the western terminus of the boulevard through the park and the other at the eastern terminus, is reasonable, and may with the utmost propriety be granted.

To grant the appropriation will be to encourage the splendid work of Pennsylvania and her people and the Daughters of the Revolution. Maine has located a marker; it is reported that Rhode Island has appropriated twenty or more thousand dollars for the erection of a suitable monument to mark the position of the Rhode Island soldiers during the encampment; and others of the original 13 States, including particularly Massachusetts, New York, and Connecticut, are favorably considering the propriety of erecting monuments. Participation by the National Government will be an incentive to Pennsylvania to continue her grand undertaking and to the other original States to participate, to make truly national in scope and spirit this sacred and all-important revolutionary camp ground.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am unable to agree with my colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that this is the proper place to economize. It seems to me that in these days of unbroken success we Americans should cherish the memory of the time when the truest test of manhood and of character was produced that has ever been seen in our history. Those men at Valley Forge, with their naked and bleeding feet, with their starved and half-clothed bodies, gave to succeeding generations an enduring example of the greatest heights to which the American character can rise—courage and manhood under adversity. I do not possess the eloquence to do credit to this subject, but it seems to me the very least the National Chamber can do is to authorize this appropriation, so that we may do our part in erecting a tribute to the memory of the men whose courage under adversity made possible the creation and freedom of our country and the union of these United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Library, I call up the bill (H. R. 19962) establishing a commission of fine arts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, seven artists of repute as a commission on fine arts, which commission shall have authority to decide upon the location of statues and monuments in the public squares, streets, or parks in the District of Columbia, except in cases where otherwise provided by law. It shall also be the duty of such commission to advise in the selection of models for such statues or monuments and in the selection of artists for the execution of the same. Said commission shall have a secretary and such other assistance as the President may authorize, and the members of the commission shall have the expenses of their travel and their other personal expenses in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of the commission.

SEC. 2. That to meet the expenses made necessary by this act the expenditure of $10,000 a year is hereby authorized.

With the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the President be authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, seven artists of repute as a commission of fine arts, which commission shall have authority to decide upon the location of statues and monuments in the public squares, streets, and parks in the District of Columbia. It shall also be the duty of such commission to advise in the selection of models for statues and monuments erected under the authority of the United States and in the selection of artists for the execution of the same, and generally to advise upon questions of art when required to do so by the President, or by any committee of either House of Congress. Said commission shall have a secretary and such other assistance as the President may authorize, and the members of the commission shall each be paid at the rate of $500 a year and actual expenses in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of said commission and while attending the same.

"SEC. 2. That to meet the expenses made necessary by this act the expenditure of $10,000 a year, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized."

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which has just been read, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19962) establishing a commission of fine arts, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who heard the bill read will have no difficulty in apprehending its purpose. It is to create a national commission of fine arts. We have had a very haphazard development of art in the city of Washington. We have had our streets and our squares filled up by art objects that are not always art. We have had commissions appointed—temporary, sporadic commissions—one commission to operate upon one statue and another commission to operate upon another, and the result is that we have had no uniform or well thought out development. Every civilized country in the world has, I believe, a commission of art corresponding to this one. In France they have a cabinet minister—the minister of public education, of crafts, and of the fine arts. This is a very modest provision in this bill, because we do not assume geographic jurisdiction over the whole country with regard to artistic matters, but we provide here for a commission of artists who shall have a somewhat similar jurisdiction to that which was marked out in the letter of President Roosevelt creating or establishing what was called "a council of fine arts."

The President of the United States has no power to create a council of fine arts and give them any definite legal authority, and I think there should be such a council or commission established by act of Congress. This bill simply authorizes the expenditure of $10,000 a year, and we are each year expending hundreds of thousands of dollars in this capital upon matters where the advice of artists might well be taken. We might have provided——

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCALL. I will yield to the gentleman in just a minute. We might have provided that the members of this commission should serve without any compensation, but I think, economically, that it is better for a public officer to receive something in the way of compensation, and then he will feel that it is his duty to render the service and that he will not render it simply as a matter of charity or honor. We provide here for a very small fee of $500 a year and for the traveling expenses of the gentlemen composing this commission in going to and in returning from the capital and at Washington while attending the commission. We also provide for a secretary. That would result in our having here in Washington an accumulation of plans, engravings, and copies of different art objects of the world, and it would be an excellent place for information for people who are interested here in artistic matters on behalf of the Government. Then this commission is given advisory power, so that any executive department of the Government or any committee of Congress which has anything to do with artistic matters may confer with the commission and secure their advice. I believe that for a very small annual expenditure of money we shall get a great deal, and therefore the Committee on the Library has authorized me to report this bill and to ask the House to pass it. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will he yield for a question?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is familiar, for instance, with the Agricultural building—perhaps the gentleman may not get over that way very often—and is the gentleman familiar with the two wings of the Agricultural building?

Mr. McCALL. I am in a general way, but I should hardly want to give an artistic opinion as to the building, however.

Mr. MANN. I should not think the gentleman would hesitate at all about giving an artistic opinion of that building over there. The gentleman must be exceedingly cautious if he hesitates to give an opinion as to whether that building authorized by Congress, in the first place, ought to be located the first story below the level of the ground, and, in the second place, where there is no necessity for it—where clerks are supposed to work—and, in the third place, whether it is artistic and whether, when Congress authorized the building to be constructed, two wings should be constructed widely separated instead of one completed building as a whole. Now, I do not know whether the gentleman has information on that, but I suppose he has information as to whether that was done at the request or direction of the President, based upon the opinion of an art committee or commission.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And without authority of law.

Mr. MANN. Of course it was done without authority, as the gentleman from Missouri suggests. It was done in direct violation of the law, but that is entirely away from——

Mr. McCALL. This commission would have no authority to violate the law. If Congress established or fixed a certain location for a building or a work of art, the commission would not have any authority to change that act of Congress. I should say furthermore to the gentleman that this resolution would not confer even in the first instance upon this commission the authority to locate a public building.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I am not so sure about that.

Mr. McCALL. I think not.

Mr. MANN. The language would certainly go that far, unless Congress specifically provided that they should be advised in reference to the location of the building, it being upon a question of art, when required to do so by the President or by any committee of either House. Now, the location of a building is a question of art.

Mr. McCALL. Well, the gentleman will find in the first instance the committee is given authority to decide upon the location of statues and monuments; that is an authority it has. In the next place it is made their duty to advise when called upon.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. McCALL. It is not necessary to follow their advice.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well.

Mr. McCALL. An officer charged with the responsibility of doing anything relating to art may call upon this commission for their advice.

Mr. MANN. What I am trying to find out is whether we are legalizing such a commission which might perpetrate such an enormous crime as was perpetrated in the construction of the Agricultural building, in our day or hereafter. A future place will never be hot enough to properly singe the man for the present Agricultural Department constructed as it is. No one in Washington who is compelled to work beneath the level of the surface of the ground in the summer time will ever forgive the man who located the Agricultural building.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Who did it?

Mr. MANN. The art commission was responsible for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. As to the question of responsibility, President Roosevelt ordered it done at the request of the Burnham art commission.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCALL. I would like first to reply to the gentleman from Illinois. This bill would certainly give no commission authority to do just what the gentleman says this commission did. This bill confers no authority whatever upon the commission to locate a building.

Mr. MANN. Well, take the exact case that took place.

Mr. McCALL. It is given in reference to these monument and statue commissions. I am on a commission now with reference to the Barry statue. I know nothing about it. The people of this country are divided now into almost two hostile camps over the selection of the artist. We have had a great difficulty in deciding upon the location. But we have decided on that. I do not think that we used any great artistic judgment in deciding this question. I think that it would better have been decided by a commission of artists. Wherever a statue or monument is to be erected, it is to be turned over to this commission on fine arts.

Mr. MANN. And that could be done in any act that is passed provided that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Library shall make the location. He might provide that some distinguished artist be selected; but I think I would prefer to take the judgment in the District of Columbia of the gentleman from Massachusetts to any artist I know of on the question of the location of a statue in the District.

Mr. SULZER. But I would not.

Mr. MANN. But take the exact question we have. The gentleman says it would not confer authority upon the commission, when there was a commission without authority of law, and yet that commission exercised a power which in the end produced the Agricultural building, over the protests of the gentlemen who are constructing the building, against the advice of Doctor Galloway, who was chairman of the committee in the Agricultural Department and had charge of the plans and construction of the building, against the advice of everybody connected with the location of the building, and built it below the surface of the ground, divided in such a way as to destroy its artistic possibilities and its beauty at the request and upon the demand of an unauthorized commission. Now, the gentleman proposes to make an authorized commission, which would have still greater power.

Mr. McCALL. Right in that connection I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois point to any language in this bill which would justify the statement with which he concluded his remarks. The very thing that the gentleman complains of might happen if we do not pass this bill at all. This is to protect the future from the occurrence of what he says has been done in the past; and I would like him to show a line in the bill that would justify his statement.

Mr. SULZER. If my memory serves me correctly, and I think it does, it was the same commission that put the Grant monument in the Botanic Garden, a disgrace to the District. This was done at the request of the same art commission that we are all opposed to, and this would give them absolute authority to do it that way again.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is in error on that. Special authority was given to a special committee created by the act, the same as these other special committees that have been created heretofore by act of Congress, and they acted at the request and upon the demand of this unauthorized commission.

Mr. SULZER. Exactly. The gentleman is quite right about it, and I understand that every visitor——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Massachusetts still has the floor.

Mr. McCALL. I yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that nearly every visitor that knows anything about art or artistic matters that comes to Washington and walks around the iron fence of the Botanic Garden, looks over at the two lions and the marble pedestals, wonders what it is all about, then makes inquiry, and is informed that some commission, supposed to know what it was about, decreed that the Grant monument should be located there, thus destroying the shrubbery, destroying the beautiful and historic trees, destroying the landscape, destroying the Botanic Garden as it was. Then they walk away with the conviction that the place selected for the Grant monument is no more fit for it than the Potomac Flats would be.

The people of the District of Columbia, I remember, cried out against the outrage of placing Grant's monument in the Botanic Garden. Members of Congress who had some idea of artistic matters voted against the outrage, but I believe that the committee over which the gentleman presides, or a majority of its members, stood by the art commission and against the opinion of Congress, against the judgment of the people of the country, and against the wishes of the people of the District of Columbia who had some little knowledge of artistic matters.

Mr. McCALL. I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. SULZER. And I want to say while I have the floor——

Mr. McCALL. I want to correct the statement made by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] has the floor.

Mr. SULZER. He yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for the purpose of making a statement.

Mr. McCALL. I wish to state, for the information of the gentleman from New York, that when he said that the committee over which I presided stood by a certain outrage, that the fact was the other way. The committee over which I have the honor to preside brought in a bill attempting to make void that action, and it was called up in the House, and we secured a majority of the House to support us in it. The gentleman is very much misinformed about the course of procedure in the location of the Grant memorial.

Mr. MANN. The outrage was perpetrated in one of the supply bills, and not in the bill that came from the gentleman's committee.

Mr. SULZER. I think that is true, and I accept the gentleman's statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the interest of truth I wish to say that the House did not support the Committee on the Library, but, on the contrary, that it supported my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations in demanding that the location be agreed on by Congress.

Mr. MANN. It gave a majority to the Committee on the Library, but not the two-thirds necessary to pass the bill.

Mr. McCALL. We tried to suspend the rules, and we only got a majority instead of the necessary two-thirds.

Mr. SULZER. That was the way it was done.

Mr. McCALL. And the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] was followed by a little over one-third of the House, and the Committee on the Library by a majority.

Mr. SULZER. All I desire to say in conclusion——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to understand the situation. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield the floor, or does he yield time to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McCALL. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words more. In my judgment it would be a very good thing to have created an art commission for the District of Columbia. There are more grotesque statues located in public places in the District of Columbia in the name of what some people call art than in almost any other city in the world. We ought to have an art commission of the highest order to determine what statues shall be placed in the public buildings and the public squares and places in the District of Columbia. I think this is a bill along right lines, and I am in favor of it. I know that in almost every city in the Old World and in most of the cities in this country that give any attention whatever to artistic matters there is an art commission that passes on these matters. Congress has been doing it through its joint Committees on Library heretofore, and in some respects doing it very well; but I believe it would be a good thing to pass this bill, and to have the President appoint the ablest men in the country that he can get to serve as commissioners, and I would be in favor of paying them better salaries than this bill provides, so that we could secure the very highest order of talent and experience.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does my colleague think the payment of salaries is really necessary? Does not he know that in New York the board of education and the art commission do not receive a penny, and we get the best service in the world?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; I know that. I was just coming to it. I believe that we could get very good and very competent men to serve for the honor. I want to say, however, that so far as I am concerned, I would be willing to pay the art commissioners good salaries, so that they would be in Washington nearly all the time and devote most of that time to these very important matters. We are not only interested, the people of this generation are not alone interested in this matter, but the people of this country, and of other countries for generations yet to come are interested in it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the committee will not approve of this proposition. As stated by the gentleman from Illinois, we have had an illustration of what an art commission can do in respect to a previous authorization by Congress when that commission is illegally created. If the action of that unauthorized commission is any indication of what a commission created by authority of law may do, then, certainly, we ought not to create a commission with even limited authority.

But I am not in favor of government by commission. I believe that the Congress of the United States should reserve some of its legislative functions, some of its legislative power, and not delegate it to commissions or to any other body. We are responsible to the people for legislation, and can not escape that responsibility by the appointment of commissions. Commissions are justified only when in the exercise of its functions Congress requires information that can only be obtained through investigations by commissions. We have control by virtue of the law over the District of Columbia. When Congress authorizes the construction of a public building and fixes the location of that building and requires its erection within the authority and the appropriation made therefor, or the limit of cost, I do not believe that there is any body of men, or any man, or any executive officer, I care not how high in authority he may be, who should have the power, or unlawfully exercise executive power, to defeat the will of Congress as expressed in the law it enacts.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. In authorizing statues now, does Congress fix the location for them?

Mr. TAWNEY. Congress appoints a commission to determine the location, but always before that commission is appointed and before the authorization for the statue is given Congress knows where it is probably to be located. There has never been a time when a statue has been erected in this city without Congress or the appropriate committee of Congress knowing where it was proposed to locate it.

Mr. PARSONS. Then, why was not the location named in the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Simply because the committee of Congress felt that while it had the authority to limit and fix the location, as was done in respect to the erection of the Agricultural Department building, yet commissions have been created for the specific purpose of locating statues, but these commissions are at all times under the control of Congress. If before a statue is erected Congress sees fit to change the location or change the law in respect to the location of a statue, it has the power to do so; the matter is at all times under the control of Congress. This commission is not to act under the direct authority of Congress, but upon its own authority, without any supervision. Here you have a permanent commission authorized to act in respect to the things mentioned here, and by virtue of that authority will assume to act in respect to all public buildings authorized in the city of Washington, as a similar commission heretofore created without authority of law has done.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. McCALL. I would like to say to the gentleman that I do not know of an instance where Congress knew beforehand or attempted to decide beforehand where a statue should be erected. These commissions are treated precisely the same as a general commission is treated. The only time when I have known of the location of a statue to be decided in Congress or to be fought out in Congress was the location of the Grant memorial.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I say there is absolutely no necessity for creating this new organization in the District of Columbia for the purpose proposed. Men may criticise the artistic beauty of the various statues erected in the city of Washington, and their criticism may be just. I do not know anything about it, and I do not pretend to know anything about it, but I do say that, in my judgment, we are not going to improve the artistic beauty of the statues now erected or those hereafter to be erected by creating and authorizing the creation of a sky-line commission, such as is proposed by this bill, a commission that will assume to exercise functions and powers whether we authorize them or not.

They are a class of men that do not know anything about law, and respect it less when it interferes with what they believe to be the artistic line along which we should go in the erection of memorials, buildings, and monuments in this city; they will not look very far into the question of their authority; they will follow only the artistic ideals they may have conceived in their own brains.

Now, the selection and location of statues in this city has been made by commissions appointed for that specific purpose, and at all times under the control of Congress. I for one do not believe, first, that it is necessary to create this new organization, adding additional expense to the Government of the United States; or, second, that any benefit will be derived from it, except to the men who receive the honor of an appointment on this national commission and who may thereby gain reputations that may be of some practical and material benefit to them in their chosen profession.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has had to say. I always do, and in an humble way and with my feeble efforts I have always endeavored to follow him when he was working for the economical control of the revenues of the Government. It is painful to have to separate from him, even on a small matter like this, though it is not trivial. I regard it as of great importance. I shall support the proposition, and I would support it more cheerfully if the Committee on the Library had embodied in their bill authority for the commission to take a broadax and go through this city and destroy half of the so-called "works of art." I think a man only has to make a visit to that chamber of horrors under the Dome to realize the importance of some sort of advice on matters of art. This commission, as I understand it——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Oh, I have only five minutes.

Mr. MANN. We will give the gentleman an hour, if he wants it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But I do not want it. I want to go to lunch. I can not find in the language of the bill any of the dangers apprehended by some of our friends who oppose the appointment of the commission. It is an advisory board, and if it should do as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] suggests it may, view with an eye only to the artistic excellence of works that are to be erected, and therefore disregard the cost of them, certainly Congress can—and assuredly Congress will—check them, for it does retain in its own hands the control of expenditures in all such cases. That a crime was committed in departing from the express mandate of Congress in the construction of the new Department of Agriculture building is, I think, beyond question. Somebody was responsible for that. I dare say that the gentlemen who are regarded, and properly regarded, as the leaders of this House knew where that responsibility was, knew who committed that deed that has been described here by one of them as a crime.

Mr. TAWNEY. Primarily, the head of this unauthorized sky-line commission.

Mr. SAYDEN. Primarily; but what authority had the head of that sky-line commission, as the gentleman calls it, to force its recommendation on anybody?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, they did.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Somewhere ultimately, finally, there was lodged absolute authority, and if that authority was not exercised in the interests of the people and for the maintenance of law, then it should be criticised and not the gentlemen who advised, because they were perhaps swept off their feet by a desire to erect an artistic building, a building that would be an ornament to the District of Columbia and a monument to their taste.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Take the case of the Agriculture building, where the President undoubtedly, in a way, was responsible——

Mr. SLAYDEN. In a way.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am not sure. I suppose the authority probably was in the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture was directed by the President. It is common knowledge that the President, at the request of this sky-line commission, met the gentlemen here in Washington, had a considerable consultation with them morning, afternoon, and evening, and at the end, rather contrary to the opinion of the President, he yielded to the opinion of the art commission and requested the Secretary of Agriculture to adopt the plan which was finally adopted. Now, the President can not be criticised for that. He was doing that which we think ought not to be permitted to be made the law, but he was acting on the same theory that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is talking—that the artists know better about things of common sense than men of common sense do.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the taking of advice from gentlemen trained in art necessarily carries with it the obligation to violate the law.

One of the most valuable features of this bill is the fact that the commission, which will be composed of men who are qualified for the work by training and experience, will be employed not only to give advice, but will have the authority to select the artists for the execution of works of art. I wish, Mr. Chairman, with all my heart, that that law had governed in the selection of the artists to do that work, examples of which we now find in Statuary Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to have a little more time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCALL. How much more time?

Mr. SLAYDEN. About five minutes; I will guarantee to conclude my remaks in that time.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas five minutes additional. How much more time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has now thirty-six minutes and will have thirty-one remaining when the gentleman from Texas has occupied the time which the gentleman has now yielded him.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, just for a moment, and in a sentence I will refer again to the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Minnesota. I want to repeat to Members of the House on this side that Congress does not pass away its control over the purse strings of the Government when it seeks advice from capable artists on artistic matters. The educational value of real works of art can not be overestimated. If such commissions were more generally distributed throughout this country, if a control of the kind suggested obtained in every city that goes in for artistic development, I think that the minds and morals of the people of the country would be distinctly elevated. I heard my friend from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] refer to the fact that they have a fine-arts commission, I believe it is called, in the city of New York.

A few weeks or months ago I read that one of the great railroad systems that go into Jersey City on this side of the Hudson River had prepared plans for the construction of a great bridge. It was presumably a beautiful as well as a durable structure, yet when submitted to this commission of capable artists they pointed out inartistic features. The report of the New York commission was submitted to the railway corporation and it withdrew those plans, had new ones prepared, and I am told that now they are going to have a bridge that will be one of the ornaments of the world and serve a double purpose, an æsthetic as well as a utilitarian purpose. New York City is to be congratulated on the fact that she has taken this long step in advancing the education of her people, and I hope that the time will come when every city in the country will permit itself to be advised by an art commission, not controlled by a commission, for I am as much opposed to that as the gentleman from Minnesota or the gentleman from Illinois. A few days ago, when a discussion was being had as to the propriety of placing certain statues in Statuary Hall, I went through that room for the purpose of learning who among our departed worthies had had an image placed there, and I made a complete list of them. I took that list with me that night to where there was a little entertainment. There were a number of Members of Congress there who may be said to have average intelligence. There were a great many newspaper correspondents present, and it will be conceded that they have perhaps more than average intelligence. I read this list to a number of those gentlemen, and not 25 per cent of either body knew anything about more than 15 or 20 per cent of the people whose images now stand in that chamber.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But would a commission's advice have helped in giving them that information?

Mr. SLAYDEN. But, Mr. Chairman, in addition to the fact that nobodies, so far as permanent historic value is concerned, have had their images placed there, a most casual inspection by a mere tyro in such matters will convince anyone that they are lacking, most of them at least, in every attribute of true art, and, I repeat, if my friend will only clothe the commission with authority to go through this city and smash most of them, I will vote for his bill with almost tumultuous pleasure. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, in ordinary matters coming before the House I follow the recommendations of the committee without very much question. The volume of business that comes into the House makes that course usually necessary, and I follow the committee unless there is some principle involved in the legislation contemplated to which I can not assent, and I regret on this occasion to have to dissent from the recommendations of the committee which reported this bill. I do not feel myself called upon to discuss art, sculpture, painting, architecture, or anything of that sort, although I confess that what the gentleman from Texas has said made a very strong appeal to me to take up some works of alleged art that are to be found scattered over this city.

I would like, with him, to see many of the so-called works of art in the city of Washington placed where they would no longer offend the vision of an innocent public, but my opposition to this bill is that it creates another commission [applause] which in time will be converted into a bureau or department of the Government. For one, I have long since tired of seeing the Government of the United States gradually handed over to commissions and bureaus. [Renewed applause.] This is a Republic, a representative government, and we are responsible under the Constitution to the people for good government. We can not save ourselves that responsibility by creating commissions and bureaus ad libitum, as we have been doing, and as we are seemingly disposed to do.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PARSONS. The precedent for an art commission here is in the city of New York, which has an art commission. Without considering whether we should have an art commission in Washington or not, we consider our art commission has been of service in New York, and is not that the most material consideration for this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am now discussing a principle that is involved, and I will say to the gentleman from New York that they have a great many things in that city——

Mr. MANN. Principally indebtedness.

Mr. CAMPBELL (continuing). That might well be emulated.

Mr. GOULDEN. And we have something to show for it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And they have many other things that may well be shunned.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PARSONS. Would the gentleman advise the city of New York to do away with its art commission?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not knowing just what the art commission has done, or whether or not the work could not have been better done in some other way, I refrain from expressing my opinion of the art commission of New York.

Mr. PARSONS. The art commission of New York passes upon every statue, every bridge, every public building erected in New York, and every one of those erected in the past ten years has been passed upon by our art commission. Now, does the gentleman advise us to do away with our art commission? I challenge the gentleman to find an artist of any repute who would advise the city of New York to dispense with its art commission.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not discussing the art commission of New York, or New York. I have never advised anywhere that New York City's example be followed in government.

Mr. PARSONS. Why, the gentleman has just said that there are many things in New York to be emulated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I may be asked to turn over New York to its aldermen. Well, under present conditions up there, not artistic, but political, I can not say that I would. Yet there have been some artists in the board of aldermen in the city of New York.

Mr. PARSONS. Not that I have heard of.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to say on that proposition as to New York government and politics that there is not a better art commission in existence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have disclaimed any knowledge of the art commission that exists in New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. But the gentleman passed a criticism on its government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have understood, in a general way, that its government has piled up a colossal debt that posterity will have to pay.

Mr. GOULDEN. But we have something to show for it, and are proud of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But it is a question whether or not the art that you have displayed in New York will be sufficient compensation to posterity for the money they will have to pay for it.

Mr. GOULDEN. The taxpayers think it is, and we are satisfied with it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now, if the gentleman from New York on my left and the gentleman from New York on my right are satisfied with the art commission in New York, we will simply pass that, and I will proceed in discussing the creation of another commission for Washington under the Government of the United States.

In the limited time that I have been here I have seen the power of Members of Congress taken away from them by bureaus and commissions of their own creation. Why, if a bill is referred to a committee, and it in any way touches a question that has within its scope the work of a bureau or commission, the first question asked by the Members is, "What does the commission or bureau say about this?" Unless there is a favorable recommendation by the commission or by the bureau, the man interested in the bill stands no chance whatever to get the bill reported by the committee with a favorable recommendation. It occurs every day. The gentleman from Texas says we have control of the purse strings. We have not. The bureaus and commissions practically have control of the purse strings. They do the work we have commissioned them to do, and then come to us for the money with which to pay for it, and we have to appropriate the money. I am not afraid of taking the responsibility from time to time of providing such temporary commissions as may be necessary in order to locate any particular work of art in this city.

But I am opposed to the creation of another permanent commission or of another bureau, and I sincerely hope the Members of this House will retain what there is left of work for Congress to do and not yield further to bureaus and commissions. Unless we do that, there will be but little left for us to do here in the future except to make the appropriations the commissions ask for. I am opposed therefore to the bill creating another commission, and I sincerely hope that it will not pass.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman please tell us what power this bill takes away from Congress that it now exercises?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I assume that the purpose of creating this commission is to give it authority to do certain things relative to the location of statues, arches, or other works of art in the city of Washington.

Mr. PARSONS. Does Congress now locate those statues and arches? It was stated a while ago that the only instance in which Congress had located one was in the case of the Grant statue, and that in every other case the location was left to a commission.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have heard it denied that Congress did that.

Mr. McCALL. It located that by a provision on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it illogical to say that this commission would not have authority to do the work that it is commissioned to do and that Congress ought to do.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman think, then, that Congress ought to locate every statue?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why, undoubtedly, if it must be located with authority from Congress.

Mr. PARSONS. That it must decide just where it shall be put?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, the gentleman from New York can not make me say that the Congress should say that it should be located within 2 feet of a certain point, and that it should be on a pedestal of a certain height.

Mr. PARSONS. Who must say that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The authority that has been given to locate the statue should give some discretion to those who are to place it.

Mr. PARSONS. Why not give that to the commission?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Simply because I would not create a perpetual fine-arts commission for the purpose of locating an occasional statue or some other work of that kind in Washington or the District.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favor of this bill, and I have been very much interested in some of the arguments advanced this morning against it. For example, the gentleman from Kansas has just animadverted with a good deal of bitterness against the alleged power of bureaus of this Government to rob the United States Treasury. That practically was his statement. Now, the reason that Members of the House consult bureaus or departments of the Government as to the advisability or inadvisability of making appropriations or passing certain measures is that the magnitude of this Government has compelled the specialization of its business into bureaus. It is utterly impossible for the gentleman from Kansas to know all about what the bureaus in the Navy Department are doing, what the bureaus in the War Department are doing, what the bureaus in the Department of the Interior are doing, what the bureaus in the Department of Agriculture are doing. Of course that is utterly impossible. Therefore when we have a bill the substance of which is important to a particular bureau, or to a number of bureaus, we are of necessity obliged to consult the bureau chiefs or the heads of departments. They are not as much interested as I am in the passage of my bill. They are not as much interested as is the gentleman from Kansas in the passage of his bill. They are salaried officials, presumed, under their oaths of office, to do what is right. We go to them as disinterested people and ask them about bills. We are not bound by their judgment at all, and it is within the knowledge of every Member of the House that every day we disregard the recommendations of bureau chiefs and department chiefs. We appropriate, in our discretion, frequently very much against their will and to their intense displeasure. So I see nothing whatever in that objection of the gentleman from Kansas.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] a moment ago made a speech which I thought was not quite in point, as did also the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. I respect them both as men of great ability, but it struck me that their remarks were not germane.

There is no proposition in this bill to permit a commission to determine the location of any public building in the city of Washington or elsewhere. The gentleman from Minnesota asked if we would indorse what was done in the location of the new buildings of the Department of Agriculture, putting one story below the ground, and so forth. There is no proposition to give that power, nor any equivalent power, nor anything analogous to it, to any commission named in the pending bill. Then why this kind of argument? I have often heard it indulged in in lawsuits. It may not intentionally be made to mislead, but it does have the effect of obscuring the issue that is before the jury. This bill gives this commission of experts an opportunity to advise people in this city where to locate statues and works of art. They can locate these in public parks, public streets, and public grounds. They can not locate them on private property; of course not. But they can say that it is their judgment that the location of a certain statue or other work of art, all things considered, would be best in this place or in that place, and that is all.

Public buildings are entirely out of the bill. Then why this intense vehemence against a proposition that is not before the House? Nobody is asked to give the commission the power to locate public buildings. Why do gentlemen so earnestly oppose a proposition that is not here for discussion?

Now, as to the Grant statue, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] said that the location of the Grant statue at the base of Capitol Hill outraged the feelings of everybody in Congress and out of it. He said—I have forgotten whether it was the gentleman from New York, but some gentleman said—that the men who fixed the location of that statue were artists but lacked practical sense. Let us see. St. Gaudens, the very greatest of American sculptors—I will go further than that and say a sculptor whose genius is unrivaled in this generation anywhere in the world—St. Gaudens was a member of the commission who helped to locate the Grant statue in that place. Who else? Olmstead, the very first of our landscape gardeners. Who else? McKim, one of the world's greatest architects. Who else? Burnham, another of the world's famous architects. I do not recollect who the others were.

Mr. PARSONS. The other members were Senator ROOT, when Secretary of War, and later on President Taft, when he was Secretary of War, and the report of the commission was unanimous.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes. The members of the commission whom I have named were gentlemen who had devoted their lives to the study of the artistic—in sculpture, landscape gardening, and architecture—and they were the men who located the monument to General Grant in the place where it now stands. They were artists; but somebody has said that they had no practical sense. Let us take the "practical" men on the commission.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it not a fact that all the members of the Grant family desired the memorial to be erected where it is?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes, sir. Now, let us look at the practical men on the commission. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], who wants practical men to do these things, and also the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who want practical people to decide these questions, do they know of a man of more practical, more calm, more deliberate judgment than is the gentleman who was Secretary of State under Mr. Roosevelt, ELIHU ROOT?

ELIHU ROOT went as a witness before the committee of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] is chairman, and I took much pleasure in reading the report of his testimony. He said that after considering thoroughly the question as to where the Grant memorial should be erected, after searching the whole city through, all the members of the commission were of the opinion that the only place in Washington where it could be properly placed with justice to the great structure, which is 240 feet long on the base, was just where it is to-day.

I think that the opposition to the site selected for the Grant statue is primarily attributable to the fact that these critics have not stopped to exercise their imaginations long enough to see what the conditions about the memorial will be when all of the contemplated improvements have been perfected.

Mr. TAWNEY. What about the Botanic Garden?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Botanic Garden is a small affair, not comporting at all with the dignity of the United States Government. Everybody knows that it ought to be moved away from there. I have heard it said by prominent Members of the House that it ought to be moved to where it will have a greater opportunity, and that it will be so moved in the not distant future.

Now, I read that an artist—I do not know whether he was an artist, but at any rate he was from Boston——

Mr. MANN. The same thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A gentleman from Boston, after visiting the site chosen for the Grant statue and studying the plans for its contemplated improvement, said that he believed it would be the handsomest square of its size in the world. Apparently the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] thinks that the high fence, the old brick house, and the old glass houses are to stay there, and that Grant is to be hidden behind all that mass of stuff. Not at all. The fences are to be taken down and the buildings to go away. They are not valuable. They ought not to be located there. They are an eyesore, and I wonder they have not long ago been an eyesore to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. The fences will be removed, the buildings taken away, and trees and shrubbery removed and rearranged so that the statue of Grant will be seen by practically every stranger who visits the city of Washington.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In a moment. Some people proposed that the statue of Grant go into the northwestern part of the city; others that it go over in front of Union Station; still others that it be placed west of the Capitol farther out. Ulysses S. Grant was one of the world's great characters, and will be for all time, and his monument ought to occupy a conspicuous place in the capital of the Nation he did so much to save. The plan of the Burnham commission is the memorial to Grant at the base of Capitol Hill, beautifully surrounded, in what the Boston man said will be the handsomest square of its size in the world; in the center of the Mall, midway to the Potomac, the monument to Washington, and on the shore of the river a magnificent memorial to Abraham Lincoln—Grant, Washington, Lincoln—and from the Lincoln monument a beautiful memorial bridge to Arlington, where sleep the Nation's dead.

The conception is magnificent. The foremost artists in America devised it. We are not obliged to follow it, and yet I think that it will be the consensus of opinion, based upon a study of the plans, that nothing so fine has been proposed for any other city in the world. We will not carry it out in our generation, but I believe that ultimately the people of the United States will carry it to completion.

Now I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I was unable to determine from the gentleman's remarks whether he is in favor of this bill or against it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I said at the outset that I was strongly in favor of it.

Mr. SULZER. Well, I am in favor of the bill, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did not so gather from what the gentleman said.

Mr. SULZER. My criticism, however, was upon a former so-called "art commission," that ruthlessly ordered Grant's monument to be set up in the Botanic Garden. That was a mistake worse than a crime. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman whether in removing the fences and the houses, and so forth, in the Botanic Garden they are going to remove the trees of that historic place, with all their associations?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not all of them.

Mr. SULZER. They have removed some.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They have, I think, cut down only one tree of any importance whatever.

Mr. SULZER. They have cut down more than one. They are all historic trees, all important.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They have transplanted them. None of the historic trees have been destroyed.

Mr. SULZER. The Crittenden peace tree was destroyed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; they transplanted that.

Mr. SULZER. Well, if they transplanted it, it will die. It was too old to be dug up and transplanted. Ask Brother SMITH.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, it is now growing.

Mr. HOWARD. It has been living for two years.

Mr. SULZER. I hope it will live—it ought to live—but I doubt it. However, the Grant monument never should be erected there. A great artistic work like the Grant monument should not be put in a hollow; should not be put in a hole; should not be buried out of sight. It ought to be on an elevation; it ought to be where all the people can see it. They will never be able to see it there. They can not see what is there now; they do not know what is going on there; they will never be able to see it as it ought to be seen—to get the proper perspective. In all these artistic matters the great thing is to get the right perspective. If you can not get that, you can not determine the artistic merit of the work. The Grant monument is buried at the foot of Capitol Hill in the old frog pond—out of the way. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the gentleman say "get the prospectus" or "perspective?"

Mr. SULZER. I said "perspective," but I now commend to the gentleman's attention "the prospectus that put it there." [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I understand somewhat better now the attitude of the gentleman from New York. I recall a few years ago the argument which the gentleman made against taking down the fence around the Botanic Garden. Gentlemen who were Members of the House at that time can not forget what he said.

Said the gentleman:

They propose to take down that fence around the Botanical Garden, and the cows and other animals on the streets will go right in there all over those trees and plants.

[Laughter.]

The next day one of the Washington papers had an exquisite cartoon of the gentleman from New York, and showing the fence down and two big cows jumping right through the glass roof of one of the greenhouses. [Laughter.]

That fence is to go down and the Botanical Garden to be taken away, and then, when some of the shrubbery shall have been removed, people with ordinary eyesight will be able to see the Grant monument as far distant as Pennsylvania avenue, about 400 feet. It will be in plain sight of every tourist who comes down Pennsylvania avenue to visit the Capitol.

The Burnham commission has been, I think, very roughly treated—the commission which proposed the new plan for the improvement of Washington. They have been denounced in unmeasured terms as impractical and visionary. Now, let us see what the practical people did. If you remember, this House of Representatives a few years ago voted into the Mall forever a great railroad station to cut that park in two and spoil the view from the Capitol to the river. That was what the practical men asked for; but McKinley and Burnham and other men, who thought Washington deserved something better than that, insisted that there should be a Union Station and that a building should not be permitted to cut that beautiful park in two.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Right there, is it not true that the right of way coming in at Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue was given the Pennsylvania Railroad by Congress, and the very next Congress, when the location for the Union Station was changed, allowed $1,250,000 for the right of way which it gave a couple of years before? Does not the gentleman think that the railroad company had some interest in getting that $1,250,000 for a donation which was given a year or two before, and that had something to do with the change of location of the station?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I do not care to enter into a discussion of that bygone episode further than to say that I voted against the location of that station in that park. I did not do it because I was a "sky-line" architect or anything of that kind, but because I thought it only ordinary justice to future generations of Washingtonians not needlessly to spoil that beautiful park. Nor did I think that a great Baltimore and Ohio station should be put at the foot of Capitol hill on the other side, and I voted against that. The artists, gentlemen like Burnham and McKim and Olmstead, said that two stations would be a fatal mistake. McKinley thought the same thing, and finally the splendid Union Station was decided upon, and there it will stand, an object of beauty, as long as Washington endures. That is the difference between having men who do not understand the artistic and men who do understand the artistic locate a public building. I believe that just as much business can be done amidst pleasant surroundings as can be done amidst those which are not pleasant.

As a Member of the House, if gentlemen come here with something that does not please me, from a practical point of view, I shall vote against it. I shall not support a bill simply because a commission of artists think that it ought to be enacted into law. Nevertheless, when it comes to the location of statues, when it comes to the location of monuments, I shall defer almost every time to the judgment of men like McKim, if another should take his place, and St. Gaudens, if another should take his place, and Burnham, and therefore I shall support this bill. I certainly hope that it will pass. I do not think that so righteous a measure as this put into a law, the necessity for which anyone must see who studies Washington, can make it a precedent for bad legislation at the hands of legislators, like ourselves, who are absolutely independent.

To vote for this bill the gentleman from Kansas suggested would set a bad precedent. But, as the gentleman from Massachusetts said, this bill ought to be passed in the interests of Washington. When another bill comes up and this one is cited as a precedent, I shall not vote for that other bill unless it appeals to my judgment as being a measure worthy of support.

Mr. MACON and Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. MACON. I rise in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman who has just preceded me with great interest; but notwithstanding his very superior argument, the very plausible manner he has of stating the case, he has not succeeded in taking the bad taste out of my mouth that I have for commissions. [Laughter.] This Government is to-day burdened with commissions. We have a Monetary Commission upon our hands that is without limit, so far as appropriations for its support are concerned. The chairman of that commission is empowered under the law that created it to write out any kind of a voucher that he sees fit for any kind of expense that he may designate, and the auditor, or head of the department to which the bill of expenditures is presented, can not question its correctness or propriety in any way; it matters not whether it be for a drove of cattle, for a gold mine, or a gold brick, as my friend on my right suggests. If it is written in a voucher and signed by the chairman, the Auditor of the Treasury Department, under the provisions of the law creating the commission, is bound to allow it without question.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, if commissions of this kind are to prevail in this country, it will not be long before it will be commission ridden and the taxable burdens the people must bear will be unendurable.

We also have a commission that I have heard some little something about, known as the "Immigration Commission." [Laughter.] It has had something to do with the eating up of the finances of this country for the past three years. It has been extravagant in its expenditures to the extent of having employed more than 200 persons to prepare four or five little pamphlets of from 10 to 60 pages each, and, as I said in a previous discussion of its operations, nearly all of the facts in them were taken from other publications developed from other sources by individuals of other employment. This Immigration Commission, so I have read in a newspaper—and I want it understood now that I can produce the publication showing that this vast herd of employees that it has had on its pay roll were selected by friends of the commission for reasons other than their fitness for the positions to which they were appointed. It is stated in the paper that one of them was taken from Mississippi, at a handsome salary, for no other reason than that he sources by individuals or other employment. This Immigration Commission, so I have read in a newspaper—and I want it is related to a member of the commission; that another was taken from the State of New Jersey because he happened to be a constituent of one of the commissioners and desired to spend a few months in Washington at the Government's expense while he was doing it. Another of its employees, so this newspaper article reports, is in a dashing widow, whose only excuse for such a job was that she had a sweetheart in the city of Washington and a certain Senator as a backer.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, the commission business has run mad; it is wildly rioting from one end of the country to the other. It is on an almost constant junket from the time it is appointed until its dying hour. I want the country to know just what the commission business is doing for it. I am satisfied that the majority of this House will not sustain me in my effort to strike down corruption in any form. I am satisfied that the majority of this House will never raise its arm to strike a blow at the hydra-headed monster of graft, no matter how high it lifts its head toward the roof of our governmental structure. Mr. Chairman, when a proposition for economy is brought into the House it meets with little support. But, thank God, there are those on the outside of this building who are listening to what is being said here, and unless I mistake their temper, there will be a rumbling sound because of what they hear that will extend from one ocean to the other, from the Lakes to the Gulf, that will be so overpowering that it will compel Representatives to heed its sound. The commission that is to be created by this bill will be composed of seven members, at a compensation of $500 per year each, and their duties will be to select sites upon which statues are to be erected in the city of Washington. It makes no difference whether one statue is to be erected each year or one in ten years, the salaries of the commission will go on forever at $500 per year; and it will be authorized in the act to employ a secretary, at what amount no one can tell, and such other assistants as it may call to aid it in its work.

Sir, this is just a beginning. Think of it! Employing seven commissioners to do an uncertain work—perhaps there will be nothing for them to do for months or for years—at a salary of $500 apiece, and giving them authority to select a secretary at any salary they may name, and call to their assistance such other aid as they may see fit to help them in their work is, in my judgment, too loose a piece of legislation for this Congress to enact. If it does enact it, it will have no regard whatever for the masses who earn their living by the sweat of their brow.

Ah, sirs, it is easy for us, by our votes, to waste the money of the country. It is easy and popular for us to advocate upon this floor this or that measure, that pleases somebody who happens to be present and interested in its passage or who stands around on the outside in the lobby waiting to call out Members and encourage them with a "God bless you" and a smile to vote for this or that proposition, because of the interest they have in it. In all of this we are apt to forget the boy who is following the plow; we fail to watch the man who is digging deep in the earth with his pick. We fail to consider the interests of the man working in the shop or the welfare of those who stand in bread lines begging for bread and employment in all of the great cities of the country.

I do not ask anything at the hands of the Members of the House for myself, but in behalf of the plain people of the country, in behalf of the toiling masses who support you and me, who furnish us with the clothes we wear and the food that sustains life, in their names I urge this Congress to call a halt and strike down the commission business now and forever.

Sirs, the past history of commissions is enough to cause any legislative body to turn against them. If a monument is to be erected in this city, there will always be some one interested in it. There will always be enough citizens in favor of it who will, as an act of love, find a place to locate it and select a desirable design. But, sirs, to create a commission of seven persons in this metallic way, and have them select a site for a monument to some one whom they never knew, whose memory they do not even revere, is, in my judgment, wrong. When I am called to my final rest and a monument is to be erected over my humble tomb, I want those who love me to select the place where I shall rest and the kind of monument to be placed over my grave.

But, sirs, by this bill we proposed to create a commission at the expense of the American people, whose members will, in a metallic way, select the place for the monument of some departed citizen who has distinguished himself in life, but for whom the commission cares nothing, and pay them $500 a year, whether employed or not. Mr. Chairman, this may be right. I am not here to say that Members who vote for this proposition do not believe it is right, but if they do, the great Creator made them different to myself. They may be as conscientious as I am, but I insist that, in my humble judgment, they forget the condition of those they leave behind them; they forget the conditions of the districts that they represent, that need their attention and need every dollar of money that can possibly be appropriated for the improvement of the internal affairs of the country.

I can not bring myself to vote to pay thousands and thousands of dollars each year to commissioners to be squandered while every Member of this House has some navigable stream in his district that is fairly crying out for help, while many Members have harbors that are fairly clamoring for improvement, beautiful cities that need nice public buildings in which to conduct the affairs of the Government. Yet, sirs, with these conditions upon us, we are called upon to vote to establish commissions of this sort to waste the people's money, instead of erecting public buildings, instead of improving our rivers so we can float our commerce to the sea, instead of dredging our harbors so that vessels can come in and take our commerce across the wide oceans to all ports of the world.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I would like to cast my vote for anything that will improve the artistic beauty of the city of Washington. It is the capital of a great Nation, and we should not be niggardly in appropriations which will tend to beautify it and make it more attractive to all the people in this country. I am prompted to say a few words on this occasion by the suggestion made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the Chairman of the Library Committee. He referred to the award made in the case of the Barry statue, saying that he was on that committee, and that with reference to the award the people were divided into two hostile camps.

Mr. Chairman, I can not—notwithstanding my respect for the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I do respect him as a scholar, a statesman, a man of culture, refinement, and honor—let that remark pass without correcting it by saying that, with reference to the award in the Barry statue matter, the people are not divided into two hostile camps.

Mr. McCALL. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from New York that I was speaking broadly, and possibly rhetorically, when I made that statement.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I am glad that the gentleman did not intend to give it the meaning which I understood; and since the question has come up, I wish to state the facts with reference to the Barry statue award and its bearing upon the art commission which acted in the matter and made the recommendation which it did. I trust you will bear with me, for I am very much interested in this question, because I was the one who introduced the bill in three Congresses before it was finally passed; and it was passed largely because there were several hundred thousand citizens of this country back of it in the various districts who appealed to their Representatives in Congress to support the bill. Finally it was enacted into law providing for an appropriation of $50,000 to erect a monument to the honor and memory of John Barry in the city of Washington.

The question then came up as to the location of the statue, the selection of a model and a sculptor. The commission created by the act consisted of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the chairman of the Committee on the Library in the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library in the House, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

We had not much difficulty in locating the site for the statue, which was agreed upon as the center of the west side of Franklin Square. We were very much interested in the selection of a model. We had ideas of what the statue should represent. We were proud that we had secured the appropriation, and were proud that a monument was to be erected to the memory of "Fighting Jack Barry" in the city of Washington. Statues have been erected to Lafayette, Rochambeau, Steuben, and Kosciuzko, and the people of Irish birth and descent in this country thought it was only fair and reasonable that a statue should be erected to the honor and memory of one of their countrymen who rendered signal and valuable service to the colonies in the time of their dire distress. And after much consideration Barry was selected as the character to whom should be accorded this signal honor.

We were told by the commission that the representatives of the various organizations in this country, through whose influence and activity the appropriation was made, would be permitted to view the models which were submitted for consideration, examine them, and vote or express their choice, and submit their views to the commission.

I do not say that we were told that our recommendations or suggestions would be final or conclusive, but we were invited to express our choice, and we did think that our wishes would be given some consideration by the commission which was to make the selection. In accordance with such invitation or permission the representatives of various organizations which were interested in the Barry statue proposition met and examined the various models submitted. The names of the artists who submitted the models were not given. They simply appeared on exhibition by numbers. I was invited to take part with the others and vote on the selections—I suppose because I got the bill through the House and was very much interested in the matter. Each one of us expressed his first, second, and third choice, in writing, and sent it to the commission. We did not all agree as to first choice, or the second, but we all did agree practically on two of the models, which we believed embodied the idea of what a Barry statue should represent.

We all saw and examined the model submitted by Andrew O'Connor, of Paris, but it impressed each one of us as so inappropriate and so radically objectionable to our conception of what a Barry statue should be that we did not seriously consider it. It seemed to us impossible, and we did not think that any commission, either of artists or laymen, could possibly consider it with any favor.

In submitting my own letter expressing my choice as to the models I said:

> After viewing the models for the Barry statue this morning I wish to express as my first choice No. 6. My second choice is No. 5. I have no third choice, except it be the model without a number, with the harp, but with the harp removed.
> This is intended to be an American and not an Irish statue. It is true that Barry was born in Ireland and always loved his native country, but he left it when about 14 years of age, came to America, where he lived until his death. He was intensely American and patriotic, and his statue should, as far as possible, express that idea.

That short note expressed my opinion then and now of what the statue to Barry should embody. When the report of the commission was published, we learned that the model of Andrew O'Connor was placed first on the list, and without protest he would be awarded the contract. Immediately a storm of protest arose in this country from one end to the other. Organizations through whose activity and influence the Barry bill was enacted into law protested and appealed to the commission not to accept the Andrew O'Connor model, and not to erect in the city of Washington a statue to Barry in any respect like the model submitted by him. Barry, as I said, was born in Ireland, but left his native country when about 14 years of age, settled in Philadelphia, and lived there until his death in about 1803.

He fought during the seven or eight years of the Revolution on land and sea, and fought the last battle of that war after peace was declared; but as General Jackson fought the battle of New Orleans after peace was declared, Barry was at sea and had no notice of the fact that the war of the Revolution was over and that the colonies were free. He was the ranking officer of the American Navy during the last three years of the Revolution; and in 1796, when President Washington's administration created the new navy, the nucleus of our present splendid naval establishment, Barry was made the ranking officer of that navy and held that position until his death. If he did anything to distinguish himself—and I think he rendered much distinguished and patriotic service—if he did anything, I say, to entitle him to a monument in the capital city of the United States and at the hands of the Congress, with an appropriation from the Federal Treasury, it was as a naval officer of the United States; and we insist that the statue erected to his memory should be strictly American—something like the statues erected to Lafayette and Rochambeau—and, if representing history at all, it should be American and not Irish history.

Now, what kind of a model was approved by the commission of fine arts which was called in to advise the legally constituted commission? First, it represented a fountain with a pool of water around it, with a long frieze of bold-relief figures, starting in with the history of Ireland when the people were naked or clothed in skins. It undertook to represent various events and misfortunes in the history of the Irish people, from the baptism of the King of Tara by St. Patrick down to the present time—Brian Boru at the battle of Clontarf, the landing of Strongbow in Ireland, the driving of the native people toward the west, their misfortunes and their miseries; and finally it represented various Irish immigrants, men and women, landing at Castle Garden absolutely nude. [Laughter.]

The Irish people are not ashamed of their history or of its reproduction in proper form and in its proper relations. They have high ideals with reference to some things. They do not entertain the views of the Latin Quarter of Paris. They do not admire nude statuary anywhere; but when their own mothers and grandmothers were represented in this model at Castle Garden as absolutely nude they objected to it, and they were justified in doing so. The controversy over this matter got into the press, and they were called prudes and ignoramuses, because they did not like the model submitted by Andrew O'Connor.

The idea or conception of Mr. Andrew O'Connor, which was partially embodied in the frieze and the historical groups, was carried out in the pedestrian figure which it was intended should stand in front of the frieze and fountain. That represented Barry, not as a naval officer of the United States, but as a swaggering Bowery tough on a rolling deck. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we objected to that. We said we did not want a history of Ireland represented on a Barry statue in the city of Washington; that we did want an American statue—a statue representing the patriotic and brilliant service of an American naval officer to the Colonies when they were in need of strong arms and stout hearts.

Mr. Chairman, that matter has been held up from that time to this. I have stated these facts as bearing on the lack of ability, taste, and capacity in the commission of artists who were called in to advise the regular legalized committee in this matter. That model and the artist who made it, as I am informed (and if I am not correct I want the gentleman from Massachusetts to tell me), was recommended by an artists' commission in the city of Washington.

They seemed to have no conception of what the people back of the Barry statue proposition wanted, and absolutely ignored the advice and suggestions given them by the people who are interested in the statue and through whose efforts it was made possible. I do not say but that those various figures of the Andrew O'Connor model were well executed. I do not say but that the technical work was good, for I have no knowledge on that subject. But the conception and idea were all wrong, and the better the work would be done the more offensive it would be.

Mr. PARSONS. What was the name of the sculptor?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Andrew O'Connor, of Paris.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The model to which the gentleman has referred is the one selected by what was known as the council of fine arts, which was created by executive order, was it not?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I understood it that way, and that is why I have not much faith in that commission of fine arts or in a commission of artists which would be appointed. In this particular case they may have some ideas of art, but they certainly lacked common sense and sound judgment. They seemed to have no conception of what was proper and what would represent the ideals and conceptions of what the people interested in the Barry statue wish to have embodied in it.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] was a member of the commission, but he never attended the meetings of that commission, as I am informed. I do not think he did. I think he left it almost entirely to the commission of fine arts, and that is what they produced in this particular case. My own experience with reference to the commission of fine arts is very unsatisfactory, and that is all the experience I had as to their work or the results of their work. My experience leads me to say that men of judgment, common sense, and broad patriotic conceptions should be selected, and if they have technical and artistic ability, so much the better. My experience leads me to say that they are a failure, not only in that but in the Agricultural building and other things. [Applause.]

One thing more which I forgot, one of the points I want to make. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that the people are divided into two hostile camps as to the award made in the Barry statue matter. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and I want you gentlemen to listen to this, that there is not a man, woman, or child, in my judgment, of Irish extraction or of Irish ideals, from one end to the other in this country, who is not selfishly interested, who favors the model submitted by the commission of artists; not one. A great many of our people have given the matter no consideration or attention whatever; but the people who are interested—the people who acted and appealed to their Representatives in Congress for the passage of the Barry bill—are all on one side. They are all against the model approved by this fine arts commission, and I challenge contradiction of this statement on the floor of this House or elsewhere.

I put this statement into the RECORD, where it will remain, and I am willing to stand by it, that practically all the people in this country who are interested at all in the Barry statue proposition and who caused the appropriation to be made, and were back of it until the bill was enacted into law, are strongly and abidingly opposed to this model approved by the fine arts commission.

If we were disposed to insist on a statue representing the harp and the banner of Ireland, with historical events of which we may be proud, on a monument to Barry in a public park in this city of Washington, erected at the national expense, the commission would be justified in rejecting our request, and, I think, in rebuking us for our presumption. But on the contrary we are the ones who insist that the Barry statue shall not represent Irish history or include Irish figures, but that it shall be a strictly American statue representing Barry as an American naval officer, as large, graceful, and beautiful as the appropriation will permit.

The commission has power. It can do as it likes. But if a statue of Barry like the first model, or even the second model, of Andrew O'Connor is erected it will be a perpetual insult to the people in this country of Irish birth, extraction, and ideals. They will continue to resent it. In my judgment they will again appeal to Congress for a site, at all events, on which they will, by their own contributions, erect a beautiful and appropriate monument to the memory of John Barry as a brilliant, successful, and patriotic American naval officer. [Applause.]

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT].

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think the discussion of this bill has taken a wider range than the innocent character of the bill would justify. As a matter of fact, art commissions have done great work, notwithstanding the tempestuous remarks of my colleague from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] in regard to the Barry statue. They have done wonderful work in New York, where their power is very much greater than is proposed to be conferred upon this commission in this bill.

They not only have advisory powers relative to monuments to be erected, but they are called into consultation by the mayor of the city of New York in regard to the style and character of bridges. The improvement in the general architectural features of New York has been so great that I believe there is not a dissenting voice in New York City that it was one of the most admirable things the legislature of the State of New York ever did for the city. The commission has saved us money and has assisted us in getting proper monuments and proper buildings in the city of New York. There is not any foreign city of importance that has not an art commission of a similar character to this. All this talk as to an usurpation of the powers of Congress seems to me to be absurd to the extreme. The commission will not have the power to determine what statues, what architectural structures, or what monuments we authorize. It will only have the power, when Congress, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. OLCOTT (continuing). Decides to appropriate a certain amount of money for a monument, to give the benefit of their views and judgment to the President of the United States as to where these monuments shall be placed and what character of monument shall be erected.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the art commission of New York receive any compensation?

Mr. OLCOTT. The art commission of the city of New York does not receive any compensation; I will acknowledge that.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman has traveled abroad a good deal and visited foreign capitals and, knowing as I do he is of an artistic turn of mind, he knows, no doubt, the character of statutes erected in foreign cities. Now, can the gentleman say whether or not the statues in the city of Washington compare favorably with those of the capitals of foreign countries?

Mr. OLCOTT. Just as an American citizen I am always for the United States, and I will therefore say they are superior; but they can be made better, and there will be fewer criticisms to be passed on those that are now here if we have the best talent possible to assist us in the matter.

Mr. TAWNEY. But they are good enough as long as they are better than any others in foreign countries.

Mr. OLCOTT. But I will answer the gentleman further. The art commissions in all of these foreign capitals are comparatively of recent creation. The cities on the other side are much older than we are, and most of the monuments that justify my saying that the Washington ones are better were erected before the creation of those commissions.

This commission will cost little. The objection to it on the ground that it usurps the power of Congress seems to me to fall by the mere statement of it, and therefore I hope most earnestly, in the interest of doing what everyone in this House of Representatives wants to do, what every citizen of the United States wishes to have us do—make the city of Washington the most beautiful in the world—we will form this commission, so that Washington will be made still more beautiful than it is now. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. May I be allowed to ask my colleague a question?

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand my colleague to be in favor of this bill. I would like to have some information, which I doubtless missed by being out of the Chamber at the beginning of this debate. It appears that $10,000 a year is to be appropriated for the expenses of this commission, and it also appears that seven artists are to be paid $500 a year apiece and their expenses. That makes $3,500 for their salary, and that leaves a balance of $6,500, as I understand it. Now, will the gentleman inform me, is this balance to be paid the secretary, or what is the purpose of appropriating that amount?

Mr. OLCOTT. I will only say to my colleague from New York that the appropriation is not to exceed $10,000 a year allowed under this bill. That is the limit of appropriation. You can very easily imagine, if we should pass a bill for the erection of several monuments, it might be necessary for the commission to meet several times in Washington, and you can see the expense might reach the amount specified in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLCOTT. I still yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think the Government could secure the services of seven artists of high reputation free, in the same way we secured them in New York for our municipal arts commission?

Mr. OLCOTT. Personally I believe they could; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words regarding this bill, because I am very much interested in it and very much interested in fine art. There are gentlemen from New York on both sides of this House who are entirely familiar with the great and good work performed by the art commission of that city. I personally have had extensive experience with the work of that commission, and have found it invaluable. Many times, when it was impossible for a number of men interested in works of art to come to any decision, the art commission was called in, and rendered very valuable service. The question has just been asked by a gentleman from New York on the other side of the House whether artists and sculptors could not be had to serve on such a commission in the city of Washington without compensation, as is done in the city of New York. The members of the commission in New York are all citizens and residents of New York. The members of such a commission to serve in Washington will doubtless have to come from various parts of the country, and the $500 suggested in this bill will simply be as a retainer to those gentlemen to render their valuable services to the Government and to Washington. There is not a city in this country that needs an art commission more than does Washington. The commission in New York has had not alone to consider the merit and location of works of art, of monuments, of statues, of bridges, and arches, but the various artistic works that were proposed to be set up in the city of New York.

The question has been asked, Are the statues and works of art in Washington equal to those in any other country? I would say, measurably, they are. There are some of the most striking examples to the contrary, however. I refer to one especially on Pennsylvania avenue, near Seventh street—a fountain presented by Mr. Cogswell. That should have no place in this city. It is a monstrosity and unworthy of the city. I think, Mr. Chairman, that such a commission would be able to relieve from embarrassment those charged with responsibility very many times by the suggestions which they might make, and which we would all recognize as being most valuable to the city. The New York art commission is one of the most valuable commissions the city has ever received from the legislature, and there are other committees and commissions that might very well and properly be dispensed with in the city of New York, rather than the art commission, whose services have been recognized by all those interested in the city government as most desirable and most valuable.

Mr. PARSONS. I will ask the gentleman if his relations with the art commission of New York were not at a time when he was park commissioner?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. The services that I speak of rendered by that commission were when I was park commissioner of the city of New York, and where I received the valuable and cheerful assistance of the commission. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill one or two questions in regard to its language. While the bill at present asks an appropriation of $10,000, is not it such an authorization as would warrant the appropriation of any sum to be made by a subsequent Congress?

Mr. McCALL. I think not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, if the gentleman will look at the language he will see that the President is authorized to appoint this commission:

> And said commission shall have a secretary and such other assistants as the President may authorize.

Well, now, is not that sufficiently broad to create a very large clerical force, and would not the language authorize the appropriation of large sums for the payment of their salaries in subsequent Congresses?

Mr. McCALL. But the gentleman must construe the whole act together, and he must be confined to the expenditures authorized by the act.

Mr. SHERLEY. But if you will read the second clause, it says:

> That to meet the expenditures made necessary by this act the expenditure of $10,000 a year, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized.

Mr. McCALL. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, that is, in fact, an authorization of $10,000, but it is not a limitation against a larger authorization to meet the purposes of this act, if Congress should see fit to make such larger expenditure.

Mr. McCALL. Well, the President would have no authority to go beyond the authorization of the act, amounting to $10,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably the President could not expend any money not appropriated.

Mr. McCALL. Now, then, if you come into the House with an appropriation bill that appropriates more than $10,000, the point of order would be made that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. SHERLEY. The point of order would not lie. That is the point to which I am calling the attention of the gentleman.

I have no doubt that he intended that the maximum sum which might ever be authorized was $10,000, but the bill as now drawn would authorize in an appropriation bill an item carrying any sum, and a point of order would not lie to such item.

Now, there is one other matter I would like to ask the gentleman about. That is, why does he require that the appointment of these men shall be by and with the advice and consent of the Senate?

Mr. McCALL. Because that, I think, is the usual way to appoint officers of the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. No. It is the usual way as to officers of very high rank or position, but a great many appointments are made without the advice and consent of the Senate; and does not the gentleman think that it would be better to leave the appointment of them to the President direct?

Mr. McCALL. I do not think that it is a matter of any particular consequence one way or the other. If the gentleman would prefer an amendment on that point, it would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest, without meaning to cast any reflection anywhere, that you would be more likely to get men of the very highest order of talent, without regard to other considerations, if the appointment was vested solely in the President, without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. McCALL. I think that where the compensation of men is chiefly in honor and dignity, it would rather enhance the dignity of the office to have them appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. That is a mere matter of taste.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman secured the passage of a resolution on Monday for the appointment of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. Has not the gentleman found that that method is quite satisfactory, where men are neither appointed by the President nor confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. McCALL. Inasmuch as under that system they are able to get the services of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I would say that it worked well in that case.

Mr. MANN. They do not get the services of "the gentleman from Illinois" under that system. "The gentleman from Illinois" is appointed a member of the Board of Regents by the Speaker.

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. But they do get the assistance of the very best men in this country as members of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, not Members of Congress, and there has never been a commission of the Government which had a higher class of men than those appointed by joint resolution of Congress.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. McCALL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A question suggested by what the gentleman from Illinois just said. Would not the gentleman from Massachusetts be willing to accept this amendment, to strike out, beginning with the word "at," in line 21, all down to and including "and," in the next line, so that it will read:

> and the members of the commission shall each be paid actual expenses—

Leaving out the $500 a year?

We get splendid men for Regents of the Smithsonian, and I believe we can get the very best talent in the United States on this commission without paying its members $500 a year each.

Mr. McCALL. I have no objection whatever to striking that out. It occurred to me that when men were rendering services under an act of Congress it would be better to pay them something, and then they would feel that they were paid for what they did and would render the service more as a matter of contract. But it is practically immaterial to me. I should be entirely willing to strike that out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There can not be any question that the selection of these men by the President of the United States, in recognition of their fitness for this position, will be a sufficient inducement to secure men of the highest talent and standing.

Mr. McCALL. I will be content if the gentleman will offer that as an amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will offer it as an amendment.

Mr. McCALL. Then, I suggest to the gentleman that the next section be amended to meet the point of the gentleman from Kentucky. It does not impress me as especially important, except that I always think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is apt to have some foundation for any suggestion that he makes upon a legal question. I suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he add a proviso to limit the total expenditure to $6,000, if we strike out the salaries.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he sees any necessity at all for section 2?

Mr. MANN. There is a necessity for a limitation.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand, and there is always a limitation, and that is the amount that may be appropriated for the service.

Mr. McCALL. Then there would be no limitation whatever. There would be an expenditure authorized—for instance, the traveling expenses of the commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman another question. What is the necessity of having a secretary for this commission? There is not an art commission in existence in any of the States or municipalities of the Union that has an organization of that kind.

Mr. McCALL. I question whether the gentleman is correct in that statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the necessity for a secretary?

Mr. McCALL. In my opening statement to the committee I tried to make clear my idea of what a secretary would do. It would result in keeping an office open in Washington, in the gradual accumulation of artistic material, with statistics about different statues and works of art in the world.

Mr. TAWNEY. Which the President would be authorized to appoint. Of course it would result in maintaining a large organization here in the city of Washington.

Mr. McCALL. I think not, if there is a limitation.

Mr. TAWNEY. So far as the work of the commission is concerned, there is absolutely no necessity for a secretary, and there is no necessity for a building or for rooms in a building here in the city of Washington.

Mr. McCALL. I think there should be a secretary and there should be rooms. I think that we could get a great benefit by having some trained man, who would have this office and who would keep the various statistics about art, where we could get at them when the members of the commission were not here.

Mr. TAWNEY. If that is the idea of the gentleman, then I am more strongly opposed to this bill than ever.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the way to make certain the limiting of the expenditures to $10,000 would be to amend the second section, so that it would read:

That to meet the expenses made necessary by this act an expenditure of not exceeding $10,000 a year is hereby authorized.

Congress would not need to appropriate that amount, but it could not appropriate more than that amount.

Mr. McCALL. I think that would make it entirely clear. If the bill is amended and the salaries are stricken out, that $10,000 should be changed, perhaps, to $6,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. For my own part, I see no objection to the very moderate salary named in the bill. I believe that the giving of a salary of that size would place the recipient under a direct obligation and would insure his prompt response to any call on the part of the Government, and certainly it could not be objected to seriously as being a large expenditure.

Mr. McCALL. That was my idea in putting it in, and with regard to the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, they are sort of trustees, like the trustees of colleges. I do not think it takes much of the time of the Regents. They would not have to come to Washington five or six times a year and pass upon the merits of particular artistic propositions. They are sort of guardians of a great trust, and they oversee the officers who administer that trust and undoubtedly make very valuable suggestions.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman really think that if Mr. Glenn Brown was appointed secretary to this art commission he would really need any of the members to ever come to Washington?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Is not he all sufficient in himself to dispose of these matters?

Mr. McCALL. I have not the honor of a very intimate acquaintance with Mr. Glenn Brown.

Mr. MANN. Well, if this bill passes and if the gentleman remains the chairman of this committee he will form a closer acquaintance.

Mr. McCALL. If there were a commission having an honorarium of four or five hundred dollars a year, I think they would feel it their duty to come here and do the work they are paid to do. It is of no consequence at all so far as the commission is concerned. It seems to me there is a principle involved, and I am inclined to think that if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] were not a Member of this House and was a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution and should receive a salary of $500 he would render very conscientious service.

Mr. TAWNEY. I may say now that most conscientious services are rendered by such men as ex-Senator Henderson and other gentlemen, including Alexander Graham Bell, who gives a great deal of his attention to the Smithsonian work without a salary, and I doubt whether it would be possible to employ men in the city of Washington of equal capacity and knowledge by paying salaries.

Mr. McCALL. I am not reflecting at all on the gentleman or his colleagues. I was simply speaking of the principle involved in the payment of small salaries. I do not think that is of great importance. I do not want the bill to fail on account of the payment of these small salaries. I should be willing to have the provision stricken out of the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire again to suggest to the gentleman a change in regard to the method of appointment. It is a little bit embarrassing to discuss that phase of it, but I believe you will have less complication, and perhaps a commission more in accord with the purpose of this act, if the appointments are made solely by the President of the United States.

Mr. McCALL. That is a matter of taste upon which I should be willing to yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is more than a matter of taste; you eliminate any question of geographical and political bias.

Mr. McCALL. In the one case they are high constitutional officers, and in the other case they are in a subordinate rôle. I am willing to strike out that provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the term of service of the members of this commission under this bill?

Mr. McCALL. There is no term.

Mr. MANN. They could not be removed.

Mr. SHERLEY. The question of the gentleman from New York raises an interesting question, and that is whether any of these men could be removed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the tenure of the members of this commission? The gentleman is a constitutional lawyer.

Mr. McCALL. I am not a constitutional lawyer; but there is no tenure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are we never to have a chance? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCALL. In order to give the gentleman from New York a chance, we can fix a tenure of a few years. There is no tenure prescribed in the bill; it would be, I suppose, during good behavior.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman knows that supposition does not operate as a tenure.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think it is at the will of the appointing power.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not say so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; it does not say so, but I think that would be the effect of it. I think, Mr. Chairman, it would be a good plan to read the first section of this bill, and then these suggestions could come in as amendments.

Mr. SHERLEY. Prior to legislating we should desire to have some information. I presume that the gentleman from Indiana will acquiesce in that view point. I was interrogating the author of the bill to obtain information, and I would like to know whether he considers this tenure limited or unlimited?

Mr. McCALL. I said there was no limitation on the tenure. If the gentleman thinks that we should limit it, we might make it four years, and that would give the gentleman from New York an opportunity.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose some one was nominated a member of the commission and his views should get out of date or out of style—and there are men who have some ideas of art that are popular for a while and soon pass out—is he to be fastened forever upon all the work authorized by Congress for the purpose of unifying and beautifying this city? I say that, because it seems, from the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL], that an eminent aggregation of gentlemen, constituting what was known as the Council of Fine Arts, has attempted to perpetrate on the country a statue to the memory of John Barry that would be considered preposterous by any man at all familiar with the history of the country. Artistic ideas of that kind should not be indefinitely fastened upon the people of the country by a commission like this.

Mr. McCALL. If I may say a word on that point, in reference to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL], that was called out by a statement by myself, that the country was apparently divided into two hostile camps upon the artistic questions raised in connection with the Barry monument, I would like to correct the remark which called out the observations of the gentleman's colleague, and say that the country is divided into one hostile camp. I do not desire to say much about the Barry statue, being a member of the commission having the august duty of deciding upon the artist. But I would say this, that I understand the commission had a meeting, at which I was not present, and got the advice of somebody—I do not think it was the Council of Fine Arts—got the advice of somebody as to the artistic value of a certain model—and they were advised by whoever they consulted that the model presented by Andrew O'Connor was artistically the best model. Andrew O'Connor is the man who made the brilliant statue of Gen. Lew Wallace, in Statuary Hall, and I am informed that the French Government has asked for a copy of his Barry model for the Luxemburg. It is, I suppose, beyond question of great artistic excellence, but the commission did not decide to take it because there are other points to be considered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am thoroughly familiar with it——

Mr. McCALL. And the gentleman knows there was a controversy——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; not over the æsthetic and artistic value of the statue, but on the ground that character and the achievements of General Barry were not properly represented and commemorated.

Mr. McCALL. Let me suggest further to the gentleman, if he will permit me, that this advice was made under the present system. It was a sort of unauthorized, unofficial advice. Now, would it not be better to have an established legal authorized tribunal; would not their advice perhaps be more upon a sense of their responsibility as public officers than if they were simply called in and asked what they thought of this model or that one?

Mr. SHERLEY. Going back to the present bill we are discussing, I would like to ask the gentleman if any member of this commission should die, is there any provision in the bill authorizing the appointment of a successor?

Mr. McCALL. I imagine the President would have the right to appoint a successor.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no provision in the bill to that effect. I am not suggesting these things captiously, but seriously. It seems to me there ought to be something of that kind in the bill.

Mr. McCALL. Does the gentleman remember what the provision is in regard to the other commissions established by law?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not remember.

Mr. McCALL. Did not they have general tenure for a certain number of years?

Mr. TAWNEY. For a certain object.

Mr. McCALL. For a certain number of years.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman kindly permit me to call his attention to the fact that under this bill an appointment could only be made once; that no vacancy could ever be filled?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have just suggested that to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I thought there ought to be a provision not only defining the tenure, but providing for the filling of vacancies, caused either by removal, death, or resignation.

Mr. McCALL. Well, if the gentleman will prepare an amendment covering that point——

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I should be very glad to do so if the gentleman desires, but knowing the ability of the gentleman, I believe he can easily draft such an amendment and I submit the bill in its present form is imperfect.

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman has a number of other amendments which he is engaged in drafting, but I think it could well be provided that there should be a commission composed of seven artists of repute to be known as a "commission of fine arts," whose term of office shall be four years, and that such commission shall be appointed by the President, and any vacancy at any time occurring shall be filled by appointment by the President. Would that cover what the gentleman had in mind?

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit a suggestion? In view of these proposed changes and necessary changes, I would suggest to the gentleman in charge that he would move to rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the committee with instructions to revise and report it at a late date.

Mr. McCALL. Well, the chairman would hardly care to take that responsibility. This is a case of the "Greeks bearing gifts." The gentleman is not friendly to this bill in any way, and it is very simple to make these amendments on the floor now.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am in favor of the purpose of the bill, and my suggestions have been made in good faith. Now, the suggestion in answer to my inquiry seems to cover all points but one, and that is whether the President should be given power of removal. My own judgment is he ought to be given the absolute power of removal and of filling vacancies in case of such removal.

Mr. McCALL. I think with a term of four years that no new styles of art would come in.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I am not speaking of it on that basis. It is easily supposable that an appointment might be made that would prove very unfortunate, and if you are going to put the responsibility of appointment on the President, give him also power of removal.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in order to test the sense of the committee I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield for that purpose?

Mr. SHERLEY. For the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to move that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on the Library?

The CHAIRMAN. That motion will be in order when general debate shall have been concluded.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not know but it could be done at this time, and that we could go on with the consideration of other bills the Committee on the Library may have.

Mr. AUSTIN. I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. But, Mr. Chairman, I have not yielded for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman from Kentucky will use his time in general debate in enlightening the House, we will then have an opportunity of drafting the amendments which he has suggested.

Mr. SHERLEY. The "gentleman from Kentucky" is perfectly willing to cease debate, but it hardly comes with grace from the gentleman, when very palpable omissions have been suggested; and I was waiting until the gentleman from Massachusetts should answer these questions.

Mr. McCALL. Nothing ungracious was intended toward the gentleman. The clerical work of drafting these amendments would require two or three minutes, perhaps, and if the gentleman would occupy that time in enlightening the House, we would prepare them in accordance with his suggestion.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I have never spoken against time, I must decline to do so now, and I will yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be read for amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to be recognized, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the general purpose of this bill to create a commission of fine arts, convinced from my knowledge of officials here in Washington and aware of the opportunity that they seem to have had to be educated to artistic ideals, that one is very necessary in this city. I would hesitate to make this statement if it were not that the chairman of the Committee on the Library himself reported this bill. I understand that it has been the practice when bills are reported from that committee to provide for commissions to superintend the erection of the various monuments to include in the commission the chairman of the Committee on the Library of one or both Houses. Since the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House seems to believe that this expert information is necessary for him, it can not be charged that anybody else has unfairly aspersed his knowledge on such questions. I believe such a commission should have some real power, rather than the indefinite and limited authority here proposed. It has no real power under this bill. If it be a competent commission, it should have complete control of the placing of monuments in the city of Washington; and it would be desirable if such a commission should devote itself to the study of a plan along which the city of Washington should be improved and beautified. I have not much sympathy with the limitation placed upon the expenses of such a commission. I do not sympathize with the suggestion that this commission be paid their actual expenses for days spent in Washington or in coming to or going from the city to attend meetings of the commission. A commission that is worth having is worth being paid adequate compensation; and I would very much prefer fixing some reasonable, decent compensation for the members of such a commission, so as to obtain from them the very best that they might be capable of giving to the Government.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, in the line of the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the members of the commission should have a definite tenure of office. Provision should be made for filling vacancies which occur either by death, resignation, or removal. Some measure should be provided for eliminating members of the commission, although if the tenure were restricted to four years, perhaps it would not be necessary to confer the power of removal on any person. I am inclined to believe that it is desirable to have this commission confirmed by the Senate. Even some of our Presidents have not been noted for their peculiarly ideal artistic taste, and their opinion of who might or might not be competent men to serve upon such a commission might not meet with the commendation of others who would be competent to judge. It seems to me that no more appropriate body could be selected to pass upon who are or who are not competent artists than the Senate of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other suggestion which I wish to make to the chairman of the committee, and that is he shall not insist upon authorizing the President to determine what assistants this commission shall have. That should be left to the judgment of Congress. I favor also the removal of the limitation upon the amount that can be appropriated for the commission. Let the commission submit to Congress estimates of the assistants actually required, and let Congress give it the help it should have. It is a somewhat extraordinary provision to have the President determine how many assistants and what clerks any particular commission should have.

Mr. McCALL. We are putting in the limitation in conformity with the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am going to vote against the limitation. If Congress believes in the creation of this art commission it should be charged with the duty of appropriating the proper amount for its uses. If we can not trust Congress to appropriate for this art commission, we should give up making appropriations.

I am not afraid that Congress is going to become unduly extravagant in providing for this commission. It is hardly fair to legislate in this way so as to prevent some other House exercising what it believes to be its best judgment as to the amount of money such a commission should have. If we are to have an art commission, let us have one that amounts to something, that can do some good work. If we have one that is so crippled that it will be of no value, it would be better not to authorize it at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this bill is illustrative of the necessity or the desirability of appointing a commission of legislative experts for the purpose of drawing bills.

Mr. SHEPLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that I have such a provision now pending before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL], who so ably presides over the Committee on the Library and who is an ornament to the Committee on Ways and Means, is the author of this bill or not; but if he drew it, or whoever drew it, it does not accomplish the purpose in mind.

Attention has already been called to the fact that under this bill there could be only one set of appointments made. The usual form of law creating a commission is that there is hereby created a commission consisting of so many members, to be appointed in such and such a manner. That would be authority for the filling of the vacancies, but all this bill does is to give authority in the first instance for the appointment of seven artists of repute. There is no authority to fill any vacancy, because there would be no vacancies. If any of them died, the remaining members would exercise the authority of the commission until there was only one left, unless Congress should intervene.

But I fear there is another defect in the bill, which the gentleman has not noticed, and to which attention certainly has not yet been called.

The bill says the commission shall have a secretary and such other assistants as the President may authorize. Whoever has in mind the securing of the position of secretary has failed to give the secretary any pay or salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He does not want any.

Mr. MANN. And under the provisions of this bill, if enacted into law, there could be no salary given to the secretary. Even a proposition in the Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill to appropriate for a secretary would be subject to a point of order. The commission is not given authority to authorize any pay to the secretary. The commission is not given authority to fix the salary of a secretary. The President is not given authority to give a salary to a secretary, and the whole purpose of Mr. Glenn Brown in this proposition would fail, if his purpose is to secure the salary of a secretary; but if his purpose is to secure extravagant appropriations for new works of art in Washington he might secure that. I suppose when the gentleman proposes to provide an expenditure of $10,000 a year, he does not anticipate that the traveling expenses of the commission would amount to that, and yet outside of $3,500 salary the remaining $6,500 under the gentleman's bill would have to be spent for traveling expenses. There is no authorization in the bill to rent quarters, there is no authorization in the bill to pay anybody any money. No place is provided for the commissioners to meet in Washington. Of course they might meet in some committee room. They might meet in the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; always.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill creates the office of secretary to the commission, and then appropriates $10,000 to pay the expenses of the commission. Does not that carry authority on the part of the commission to pay the secretary?

Mr. MANN. Most certainly not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Why not? It is to be made up of seven commissioners and a secretary, and salaries and expenses are to be paid.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman might as well claim that they could pay the commissioners more than $500 a year each.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We fix the salaries of the commissioners, but we do not fix the salary of the secretary.

Mr. MANN. We do not only not fix it, but we do not authorize any salary for the secretary.

Mr. TAWNEY. None at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Expenses are authorized, and we say there shall be a secretary for the commission, and that is a part of the expenses of the commission, and we appropriate $10,000 to cover the expenses. I do not think there is any question about the right to pay the secretary.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman were in the chair instead of on the floor, and were receiving the advice of a parliamentarian probably of equal strength to the gentleman himself, and the gentleman from Indiana himself is a great parliamentarian, he would not think of holding that the authority to create an office was authority to pay a salary not authorized by law.

Now, here is the creation of a secretary and the creation of a commission, with the salary of the commission fixed. The reasoning is that Congress, having created two offices and having provided a salary for one, did not intend that there should be a salary for the other at all. And when this bill is passed, if it is passed with the amendments that have been suggested, neither the secretary nor the commission receive a salary. If the contention of the gentleman from Indiana be correct, then, if we strike out of the bill "to be paid at the rate of $500 a year," these gentlemen may be paid $5,000 a year, because, having created the office and not giving them a salary, the gentleman contends we authorize ad libitum a salary to be created; and if we strike out the $500 a year on the reasoning of the gentleman, the commissioners could come in with a request to be paid $5,000 a year. Does the gentleman think they could get that?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; I do not, for we do not appropriate the money.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference between creating one office at a salary and another office without a salary?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We provide for the expenses of a commission and provide in the bill that there may be a secretary, and, of course, the position of the secretary necessarily implies service for which pay is contemplated.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the ordinary rule of law, that the mention of one thing is the exclusion of another. When you say a man shall be paid expenses, the ordinary rule would be that that is all that he would be paid. I think that that answers the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill appropriates $10,000 for expenses. What constitutes expenses? Why, it is the clerical work; the work of the secretary and the traveling expenses constitute the expenses of the commission.

Mr. MANN. Here we have a bill now before us. The gentleman from Indiana assumes that if we pass a bill nonsensical in its terms, the court or the controller will read sense into it. The court and the comptroller have no such authority. It is our business to pass a bill which says what it means. It is not the right of the comptroller or the court to say that which we have passed is ridiculous in itself in its present form. It is our business to put it in proper shape, and the gentlemen who advocate the bill, if they do the proper thing, will send the bill back to the committee, so that the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Indiana and others may be able to prepare a bill in proper form and say what they mean. There is not a line in this bill that will stand examination.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to submit to the gentleman an amendment to take the place of the first three lines of the bill, to meet the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois, which I think was a good one:

That a permanent commission of fine arts is hereby created, to be composed of seven artists of repute, who shall be appointed by the President to serve for a period of four years, or until their successors are appointed. The President shall have authority to fill all vacancies.

That is to take the place of the first three lines of the substitute reported. I think that would meet the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I will say frankly that while I do not pretend that the House ought to pass over things of this sort, with what little expertness I may have in reference to bills, I never have yet been able, upon the mere reading of a proposition of importance, to determine whether it does what it pretends to do or not. The gentleman's amendment sounds good. It is certainly in better form than the bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I took the suggestion from the gentleman's criticism, and put it, as near as I could remember this amendment, in the gentleman's own language.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. I say the amendment sounds good. I did not know that the gentleman took my criticism or my language. I will not undertake, as far as I am concerned, to pass upon a matter of that importance by simply hearing it read.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in regard to the provision here for a secretary. Section 2, authorizing the payment of all expenses, will not authorize the payment of a salary to any person or any officer whose appointment is authorized by this act. It has been so held over and over again in construing appropriations for miscellaneous expenditures. You can not pay any salary out of an appropriation for expenses; the salary must be specifically authorized.

Mr. PARSONS. Let me ask the gentleman, can not you pay the $500 to each member of the commission?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; because that is authorized specifically; but there is no salary fixed for the secretary, and if hereafter an appropriation for the salary of this secretary is submitted to the House it would be subject to a point of order, because no salary is authorized.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman this: Suppose we strike out all the provisions of the bill in relation to the secretary, would not the commission be authorized to employ a secretary and pay him out of this general fund?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it would.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not think there is any sort of doubt about it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will call the gentleman's attention to a statute which absolutely prohibits it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let us see the statute.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the act of 1882. It expressly prohibits the employment of any clerical service at the seat of government unless expressly authorized by law. This section 2 does not authorize the employment of any clerical service.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That statute does not apply to these commissions.

Mr. TAWNEY. The statute applies to any department, any governmental institution, any institution that may be created by Congress. It applies to the employment of personal services here at the seat of government and there is no salary to be appropriated for, and no salary would be allowed by any Auditor or Comptroller of the Treasury if paid out of this general appropriation relating to the ordinary expenses of the commission.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] what it purposes in reference to section 2?

Mr. MCCALL. What my purpose was?

Mr. MANN. No; what it is now?

Mr. MCCALL. To have a limitation upon the amount of money that might be expended under this act.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman propose to offer an amendment to make it a limitation?

Mr. MCCALL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In its present form it is not a limitation.

Mr. MCCALL. To make it a limitation, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no further general debate, the Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, seven artists of repute as a commission on fine arts, which commission shall have authority to decide upon the location of statues and monuments in the public squares, streets, or parks in the District of Columbia, except in cases where otherwise provided by law. It shall also be the duty of such commission to advise in the selection of models for such statues or monuments, and in the selection of artists for the execution of the same. Said commission shall have a secretary and such other assistance as the President may authorize, and the members of the commission shall have the expenses of their travel and their other personal expenses in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of the commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order and is preferential.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the Clerk read the original bill or the substitute recommended by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk read the original bill.

Mr. MCCALL. Is not the substitute the one before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the original was first in order. The substitute is proposed as a committee amendment, which would now be in order except for the motion to strike out the enacting clause, which, under the rule, has precedence. The question is now upon the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think that the committee will agree with me in saying that the bill in its present form——

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. That question was once held in the negative. It was ruled that such a motion was not debatable at all. At a later Congress it was held debatable without limit, but the better ruling upon the question seems to have been made by the present occupant of the chair [laughter and applause] in 1902, when the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON, made a similar motion, and, after considerable discussion of the point of order, the Chair made an elaborate ruling, which is found in section 5335 of Hinds's Precedents—and which seems to have been supported by a ruling, or at least by some observations, of Mr. Speaker Blaine—to the effect that the motion being analogous to an amendment, it is debatable five minutes on either side. Following its former ruling, the Chair now so holds in answer to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I stated at the beginning of the consideration of this bill that I was not in favor of the creation of this commission, and I think the discussion has developed the fact that the bill, though drafted and reported by the Committee on the Library, does not meet with either the requirements of the rules of the House or the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on the Library himself, with respect to its various provisions. I stated at the outset that my reason for not favoring the proposition was that it was unnecessary to create a permanent commission for this purpose. Now, the chief function of this commission, as I understand it and as described by the gentleman from Massachusetts, is to supervise and control the erection of statues here in the city of Washington. How many statues do we erect in a year? I have been a Member of this House now for almost eighteen years. During that time we have authorized the erection of 12. It is now proposed to have a permanent commission, at an expense of at least $10,000 a year, to supervise the erection and the preparation of plans for the erection of an average of about one statue every two years.

Heretofore we have erected these statues under the direction and supervision of commissions appointed for that purpose. They serve without compensation, and when that purpose has been accomplished their service terminates. We do not have a permanent organization, we never have had, and I can not see how we can obtain any better results from an artistic standpoint by having a permanent commission composed of seven artists of this country than we have had or would have by continuing the policy of having temporary commissions appointed when it is necessary, or when Congress deems it necessary, to authorize the erection of a statue.

There is absolutely no necessity for creating a permanent organization of that kind here at the seat of Government. If you are going to limit the functions of this commission to the things specified in this bill, then you will create a permanent commission to supervise the construction or erection of about one statue every one or two years instead of having a voluntary commission performing that service without compensation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not this bill also authorize the commission to advise the President or Congress upon other art matters?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it does not.

Mr. SHERLEY. I so read it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It reads:

It shall also be the duty of such commission to advise in the selection of models for statues and monuments erected under the authority of the United States and in the selection of artists in the execution of the same——

Mr. MCCALL. Go on; the gentleman should not stop.

Mr. TAWNEY (reading):

and generally to advise upon questions of art.

Well, I presume some questions of art may arise in relation to the construction of public buildings here in the city of Washington or elsewhere, and that language would give them authority over all public works, including reclamation projects and river and harbor improvements.

Mr. MANN. Might they not advise as to the erection of a national gallery of art?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; they might advise as to the erection of a national gallery of art. But, Mr. Chairman, when Congress deems it necessary to erect anything of that kind, deems it necessary to employ the services of specialists along these lines, Congress can authorize the employment of such services for that purpose. When the purpose has been accomplished the service is ended, and those employed go back into civil life; they do not become a permanent fixture. Here you are creating a permanent organization, one that will continue for all time to come and as long as it continues it will continue to secure from Congress additional authority for the increase of its activities, for the increase of its jurisdiction, and there will be no end to the extent to which this commission will seek to enlarge its authority and to enlarge its activities. A monument erected no matter where in the United States, or a public building erected anywhere in the United States, this commission will assume control over its erection, and I therefore hope that this amendment will prevail.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly some crimes have been committed in the drafting of this bill. It does not appear to be a perfect measure, but I scarcely think all of its defects justify the display of sensibility made by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Minnesota. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] made a perfectly good suggestion about the bill, that as to tenure and that as to the limitation of expense, but it seems to me that most of the suggestions of my distinguished friend from Illinois and of my equally distinguished friend from Minnesota would be worthy of our old friend Dogberry. They were mere quibbles, most of them, and if we were to undertake to deal in the same way with the expenditure of the money of this Government it would be impossible to pay for the most ordinary services that are rendered, if those services did not happen to be mentioned in laws.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the criticisms of this bill are of two kinds. First, criticisms that go to particular cases. For instance, that relating to the Barry statue and that relating to the location of the Grant memorial, but it is to be noted that both of those cases, if they were wrong, occurred under the existing system, when we had no established and responsible commission on the fine arts, and it was under the present system of making the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, a very estimable gentleman, and myself (and I claim to know nothing about art), and the Secretary of War, who does not know much more about art, and somebody else pass upon these important questions; I have brought in this bill to the House because of my personal experience upon these commissions and because of my belief caused by that personal experience that a different system should be adopted. The second kind of criticism is general and against the notion of commissions. Why, gentlemen, shudder at the creation of a little commission which is to have a technical jurisdiction over fine arts, which is one of the great things in the education of the world?

As I said a moment ago, it has a representation on the cabinet of France. There is not a government in Europe that does not have in effect, if not in form, a commission of fine arts, and the most progressive cities in the world have commissions on fine arts; and yet when it is proposed that we create such a commission for the capital of this country—a city which has, I believe, one-fifth of all the equestrian statues in the world, which has had nearly all the statues the gentleman from Minnesota spoke of authorized within half a dozen years——

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no——

Mr. McCALL. None of them, hardly, was made during the gentleman's first twelve years of service.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, yes——

Mr. McCALL. And the record will show that. When it is proposed, I say, to create for the capital city of this country, at an expense of only $10,000 a year, a commission of artists, who shall give their opinion when required upon matters of art, why, gentlemen hold up their hands in holy horror.

I certainly did not think that the gentleman, my friend from Illinois, would have been guilty of taking the position that he has taken here. The gentleman from Minnesota is a professional economist [laughter], and he opposes, impartially, every bill, just and unjust, that comes up that does not emanate from the Committee on Appropriations. He does not want anybody else to touch the purse strings of the Government, and I can understand his action. But I believe, sir, that this is a bill that ought to be passed, that it will conduce to our having better art in the city of Washington. The commission has no jurisdiction, and gentlemen who have read it know it has no jurisdiction over buildings. It relates simply to questions of art. Now, I am willing to accept amendments as to the tenure and a limitation as to expenditures, and if gentlemen think this commission should not receive the small salary, I will accept an amendment striking that out; but I do think that if that is done, there is no objection worthy to be urged against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 30, noes 62.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. The Chair desires to know if the committee amendment is not in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. McCALL. I think the amendment ought to be offered, because it is a substitute for the whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read section 2 and then read the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That to meet the expenses made necessary by this act the expenditure of $10,000 a year is hereby authorized.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

"That the President be authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, seven artists of repute as a commission of fine arts, which commission shall have authority to decide upon the location of statues and monuments in the public squares, streets, and parks in the District of Columbia. It shall also be the duty of such commission to advise in the selection of models for statues and monuments erected under the authority of the United States and in the selection of artists for the execution of the same, and generally to advise upon questions of art when required to do so by the President, or by any committee of either House of Congress. Said commission shall have a secretary and such other assistance as the President may authorize, and the members of the commission shall each be paid at the rate of $500 a year and actual expenses in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of said commission and while attending the same.

"SEC. 2. That to meet the expenses made necessary by this act the expenditure of $10,000 a year, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized."

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Strike out all of the lines 8, 9, and 10 and substitute for the parts stricken out what I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 strike out all of lines 8, 9, and 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That a permanent commission of fine arts is hereby created, to be composed of seven artists of repute, who shall be appointed by the President, and shall serve for a period of four years each and until their successors are appointed and qualified. The President shall have authority to fill all vacancies. Said commission shall have authority."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether in proposing that amendment he considered the fact that the terms of the commissioners will expire at one time?

Mr. McCALL. Yes; I considered that, but I do not think that in matters of this character it is really material.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought it might be advisable to have a continuing body.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out the word "the" in line 2, after the word "act," and insert in place the word "an."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Clerk was unable to get the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCALL. In line 2, on page 3, after the word "act," change the word "the" to "an;" then after the word "of," in the same line, insert the words "not exceeding;" and then strike out the words at the end of that line and in the next, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," so that it will read: "That to meet the expenses made necessary by this act an expenditure of not exceeding $10,000 a year is hereby authorized."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, amend section 2 so as to read:
"SEC. 2. That to meet the expenses made necessary by this act an expenditure of not exceeding $10,000 a year is hereby authorized."

Mr. FITZGERALD. When is it in order to move to strike out that section?

The CHAIRMAN. After it is perfected. The Chair will state that this section is in the nature of an amendment, and this is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I offer the following amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to offer an amendment to the section?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move to strike out his amendment and insert this.

Mr. SHERLEY. I make the point of order that that is an amendment in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is an independent amendment, which will be in order after the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts shall have been voted upon.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACON. The Clerk has an amendment that I offered to section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. That will still be in order.

Mr. MACON. I wish to ask if it would not be proper at this time to entertain the amendment to section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendments are first in order. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 2 by striking out all after the word "Congress," in line 19, and insert the following:
"Said commissioners shall each be paid actual expenses in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of said commission and while attending the same."

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, of course that amendment strikes out the salary that is proposed to be paid to the members of the commission. I am opposed to the measure, as stated a moment ago, but if it is to be passed I would like to see it perfected in the manner indicated by the amendment that I have just offered. If these fine art commissioners are worth anything, they are worth more than $500 a year each. If they are patriotic and willing to serve their country in the manner proposed by this measure for that sum, it strikes me that they will be patriotic enough to want to serve for this noble purpose that the commission is to be created for without compensation, if their actual expenses are paid. The amendment I offer provides that their expenses in going to and returning from Washington, and during the sessions of the commission, shall be paid by the Government. I oppose the whole proposition, however, because, in my judgment, if this commission is created it will not be more than a year or two years at the outside before authority will be asked of this House to permit this particular commission to take a junket all over the world, to view statues elsewhere in order that they may get a better idea of the kind of designs that they would like to have used in this country. And we know what junkets are. We know that they call for expenses for wines, for joy rides, and for pressing of clothes, and for other things of the sort that ordinarily are deemed luxuries. We know that they take money out of the Treasury for the purpose of feasting public officials at governmental expense.

I hope the amendment will be adopted, because I believe it will be an incentive to patriotism on the part of those gentlemen who are so educated along artistic lines that they will be appointed upon the commission, and will induce them to take up this work as a matter of love, and not undertake it from the standpoint of a petty compensation.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I am willing to accept an amendment striking out compensation for the commission.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not.

Mr. McCALL. But I do not think the amendment in the form in which the gentleman has offered it, striking out the secretary and all clerical assistants, should be adopted. If this amendment be voted down, an amendment striking out the salaries of the commissioners will be offered.

Mr. MACON. I am willing to allow the gentleman to modify my amendment, if he will, or to offer one of his own.

Mr. McCALL. I will say that an amendment has been prepared, which will be presented, striking out the salaries of the commissioners.

Mr. MACON. With that understanding I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The question being taken, Mr. MACON'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning with the word "at," in line 21, page 2, strike out all down to and including the word "and," in line 22, on said page. The words proposed to be stricken out being "at the rate of $500 a year and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment if it is in order.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "President," in line 20, and inserting in place thereof the word "commission." That amendment was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts the following:

Strike out the words "the President may authorize," in line 20, and insert "Congress may from time to time appropriate for."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is an amendment to an amendment, a further amendment would be in the third degree, and therefore not in order at this time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact, and I will address myself to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts has not been reported. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this transfers the authority for the employment of additional clerks and assistants from the President to the commission. In my judgment neither ought to have unlimited authority, or even authority under the limitation proposed here, to employ clerical assistance for the work of this commission. If you are going to have a permanent commission it ought to submit estimates for necessary clerical services. In that case Congress could appropriate for the necessary clerical services.

Mr. MANN. The commission will meet in Washington occasionally?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And when they meet here they will require some additional assistance that they would not require when not here. They can make an estimate for a sum of money that would be sufficient to employ services here. If they make an estimate for a sum of money to authorize the employment of services here, would it not be more economical than for Congress to make an appropriation for annual services?

Mr. TAWNEY. My thought is, Mr. Chairman, that if the commission has a secretary there will be no necessity for additional clerical assistance.

Mr. MANN. I am a member of one commission where members come from abroad, and I know that there is more or less expense in connection with the additional assistance at the time of the meeting, and there would be at the time of these meetings, and it seems to me that it would not be advisable to make a permanent appropriation for that assistance. The gentleman has it within his authority, within the authority of the Committee on Appropriations, to appropriate the amount of money within the limitation. The limitation is not to exceed $10,000. He can require such estimate as he pleases, but it does not seem wise to appropriate for annual assistance when it is not necessary. Make the amount of the appropriation within the control of the commission, so that they may employ assistance for a few days when they meet here and it becomes necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. When the commission is organized they can come to Congress and ask for an appropriation for temporary service, if you please, and a lump sum for the employment of temporary service can be appropriated. Congress then has an opportunity to inquire into the necessity of this service and the extent of it; but, if it is turned over absolutely to the commission to employ assistance when they deem it necessary, we must make the appropriation whether, in our judgment, it is necessary or not.

Mr. MANN. There is no legal compulsion on Congress to make the appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. If we authorize the employment of personal service, of course we will have to appropriate for it or appropriate to pay a judgment that would be rendered in favor of the persons employed.

Mr. MANN. We are not even obliged to appropriate for judgments, although we do. These gentlemen will have to present an estimate, or the Secretary of the Treasury for them, every year. It comes before the Committee on Appropriations. They do not have to appropriate $10,000 or $5,000 or 5 cents unless they choose to. I do not know of any legal compulsion on anybody. They must make some showing. You can find it in many branches of the government service where authority is given to employ assistants, but every one of them must get the money from Congress through the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am aware of that; but here it is proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out the word "President," who, under the language as reported in the bill, is authorized to employ such other assistance as he may deem necessary. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes to change that authority from the President to the commission. I say that they should be authorized to employ such services as Congress shall hereafter authorize and appropriate for. We would then retain the power of determining whether to authorize the employment of such services at all or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, section 2, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. The only object is to prevent the House at some future time, if the rules be the same as they are now, from carrying an appropriation larger than $6,000 in a proper place for the work of this commission. It seems to me that we should be just as willing to trust future Congresses to do what is proper in providing money for this commission as we think we are competent to do ourselves. I have no sympathy with this class of legislation, which is indirectly attempting to tie up future Congresses as to what they shall do in regard to appropriating money. I intend to move to strike out this entire section, because I believe in a short time we will have a House of Representatives that can be intrusted to appropriate properly for any purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I now move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendment, with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19962) establishing a commission on fine arts, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee appointment:

Mr. DICKINSON to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 5238. An act to abolish the United States land office at Des Moines, Iowa;

S. 2523. An act for the establishment of a new land district in the State of Montana; and

S. J. Res. 59. Joint resolution providing for the filling of vacancies, which occurred on January 27, 1910, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17743. An act to authorize Clay County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Current River; and

H. R. 16311. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 17161. An act to authorize the Union Railroad and Dock Company to construct and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of West Virginia;

H. R. 16221. An act for the establishment of telephone service between the life-saving station at Two Rivers, Wis., and the light-house at Twin River Point, Wisconsin;

H. R. 13440. An act to declare Big Tarkio River, in Holt and Atchison counties, Mo., nonnavigable;

H. R. 13439. An act to declare Nodaway River, in Missouri, nonnavigable;

H. R. 13438. An act to declare One Hundred and Two River, in Missouri, nonnavigable;

H. R. 12289. An act to authorize the city of Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said city; and

H. R. 11307. An act to legalize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hill City, Aitkin County, Minn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. PATTERSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, for three days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. STURGISS to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Charles H. Keefer, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

COMMISSION ON FINE ARTS.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill (H. R. 19962) establishing a commission on fine arts, and amendment, to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to order the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCALL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the president of the Washington Gaslight Company, transmitting the annual report for the year ended December 31, 1909 (H. Doc. No. 675)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to convey thanks to the Government of Italy for certain gifts; and

H. J. Res. 113. Joint resolution granting permission to the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States to remove the monument or statue of Albert Pike.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 2523. An act for the establishment of a new land district in the State of Montana;

S. 5238. An act to abolish the United States land office at Des Moines, Iowa;

H. R. 16311. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 17743. An act to authorize Clay County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Current River; and

S. J. Res. 59. Joint resolution providing for the filling of vacancies, which occurred on January 27, 1910, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Associated Banks of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES. I present resolutions passed by the transportation bureau, of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, favoring the establishment of a government line of steamships to ply between Panama and Pacific coast ports. I ask that the resolutions be read and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals as follows:

Whereas the United States Government maintains an efficient steamship service between New York and the Isthmus of Panama, by reason of which service practically all of the supplies used in the construction of the Panama Canal, and for the sustenance of the employees (including meats, fruits, vegetables, cereal products, and other foodstuffs, as well as hay, grain, and fodder), are purchased in New York and other Atlantic seaboard markets to the exclusion of the producers, manufacturers, and merchants of the Pacific coast; and

Whereas the establishment of an efficient service by the Government between Seattle and Panama would bring to this coast a large volume of this business, to the advantage of the Government as well as to the advantage of the Pacific coast producers, manufacturers, and merchants: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That in justice to the shippers, producers, manufacturers, and merchants of the Pacific coast, the transportation bureau of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce urges that the Government inaugurate such transportation facilities between Seattle and Panama as will remove the existing discrimination in favor of the Atlantic seaboard, and at the same time provide a prompt and efficient service at reasonable rates of freight between Seattle and New York; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the transportation bureau of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce be instructed to send copies of this resolution to the Washington congressional delegation urging them to support the bill, provided only that Seattle is named as the northern terminus; otherwise to oppose the bill.

SEATTLE, WASH., February 5, 1910.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17752) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 208) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17755) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 207) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5576) to increase the efficiency of the United States Military Academy, reported it with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1374) for the relief of C. M. Cox, and to confirm and legalize his acts while acting as United States commissioner, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13145) for the relief of John W. Dula, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 214) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. TALIAFERRO on the 28th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $150,000 to acquire additional land necessary for the army post at Fort Taylor, at Key West, Fla., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2072) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Reed, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 215) thereon

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13410) to modify the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and twenty-fourth Articles of War, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 216) thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5656) to modify the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and twenty-fourth Articles of War, to report it adversely, and I ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed, the subject-matter being covered by the bill just reported by me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. HEYBURN. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back with amendments Senate resolution 150 and submit a report (No. 211) thereon. I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution reported by him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. HEYBURN January 24, 1910, as follows:

Senate resolution 150.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate a statement of the amount of money required to finish every one of the reclamation projects now under construction, together with a statement of the amount of money that has already been expended upon each of them, giving the nature of the work completed and to be completed upon each one of them.

That he also be instructed to furnish an estimate of the amount of the income reasonably expected from the sale of public lands, the income from which shall each year for ten years be contributed to the reclamation fund.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were, in line 3, before the word "amount," to insert the word "estimated;" in the same line to strike out the words "every one" and insert the word "each;" in line 4, after the word "construction," to insert the words "or approved or contemplated extensions thereof;" in line 7, after the word "then," at the end of the line, to insert "separately;" in line 9, after the word "reasonably," to insert the words "to be;" in line 11, after the words "years be," to strike out "contributed" and insert "applicable;" and at the end of the resolution to add:

and state the acreage of land under each project, or extension thereof, that may be reclaimed. That he shall also furnish an estimate of the probable income to the reclamation fund from the sale of reclaimed lands and water sales under each project and extension thereof, and an estimate of the number of acres that will be sold thereunder.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate a statement of the estimated amount of money required to finish each of the reclamation projects now under construction, or approved or contemplated extensions thereof, together with a statement of the amount of money that has already been expended upon each of them, giving the nature of the work completed and to be completed upon each one of them separately.

That he also be instructed to furnish an estimate of the amount of the income reasonably to be expected from the sale of public lands, the income from which shall each year for ten years be applicable to the reclamation fund, and state the acreage of land under each project, or extension thereof, that may be reclaimed. That he shall also furnish an estimate of the probable income to the reclamation fund from the sale of reclaimed lands and water sales under each project and extension thereof, and an estimate of the number of acres that will be sold thereunder.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Is this resolution reported by the committee?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CARTER. I insist that it be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands for the reason that the committee has in hand an investigation of the identical matters referred to in the resolution. I think it belongs to that committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I shall have to oppose a change of reference in this case. The matter has been under consideration and has been given very thorough consideration by the Committee on Public Lands, and it is strictly and accurately within their jurisdiction. It is calling for information upon a matter with which the Public Lands Committee are dealing, and in order that they may deal intelligently they want this information.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the resolution has just been reported to the Senate. I think it should lie over a day for the purpose of giving Senators an opportunity to learn something about it.

Mr. HEYBURN. The time has passed when that is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho is correct. The Senate has given unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, and the amendments have been agreed to. The resolution is now before the Senate, subject to amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the resolution be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution as amended will be again read.

The Secretary read the resolution as amended.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the subject-matter of this resolution has been under consideration by the Committee on Irrigation throughout the entire vacation. The resolution, in the first instance, should have been referred to the committee having jurisdiction over the subject-matter. The Committee on Irrigation has been holding meetings for the last month dealing with the identical questions referred to in the resolution.

It will at once, I think, become apparent, upon slight reflection, to every Senator that this attempt to divide between committees of the Senate the same subject-matter can but lead to confusion and a needless duplication of work. Every question propounded by the resolution can be answered now by the files and records of the Committee on Irrigation. Quite a volume of testimony has been taken, and that testimony is now being printed. The committee, I think, will be as fully advised as the Interior Department or any department of the Government concerning the exact condition, financially and physically, of all the reclamation projects when its report is finally prepared. To start out a department to deal with a committee of the Senate having no jurisdiction over the subject-matter will cause needless labor in the department, and can not in the nature of things lead to aught else than confusion, discussion, and a contest for jurisdiction between committees.

When the reclamation enterprises were undertaken, both branches of Congress thought proper to create separate committees, to be charged with appropriate attention to this class of questions, and the Committee on Irrigation of the other branch of Congress, as well as the Committee on Irrigation of this branch, has been constantly and vigilantly pursuing all needful inquiries, in order to reach a thorough understanding of the present status of this work.

The propriety of referring the resolution, I think, is obvious, and I therefore move to refer it to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Montana has taken a stand for the Committee on Irrigation, and has demanded for it the consideration of subjects that surely belong to that committee's jurisdiction. There are various matters, more in the past, perhaps, than there will be in the future, that might be considered by either the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands or the old-established and very able Committee on Public Lands; but this resolution undoubtedly relates to matters over which the Irrigation Committee has jurisdiction. Unless propositions of this kind go to the Committee on Irrigation, even after having been considered by the other committee, it will confuse the work, increase the expenses, and serve to defeat, rather than to forward, the interests sought to be protected.

I may say, without injuring the feelings of anyone, I think, that there have been times when the Committee on Irrigation has not taken cognizance of all the bills it should have considered and has not demanded jurisdiction of them. I say it with some humility, because I have been a member of that committee ever since the committee was created. There have been times when bills have gone to the Committee on Public Lands when they should have gone to the Committee on Irrigation. I will not say that they have been improperly handled, because I have no desire to impugn either the motives or the action of the Committee on Public Lands. I do not think it at all strange that when a bill comes up the Chair refers it to the Committee on Public Lands when the Senator introducing it asks that that reference be made, and there is no occasion to lay the blame anywhere except upon the Committee on Irrigation. That committee should demand and receive the jurisdiction which belongs to it in such matters.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it would be intolerable that a standing committee of this body should under any circumstances be deprived of the power to obtain information which in its judgment is needed in connection with the consideration of matters referred to it. That one committee ever should be at the mercy of another committee to obtain information necessary for the consideration of the committee of measures referred to it would result in the Committee on Public Lands standing still, so far as the consideration of those measures is concerned, until some other committee might find time or disposition to obtain information for it, and that is what it would amount to. Every committee is entitled to call for information necessary to its consideration, without having the consent of any other committee of this body. I do not know whether the Committee on Irrigation will ever need this kind of information or not, but I know one thing, that the Committee on Public Lands are not standing at the door waiting for the action of the Committee on Irrigation. They are acting on their own responsibility. They have requested this information upon grounds or reasons sufficient to them, and that some other committee should have charge of it and dole it out to them seems to me to be rather a singular position for a Senator to assume.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, just a word. I see no occasion for any heat in regard to this matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am tired of that expression. If my earnestness is to be twitted as heat of expression every time I speak in my own way, according to my own disposition, it would become very much more intolerable. I am tired of having Senators on this floor follow the example of a newspaper reporter in attributing to me heat because I am earnest in insisting upon my rights.

Mr. WARREN. I was about to say that I saw no occasion for heat, and that I personally did not propose to become heated. Now, if the Senator from Idaho thinks that applies to him, he can take it. I intended no reference to him in the remarks I was about to make.

The Committee on Irrigation might like to add still more to a resolution of this kind, and to have this and other information now in its possession assembled in regular order.

It may be that any committee and every committee should be permitted to ask for any kind and all kinds of information and to receive it. Nobody on this floor, whom I know of, proposes to debar them from receiving it. But I submit that it is more reasonable and more businesslike to have measures of this kind go finally to the department from the committee having the subject-matter in charge, which committee may have some views of its own.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, this is merely a family quarrel between two committees, in which I am not interested, as I belong to neither. But I recall the fact that a resolution was adopted by the Senate at its last session instructing the Committee on Irrigation to make a personal examination and inspection and to report to the Senate; and it does look to me a little odd that we should jump in and pass a resolution from the Committee on Public Lands in a way superseding a previous order of the Senate. It appears to me, as a matter of common sense, that until that committee shall indicate its inability or its indisposition to make a report, it would be treating it with grave discourtesy as well as in a measure superseding it, to call for similar information or a duplicate of information which that committee ought to be prepared to give us.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not know whether that committee is prepared to give us information, but I do know that we stand still waiting for the information. I do know that the measures which have been referred to the Public Lands Committee can not receive consideration, and I think will not receive consideration, until they are equipped with the information that will enable them to act intelligently.

Now, that to some standing committee or special committee has been delegated the power to obtain information in part or in whole covering this question is immaterial in determining whether the Committee on Public Lands shall have the information that in its judgment, after mature deliberation, is necessary to its consideration of measures referred to it.

This report was not made hastily or unadvisedly. It was made after thorough consideration. Are we to stand in idleness or allow these measures before us to rest without consideration simply because some other committee has not even taken up the question?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] stated, the Senate thought proper during the closing days of the Sixtieth Congress to direct the Committee on Irrigation to examine into the physical, financial, and other conditions of the Reclamation Service and the reclamation projects. Congress adjourned during the month of August, and a few days after adjournment the committee began its work of investigation. Fifty-four days were spent visiting the various projects in course of construction. Numerous witnesses were examined, physical conditions of the work in each case on some thirty-odd projects inspected, and the testimony taken is now being printed.

The official notes of the stenographers were not extended and delivered until the 15th of December. The work of taking testimony concluded about the 20th of November. In the meantime the committee has been industriously collecting data and preparing a report upon its observations and investigations.

The information sought by the Senator in the resolution just presented can be answered now. If the Senator thinks proper to call at the room of the Committee on Irrigation he can procure all that information in tabulated form without any difficulty whatever. The committee is in possession of the information.

The objection to this resolution, from a committee having no jurisdiction over the subject-matter and having nothing properly before it for consideration to which this line of information is necessary, is that it seems to me to be a needless confusion of committee work, a needless burden upon a department, and a wholly useless inquiry, because one committee is now in possession of the information. I therefore insist on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Irrigation.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senate is now in possession of the information, I would be glad to have a reference to it.

Mr. CARTER. I presume the committees of the Senate constitute repositories for information. I would be very glad to have sent to the Senator's room within fifteen minutes from now a complete answer to every question propounded by the resolution, and that, too, in tabulated form, properly indexed, and in good position for reference.

Mr. HEYBURN. Every question asked in the resolution?

Mr. CARTER. I think every question. I have heard the resolution read but once, but I think the entire matter is covered by tabulated material now in the possession of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. I assume that the information has come to the committee, then, only within a day or two.

Mr. CARTER. It has been in charge of the committee for two weeks.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am rather astonished that the committee has not reported it to this body.

Mr. CARTER. The committee has thought proper to report in full on the subject rather than in a fragmentary way. The committee report will be quite voluminous, and I hope that it will be of some benefit to the Senate and to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not care to have the Senator send to my room papers of his selection in this matter. I will prefer to wait for a response to the report from the committee. The committee is the instrument of the Senate, and its work, or the result of its work, should be made available to the Senate and to every Member of it.

The motion, I understand, is that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Irrigation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is to refer the resolution to the Committee on Irrigation.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senate can refer the resolution there if it pleases, but it will delay the work in the Committee on Public Lands. I give notice that when this question comes up, as it will, in connection with the agricultural appropriation bill, now before a committee of the Senate, there will be a rather slow procedure until we get this information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. FLINT. I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BAILEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to inquire if the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] has not voted.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, I think I ought to withdraw my vote, out of respect to my pair with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Bankhead	Cullom	Oliver	Taylor
Bourne	Curtis	Page	Tillman
Briggs	Depew	Piles	Warner
Brown	du Pont	Purcell	Warren
Burkett	Kean	Richardson	Wetmore
Burnham	Lodge	Root

Guggenheim	Penrose	Smith, Md.
Hale	Perkins	Smith, Mich.

So the Senate refused to refer the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MOUNT RAINIER NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. JONES. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4654) to prevent trespassers or intruders from entering the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 212) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] to the bill.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to make the necessary detail of troops to prevent trespassers or intruders from entering the Mount Rainier National Park, in Washington, for the purpose of destroying the game or objects of curiosity therein, or for any other purpose prohibited by law or regulation for the government of said reservation, and to remove such persons from said park if found therein.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what occasion there is for preventing people from entering a national park?

Mr. PILES. It is to prevent trespassing. The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, to which the Senator is a member. A report accompanies the bill, which I ask the Secretary to read.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask, Who is a trespasser upon a public park of the United States?

Mr. PILES. A great many people go into the parks and ruthlessly destroy game in violation of law—elk, deer, and other rare game.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would ask if this is a proposition to constitute the soldiers who shall be stationed there the peace officers?

Mr. PILES. It is on the same line as the regulations for the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have a commission in the Yellowstone National Park, and a man is entitled to make a defense before being ejected. This places no limitation upon the action of a soldier. If he considers a man a trespasser, he may take him away by force.

Mr. PILES. This bill confers no greater power than that exercised in the Yellowstone and other national parks.

Mr. HEYBURN. They generally have a civil administration, so that a man can be heard. I will ask for the reading of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. JONES, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4654) to prevent trespassers or intruders from entering the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington, having had the same under consideration, beg to report it back favorably and recommend that it do pass.

In this connection attention is called to the attached letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which is made a part of this report, wherein he favors passage of this bill, also to the statement of the Secretary of War, saying that he has no objection to the passage of this bill.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 10, 1910.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

SIR: Your letter has been received inclosing, with request for report thereon, S. 4654, Sixty-first Congress, second session, to prevent trespassers or intruders from entering the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington.

The bill reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to make the necessary detail of troops to prevent trespassers or intruders from entering the Mount Rainier National Park, in Washington, for the purpose of destroying the game or objects of curiosity therein, or for any other purposes prohibited by law or regulation for the government of said reservation, and to remove such persons from said park if found therein."

In response thereto I have to state that the detail of troops for duty in the Mount Rainier National Park will enable the department to more thoroughly patrol and administer the affairs of that reservation than it is now practicable to do with the limited number of forest rangers employed therein.

Legislation similar to that contemplated by the bill under consideration has heretofore been enacted by Congress in connection with the Yellowstone, Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant national parks in the acts of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 626), and June 6, 1900 (31 Stat., 618). I have the honor to recommend that the bill receive favorable consideration and be enacted into law.

In this connection it is suggested that, inasmuch as the bill provides for a detail from the army, it be referred to the honorable Secretary of War for an expression of his views thereon.

Very respectfully,

R. A. BALLINGER, Secretary.

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 22, 1910.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

The War Department has no objection to the passage of this bill.

J. M. DICKINSON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, what a narrow escape! Just think of Congress being given the right and privilege of enacting a law, a great measure like this, by two departments; that is, two executive departments of the Government. I am very much impressed with the generosity that prompted the permission of those two departments that we might act upon this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURKETT:

A bill (S. 6273) granting an increase of pension to Stephen C. Beck; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 6274) granting an increase of pension to James Enloe;

A bill (S. 6275) granting an increase of pension to Jackson Long;

A bill (S. 6276) granting an increase of pension to Micajah Dugger;

A bill (S. 6277) granting a pension to Louisa H. Highley; and

A bill (S. 6278) granting an increase of pension to Samuel W. Dicus; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 6279) for the relief of Peter V. Shell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 6280) for the relief of the heirs of John Ruedi, deceased; and

A bill (S. 6281) for the relief of Sidney J. Wetherell, assignee of A. V. Davis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 6282) for the relief of Rice E. Buckner and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6283) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Bentley (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 6284) granting an increase of pension to Emilie de G. Chynoweth; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HEYBURN:

A bill (S. 6285) for the relief of T. S. Williams; to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PILES:

A bill (S. 6286) to authorize the Copper River and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Copper River, in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes;" to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 for improvement of conditions of the routes over which rural delivery routes are or may be hereafter established, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $12,092.56, being the amount of balance due the Alabama Great Southern Railway Company for erroneous mail-pay deductions, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for investigations into the best means of exterminating the white fly, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

HAZING AT THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

On motion of Mr. PILES, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 2488, 60th Cong.) authorizing the reappointment of midshipmen recently dismissed from the Naval Academy for hazing be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon.

CLAIMS OF POSTMASTERS.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads 10,000 copies each of Senate Report 153 and Senate Document 318, Sixty-first Congress.

INDIAN TREATIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 358), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress, agreements concluded with certain Indian tribes for the commutation of their perpetual annuities under treaty stipulations, together with draft of a bill providing for the ratification of said agreements and making the necessary appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 10, 1910.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Library:

H. R. 55. An act providing for the erection of two memorial arches at Valley Forge, Pa.;

H. R. 16222. An act for the erection of a replica of the statue of General Von Steuben;

H. R. 19962. An act establishing a commission on fine arts; and

H. J. Res. 113. Joint resolution granting permission to the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rites of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States to remove the monument or statue of Albert Pike.

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to convey thanks to the Government of Italy for certain gifts, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18895) to authorize the Wilson and Glassport Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Monongahela River between Wilson and Glassport boroughs, Allegheny County, Pa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALLEY PAPER COMPANY—PRIVILEGES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred Senate resolution 173, submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] on the 7th instant, to submit a report (No. 213) thereon, accompanied by a resolution (S. Res. 177), and for said resolution I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the resolution accompanying the report which he has just submitted receive immediate consideration. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senate resolution 177.

Resolved, That Justice Wright, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in granting and issuing the following rule to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be issued, to wit:

In the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

The Valley Paper Company (Incorporated), plaintiff, v. The Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, composed of REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, respondents. At law, No. —.

RULE TO SHOW CAUSE.

Upon consideration of the petition of the Valley Paper Company filed herein this 2d day of February, 1910, it is by the court this 2d day of February, 1910, ordered that the respondents, the said REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, show cause, if any they may have, on or before the 11th day of February, 1910, at 10 o'clock a. m., why a writ of mandamus should not be issued, as prayed in said petition; provided a copy of said petition and this rule be served upon said respondents, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, on or before the 7th day of February, 1910.

against three members of this body named in said rule, to wit: Senators REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., and DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, and in causing the said rule to be served upon them, in the opinion of the Senate, thereby unlawfully invaded the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of the Senate and of said Senators, and was without jurisdiction to grant said rule; and said Senators are directed to make no appearance in response thereto.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a simple statement will, I think, give to the Senate the views of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is true that they are expressed in the resolution which has just been read.

The view of the Committee on the Judiciary is that Congress is an independent coordinate branch of this Government; that the Joint Committee on Printing is a committee of Congress; that the members of this committee, or the committee itself, under the Constitution, are not bound to answer elsewhere for any of their acts, and that a rule requiring them to appear and answer elsewhere is a violation of the prerogatives and privileges of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. If there be no objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I object to the resolution and wish to move to amend it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out the following words at the end of the resolution:

And said Senators are directed to make no appearance in response thereto—

And to insert in lieu thereof the following words:

That said Senators, without acknowledging the jurisdiction of said court, may, in their discretion, appear therein for the sole purpose of showing to the court that it is without jurisdiction in the premises and is unlawfully invading the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of the Senate and of said Senators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out at the end of the resolution the words—

And said Senators are directed to make no appearance in response thereto—

And to insert in lieu thereof the words:

That said Senators, without acknowledging the jurisdiction of said court, may, in their discretion, appear therein for the sole purpose of showing to the court that it is without jurisdiction in the premises and is unlawfully invading the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of the Senate and of said Senators.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I will briefly state why I offer this amendment.

The Committee on the Judiciary were far from unanimous in reporting this measure as reported by the chairman of the committee [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming]. A week or so ago—I do not remember the exact time—a petition was presented to Justice Wright, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, petitioning for a writ of mandamus against the Joint Committee on Printing. Upon that petition the court issued a rule of order directing the members of the committee, which consists of three Members of the other House and three members of the Senate, to appear at a day certain, specified in the order, to show cause why a peremptory writ of mandamus should not issue. The question is, as presented to the Senate at the instance of the Senate members of that committee, as to what action the Senate ought to take in the premises.

The question of whether the court is invading any of the constitutional privileges of the Senate is, to say the least, one of doubt. If the Joint Committee on Printing were simply acting under orders of the two Houses or under orders of each House separately, there could be no doubt but that it was the action of the House, and it would be a clear case of invading the privileges and prerogatives of the House. But, as a matter of fact, this Joint Committee on Printing is created by a statute adopted January 12, 1895. This statute creates the Joint Committee on Printing and prescribes its duties. So it is a committee acting not by any order of either House, but it is a committee organized and created by statute, the statute defining the particular duties the committee are to perform. I will briefly quote, Mr. President, from the statute. It reads:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be a Joint Committee on Printing, consisting of three members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, who shall have the powers hereinafter stated.

SEC. 2. The Joint Committee on Printing shall have power to adopt such measures as may be deemed necessary to remedy any neglect or delay in the execution of the public printing; and the committee shall have power to order reprinted not exceeding 300 copies of a public bill pending before either House of Congress, when the supply shall have become exhausted, and the interests of the public service demand immediate action.

SEC. 3. The Joint Committee on Printing shall fix upon standards of paper for the different descriptions of public printing and binding, and the Public Printer shall, under their direction, advertise in two newspapers, published in each of the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Louisville, Omaha, Denver, San Francisco, and Chicago, for sealed proposals to furnish the Government with paper, as specified in the schedule to be furnished to applicants by the Public Printer, setting forth in detail the quality and quantities required for the public printing. And the Public Printer shall furnish samples of the standard of papers fixed upon to applicants therefor who shall desire to bid.

SEC. 4. The advertisements shall specify the minimum portion of each quality of paper required for either three months, six months, or one year, as the Joint Committee on Printing may determine; but when the minimum portion so specified exceeds, in any case, 1,000 reams, it shall state that proposals will be received for 1,000 reams or more.

Then follows the particular section that is involved in this controversy:

SEC. 5. The sealed proposals to furnish paper shall be opened in the presence of the Joint Committee on Printing, and the contracts shall be awarded by them to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government; but they shall not consider any proposal which is not accompanied by a bond approved by a judge or clerk of a court of record in the penalty of $5,000 that the bidder or bidders, if his or their proposal is accepted, shall enter into a contract to furnish the articles proposed for and by satisfactory evidence that the person making it is a manufacturer of or dealer in the description of paper which he proposes to furnish.

The precise question involved in this case, Mr. President, as I understand, is that certain bidders, the plaintiffs in this proceeding, put in a bid. It is admittedly the lowest bid; but they failed to file such a bond as the statute requires, and on that account the committee rejected their bid. To my mind, to say the least, the question involved in this controversy is surely a mooted one. It involves the construction of a statute of Congress; and, to my mind, that is a judicial question for the determination of the courts.

In the main part of the resolution reported by the committee I concur, because it simply expresses an opinion. It states that it is the opinion of the committee that the action of the judge was an invasion of the privileges and prerogatives of the Senate; but when the resolution goes a step further, Mr. President, and practically forbids the members of the committee to appear in court and raise the question of jurisdiction, I think it goes too far.

While this is a Government of three departments, each moving within its own sphere and scope, yet there is a certain comity that one branch of the Government owes to the others. I do not conceive it beneath the dignity of this body, nor do I conceive that it is the sacrifice of any of our constitutional rights, to allow these Senators, in their discretion, to appear in court and plead to the want of jurisdiction in the court to proceed; the want of jurisdiction being the fact that this is a privileged matter within the scope and purview of the legislative department of the Government, and hence that the court has no jurisdiction.

I think it is an elementary proposition of law that whenever a suit is instituted in any court or forum, the court or forum must, in the first instance, pass upon the question of whether it has jurisdiction or not. In this case a judicial proceeding is instituted. It is for the court, in the first instance, to pass upon that question of jurisdiction.

Now, let us look at the question from another standpoint. If we assume that the court has no jurisdiction and that we have the sole jurisdiction, the only way to bring that question to a direct and forcible issue would be for us to bring the judge of the court who issued the rule to show cause before the Senate for contempt of this body and the rules, privileges, and prerogatives of this body.

This question has for many years undergone debate and discussion in the courts of England. I will not take the time of the Senate to read the later decisions of the courts in that country, although I have them here; but the later opinions of the courts there are that whenever a suit is instituted against a member of Parliament and he pleads privilege, or the privilege is claimed for him, the court has a right, in the first instance, and it is the duty of the court, to pass upon that privilege.

Mr. President, I am as ready as any Senator in this body to stand for the rights and dignity of the Senate; but I feel, if I may use a vigorous expression, perhaps not as polite as it might be, that while we should be ready to assert our rights, we never ought to go around with chips on our shoulders. I think it will be no more than the courtesy we owe to the judicial department of the Government to say to that department that, "in our opinion, you have exceeded your authority and your jurisdiction, and neither the Senate of the United States nor a committee of that body is amenable to your jurisdiction."

Here is a cause of action predicated upon an act of Congress—not upon a resolution of a single House or a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, but upon an act of Congress—designating the Joint Committee on Printing. It provides for a joint committee of the two Houses, and the law itself prescribes the duties of the members of that committee. Are we the sole judges of whether they have performed the statutory duty entailed upon them by an act of Congress, or is not that a matter that is appropriate for the consideration of the court?

I submit these questions to the consideration of the Senate. Although, as I said a moment ago, I am greatly in doubt about whether it is a matter of privilege, I am willing to go to the extent of stating that, in my opinion, it is a question of privilege and that the action of the court is an invasion of the privileges and prerogatives of the Senate. I think, however, as a matter of comity and justice, the three Senators who have been served with process from this court should have, in their discretion, the privilege of appearing in the court and pleading to the jurisdiction and asserting the privileges of this body and their own privileges as members of this body. That is the proposition about which we differ.

I am unwilling to longer take up the time of the Senate in elaborating this question. I simply aimed briefly to state my view on the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am not entirely satisfied with the conclusion of the resolution as reported. I think perhaps a course which differs a little from that proposed by the Judiciary Committee and from that proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] might be more consonant with the dignity of the Senate and with the respect which we owe to the judicial branch of our Government. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate unduly, but I think the matter is a somewhat serious one; at all events, any question of conflict between two branches of the Government is liable to become serious as it develops.

The subject of printing is an exceptional one in the operations of our Government. The printing of the RECORD, and of bills, resolutions, amendments, and documents arising in the course of each day's business in the Senate and in the House of Representatives is a matter essential to the conduct of legislative business. We have substituted printing for the old-fashioned engrossment by clerks at their desks. We could not continue our business a day except through the performance of this aid to our information and to our deliberations. Therefore the Congress has made an exception of the public printing from all other parts or kinds of governmental activity. It has seen fit not to intrust it to any executive department, but has kept in its own hands, so far as it relates to the business of Congress during the sessions of Congress, the supervision of its printing and directs it through a committee of its own.

The Joint Committee on Printing long antedates any statute. The retention of control over this essential part of the conduct of the legislative business in the hands of Congress itself existed long before the act of 1895. That act but regulates the control over this essential part of the conduct of our business. It provides that there shall be a Public Printer, whose business it is to make the contracts and to execute the orders of Congress, and every day from the desks in both Houses of Congress there pours forth a stream of orders to that Public Printer to do things essential to the conduct of our business, and it provides that this work shall be done by him under the supervision and the direction of our committee.

Mr. President, one of the things that the Public Printer is directed to do, under the supervision and direction of the committee, is the purchase of paper. He is directed to advertise for bids, and it is provided that the bids shall be opened in the presence of the committee. I beg the attention of the Senate to the terms of the provision regulating the duties of that committee upon the opening of the bids. The provision is that the committee shall award a contract to the bidder whose bid is lowest and best for the interests of the Government—not lowest, but lowest and best for the interests of the Government. Never were words more clear in imposing upon a public officer the duty of exercising discretion and judgment. Never was there a clearer case, a more apt illustration of the universal, unquestioned rule that where the exercise of discretion is required from a public officer no court can require him, by mandamus or any process whatever, to exercise that discretion in one way or another. That is the rule as to all public officers. The court may require an officer to act. When there is discretion no court can tell him how to act.

We have not before us the proceeding upon which this proceeding goes or the allegations which the relator presented to the court as the grounds for the mandamus that he asks, but in the resolution which was presented by the Committee on Printing there is this recital, which I assume to be a correct statement:

> Whereas it is prayed by the said plaintiffs, or petitioners, that a writ of mandamus issue directing said members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, to wit, that they withdraw awards which have heretofore been made and that they award certain contracts to the plaintiffs.

Manifestly, if the court issues such a writ of mandamus to this committee, it is taking out of the hands of the committee, where we have placed it—the committee that is subject to our control always, because it is our committee—the power to exercise the discretion and judgment we have commanded them to exercise and is substituting the judgment and discretion of the court. Manifestly the court has no power. There can not be even discussion on that, because it is settled both on principle and by authority.

If such an order were to go to an ordinary officer in an executive department, there would be but a simple duty before him, and that would be to respond to the rule to show cause and present to the court the reasons why the mandamus ought not to issue. But the situation is a little different here, it seems to me, for the reason I have suggested, that the matter itself is one essential to the conduct of the business of the National Legislature, and therefore we have intrusted it to the authority of a committee of our own number. We have intrusted that discretion to them.

These gentlemen hold no office except the office of Senators of the United States. They have received no appointment from any appointing power except their election by their legislatures to be members of this body. They have taken no oath to discharge the duties of any office except the oath to discharge their duties as Senators of the United States. They are performing a duty as Senators, and those members of the committee from the House are performing a duty as Representatives in Congress under the sanction of their oath as legislators and in the discharge of the duty imposed upon them by us in pursuance of the policy which bids us keep within our own hands and under our own control this activity which is essential to the conduct of our business and to our legislative independence.

When a court undertakes to call before it such a committee and require it to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue against it to compel it to exercise in a particular way the discretion that it holds from us, I think a different situation arises from that which exists when an ordinary executive or administrative officer is called upon. It is a fundamental rule that there are certain matters which are essential to the existence and effective life of a legislative body in respect of which the courts can not interfere. The qualifications of the members of the body, the maintenance of order, the discipline of members, everything that is essential to the life and due performance of its functions by a legislative body, are beyond the reach of any court.

It is not necessary that exclusive power over such matters shall be expressly vested in the body, for it is inherent in the nature of the body. Many times courts have undertaken it, and always the conclusion has been that if the matter in question is a matter essential to the independence of the legislative body that body alone can deal with it and no court can interfere.

Mr. President, I think that this matter is not only a plain attempt by a court to control that discretion which the law forbids a court to control, but that it does trench upon the independence of the legislative branch by undertaking to assume control over a matter which is essential to the conduct of our business; and I should not be satisfied, sir, to see it dealt with merely by permitting individual members of a committee to go before a court and at their own expense, upon the suggestion of their own minds, defend, assert, protect this matter which is our matter, not theirs. The question whether the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall control the printing is not a question of this committee. It is a question of this Senate. We do not appoint the Committee on Printing to defend our right to legislative independence. We appoint them to supervise the printing. This is not a question of printing. It is a question of the relative power of two great departments of the Government. It is not the committee's question, but our question. It seems to me it would be wholly inadequate to permit these gentlemen to go, one by one, to do what seems to him appropriate regarding his own personal relation to this transaction.

On the other hand, I do not think that the respect we owe to the judicial branch of our Government should permit us to pass over the matter without some further and other action than the simple adoption of the resolution. It is true that in the case of Marbury v. Madison, which is the foundation of so much of our law affecting the powers of the courts over executive officers, there was no appearance whatever for or by the Secretary of State, and that great case was argued solely on behalf of the applicant for the writ of mandamus and was worked out by the court in the absence of any respondent. The proposal of the Judiciary Committee would lead to a like result in the court of the District of Columbia.

But it seems to me, sir, it would be more seemly, more respectful, for the Senate itself to direct its appropriate officer to communicate to the court its views regarding this rule to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator from New York will pardon me for a moment, it is the intention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to make such a motion, provided the resolution is adopted. It was not included in the resolution itself, because it was felt that the resolution stood simply as a declaration of the view of the Senate upon the subject-matter.

Mr. ROOT. That would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator from New York, I should like to add a word to what the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has stated. The fact is that that matter was discussed in the Judiciary Committee, and the purpose that is indicated by the chairman of the committee was the purpose of the committee—that such motion should be made and that it should be respectfully communicated to the court.

Mr. ROOT. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has been recognized.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator from Utah may proceed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think I am quite as jealous of the rights and privileges and prerogatives of the Senate as a member of it, but I also think that no man is so high as to be above the law, and I think no institution is so high as to be above the law. If any member of this body is proceeding in an unlawful manner, the only place where that can be finally determined, in my judgment, is in the courts of the country. Under the Constitution of the United States certain immunities and privileges are granted to the Members of Congress. One of them is that no Member of Congress shall be subjected to arrest for certain specified offenses during the time Congress is in session. But if any Member of Congress should be arrested, I undertake to say, he would not bring his case to this body to determine whether he should appear in court. He would obey the warrant of the court, appear in court, plead his privilege, and subject himself to the judgment of the court.

Another privilege which is granted by the Constitution of the United States is that no Member of this or the other body shall be held to answer for any words uttered in debate; and yet, if any Member of either body was sued in an action of slander for any words uttered in debate, either upon the floor of the Senate or in a committee—to which the same privilege extends, as I understand—he would not bring his case to the Senate to determine whether he should answer, but he would plead his privilege in the court, and the court would determine it.

While I am inclined to agree with the position of the Senator from New York and with the position outlined in this resolution, that the members of the Printing Committee are performing a legislative duty, still I think the question is not by any means free from doubt, and I am far from being clear in my own mind about it. I think it is a fairly debatable question, upon which lawyers of ability may well differ, as to whether or not the duties imposed by this law upon the Printing Committee are legislative in character or are purely ministerial in character.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question right here?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the question simply because I have not heard the debate so far. I want to ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, if the same authority had been conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior that has been conferred upon this committee, and the Secretary of the Interior was carrying out that law, it would be legislative business or would it be purely executive business; would he be acting in an executive capacity or in a legislative capacity? And following that up, if it is an executive capacity on the part of the Secretary of the Interior, is it any the less executive because it is being carried out by a committee of Senators?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from North Dakota has anticipated by his question what I was just about to say next. The law under which this committee is constituted has been referred to by the Senator from Minnesota, and is to be found on page 601 of the Twenty-eighth Statutes at Large. Section 5 of that act provides, as the Senator from New York has already stated, that the sealed proposals to furnish paper shall be submitted to the Joint Committee on Printing, and the contracts shall be awarded by them to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government.

Section 8 provides that in case of difference of opinion between the Public Printer and any contractor for paper respecting its quality, the matter of difference shall be determined by the Joint Committee on Printing or by the Secretary of the Interior when Congress is not in session, and the decision of the Joint Committee on Printing or of the Secretary of the Interior shall be final as to the United States.

Now, it is rather a grave question, as it appears to me, whether or not an act when performed by one body of men is a legislative act and when performed by another body of men or by another individual becomes an administrative act. I do not understand that you can determine whether an act is judicial in character, legislative in character, or administrative in character by ascertaining the person who is to discharge it. That is to be determined by the character of the act itself; and that has been decided over and over again by the courts of the country. So if the act which the Joint Committee on Printing is performing under this statute is a legislative act when performed by it, it must of necessity be a legislative act when performed by the Secretary of the Interior. And yet we have no power to confer upon the Secretary of the Interior any legislative authority.

If, upon the other hand, we are to justify the act of the Secretary of the Interior upon the ground that he is performing an administrative act, then the same act when performed by the Joint Committee on Printing must be an administrative act likewise, and in either case they are amenable to the process of the courts.

I recognize the force of the statement which the Senator from New York makes that in all probability these people would not be amenable to this sort of process, because they are called upon to exercise their discretion, but that is not a question for the Senate to determine. That is a question for the court to determine. That defense could be made by an individual the same as by a member of the Senate, and it is aside from the question we are now considering.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. Suppose the court were to decide that these Senators were subject to its jurisidction and ignore the plea of privilege; then what?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I would advise them to contest it and take it to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, suppose that the Supreme Court of the United States decided that way.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I would advise them to yield to the decision of the Supreme Court, the same as any good citizen is compelled to do.

Mr. TILLMAN. And the Senate would disappear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senate is compelled to disappear very often, Mr. President. We pass laws here. It is true the courts can not interfere with us in discharging that function to begin with, but time and again the courts declare laws passed by Congress unconstitutional, and we yield to them. Is there any invasion of the prerogatives of the Senate or the prerogatives of Congress in that? The only difference is that the action of the court in that case is taken after the action of Congress. But they declare in the one case as much as in the other that the Congress or the committee has no power to do the thing which they have undertaken to do. We pass laws here and they go before the courts of the country, and the Supreme Court of the United States declares that Congress in passing the laws was outside its constitutional authority and we submit to it, the same as the people of the country submit to it.

Mr. TILLMAN. That would be a constitutional question. This would be a question of privilege and prerogative, keeping the coordinate branches of the Government separate and having each independent of the other.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the very question we are trying to settle. Let me put an illustration to the Senator from South Carolina. Suppose that the Senate were to pass a resolution, or Congress were to pass a law devolving upon the Committee on the Judiciary the authority to hear and try and determine the question as to whether or not some citizen or group of citizens had committed some offense, and they were proceeding to hear it and try it and determine it, would the Senator from South Carolina think that the courts were powerless in that sort of a case to interfere? The committees of Congress are not——

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not imagine Congress being such a fool as to pass a law like that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Neither can I.

Mr. TILLMAN. Therefore the analogy does not hold good at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The illustration is an extreme one, but sometimes it is necessary to use extreme illustrations to point the truth of an argument. That is what I am undertaking to do here. I am undertaking to show that the committees of Congress are not always and under all circumstances entirely above the law.

Now, the courts have time and again pointed out the distinction for which I am contending. While I do not intend to weary the Senate, I want to call attention to one of the early cases. I direct attention to the case of Hayburn in the second Dallas. That was a case where Congress had undertaken to devolve upon a court the power to try and determine a question which was not a judicial question. The Supreme Court itself did not pass upon the question, but the judges who were constituted to hear it did pass upon it, and in the course of their opinion they use this language:

> That by the Constitution of the United States the Government thereof is divided into three distinct and independent branches, and that it is the duty of each to abstain from and to oppose encroachments on either. That neither the legislative nor the executive branches can constitutionally assign to the judicial any duties but such as are properly judicial, and to be performed in a judicial manner.

And so the legislative branch of the Government can not arrogate to itself any duty which is not legislative. It can not confer the power upon the judiciary to do anything that is not judicial. It can not confer upon the executive branch the power to do anything that is not of an administrative character, and it can not arrogate to itself any power to do anything that is not legislative in character. If it may do that and not be amenable in some form or other to the courts, we have a wrong without a remedy, something which the law books tell us can not very well exist.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. If there was in this instance fraud, dishonesty; if this award was contrary to sound public policy, and there was, as I said, dishonesty or fraud involved, is not the remedy to apply to the Senate and to have the petitioner prove that its committees had acted dishonestly rather than to go to the courts?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the committee is undertaking to discharge a purely legislative function, I undertake to say that the Senate has not any more power to deal with it than the committee has. The whole question is whether it is a legislative function or an administrative function which they are undertaking to perform.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is the law which the Senator quoted and which the Senator from New York quoted, anything more than a rule?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is very much more than a rule. It is a law.

Mr. TILLMAN. In what respect is it different from a rule of the Senate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A rule of the Senate is a matter which is adopted by the Senate alone, to govern its internal——

Mr. TILLMAN. We could just as easily have directed how the printing should be done by a rule as we did by a statute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator did not hear me through. A rule of the Senate is simply adopted for the purpose of regulating its internal affairs. This goes fairly beyond that, because the law provides not only that this committee shall superintend the printing for both Houses of Congress, but all the government publications, the publications of the executive department, as well as the publications of the Senate and the House.

Mr. TILLMAN. Nevertheless, it seems to me that it is nothing more than a rule governing their functions and explaining and defining what they shall do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, a law is a rule, in a sense. I think the definition that Mr. Blackstone gives—it is some time since I read it—is that a law is a rule of conduct. But a law of Congress differs materially from a mere rule of the Senate, which is only a rule without being a law.

This question is not an absolutely new one. Congress has before undertaken to devolve upon committees functions which they ought not to have devolved upon them as committees. Some years ago a resolution was passed in the House of Representatives providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate the business affairs of certain business men. The committee met and undertook to do that, and called a witness before them and interrogated him. He declined to answer. The committee then undertook to imprison him for contempt, and did imprison him for contempt. The individual was not willing to submit to that sort of treatment, and he brought an action against the members of the committee and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to recover damages for false imprisonment. It was not thought in that case that the privileges of the House had been invaded so that the House was called upon to do anything about it; but the members of the committee appeared in court and pleaded their privilege. Finally the case reached the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court held that in that case the claim was well taken, that what the Members of the House had done was privileged. They held, in substance, that the constitutional provision with reference to words uttered in debate applied not only to words uttered on the floor and to words uttered in the committee, but it applied to all acts performed by them as legislators. But they appeared in court and pleaded privilege; and I see no reason why the Joint Printing Committee should not likewise appear in court and plead their privilege—that what they were doing was by virtue of their offices as Senators of the United States. I am inclined to think that the court would sustain the plea.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I would ask the Senator from Utah, suppose they should appear and plead their privilege and the court should decide against the committee, what would be the result so far as controlling the business of the Senate is concerned?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know what the result would be, and I do not care, if it is the proper thing to do, and I think it is. I do not imagine that the business of the Senate is going to be interfered with if the courts should determine—which they might do, and I think there would be some justification for the determination, although it is not my own opinion—that although the Joint Committee on Printing is called a committee, in substance and effect it is only a board. They would simply interfere with that commission to that extent. They would not interfere with the regular legislative committees of the Senate in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator in addition to that, if the court should decide against the contention of the committee, what effect would it have as to controlling that which is essential to the discharge of our legislative duties here? This is a part and parcel, and an essential and indispensable part of the duties of the Senate, a part of that which it must do in order to perform the functions of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, we are appointing Senators upon boards. We have members of this body who have membership on the board of the Smithsonian Institution. When they are acting upon that board are they discharging legislative functions? If they undertake to do something that the law does not warrant and invade the rights of the citizen, are they not amenable to the courts precisely the same as if they were not Senators, and precisely the same as their associates upon the board who are not Members of either House of Congress?

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the Senator, not intentionally of course, does not answer the question which I ask him, not for the purpose of contradiction but for the purpose of information. What would be the effect as to the power of the Senate controlling that which is essential to the discharge of its functions and duties if the courts should control the question of printing for it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The courts do not control the question of printing, except to the extent of entering the proper judgment. If the Joint Committee on Printing, acting under the law, were doing something that the law did not warrant, and thereby invading the rights of the parties who have brought suit, it would not interfere with their functions in any way whatever, any more than when an action is brought against an executive officer of the Government his functions are interfered with—any further than they are involved in that particular case. I can not see where any great harm is to result from that situation.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this question further. I am opposed to the resolution in its present form, and I thought I ought to say that much about it. It does not seem to me that the dignity of the Senate or the dignity of Congress is going to be in any way outraged by permitting these Senators and these Members of the other House to appear in court in the regular way and plead the privilege which is guaranteed to them as Members of Congress. I can not imagine that the dignity of the Senate is offended in any way whatever by that proceeding any more than the dignity of the House was offended or outraged by the appearance of those members of the committee in the Kilbourn case, to which I have just directed attention. I think we may well express our views upon the question as to whether they are entitled to this privilege, and we ought to authorize them, or direct them, to appear in the court and plead their privilege.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I recognize, of course, as suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], that it is a very grave matter whenever there is any conflict, actual or threatened, between the different departments of the Government. I recognize that whenever a question of that kind arises it should be treated with the utmost care, and that one department, in dealing with it, should treat the other department with the utmost respect. Therefore in what I shall say I am not unmindful of the courtesy and respect which are due from the legislative department to the judicial department.

I think that this is a matter not simply involving the dignity of the Senate. That is important, and I am always in favor of maintaining the dignity of the Senate. But, in my judgment, it is a question which in itself, in the principles which are involved, and the results which may follow in regard to it, is vital to the very life of the legislative department. In other words, as I shall endeavor to show in the few remarks which I shall make, the exercise of this power by the courts, if recognized by the legislative department, puts the preservation of the inherent powers of Congress within the keeping of the judicial department, and can lead to the utter overthrow of the powers of the legislative department.

Senators, I think, make a great mistake in confusing the privileges of an individual Senator and the immunities of an individual Senator with those things which constitute the rights and prerogatives of the Senate itself. If the mandate of the court violates the privileges or immunities of the individual Senator, it is his duty to appear in the court and plead his personal privilege or immunity. In so doing he does not put in jeopardy the prerogatives of the Senate. But that is not the case here at this time. As has been suggested, this is not a matter which concerns the members of this committee individually. It is not a matter that concerns them officially in their own persons. If the Senators cited by the court appear in obedience to the mandate, it is not to plead individually and personally their personal privileges and immunities, but to plead the prerogatives of the Senate. That is a matter which concerns the Senate, and when this committee is cited to appear before a court it is the same as if the Senate were cited to appear before that court, and the cases found in the books where Senators or Representatives have appeared in court to plead their personal privilege or immunity have absolutely nothing to do with the question before us. The rule is entirely different when the mandate of the court is directed against the Senate or its committee.

The reason for the distinction is easily apparent. Without exception, every citizen, whatever be his station or office, is subject to the jurisdiction of the courts. When the process of a court is directed against him, he must appear and, if for any reason he enjoys a privilege or immunity which exempts him, he must plead such privilege or immunity. But the courts have no jurisdiction over the Congress, or either branch of it, either to command, restrain, or prohibit it, in the performance of its constitutional legislative functions. Therefore no process of a court can be legally issued or directed against the Congress, or against either branch of it, or against its committee. A Senator, being not only a Senator, but also a citizen, must, in a matter which concerns him personally, appear and plead his privilege or immunity as a Senator, if such there is in the case. But the Senate is not to plead before any tribunal its constitutional prerogatives, and it is never to appear in any court for such purpose. Each of the three coordinate branches of the Government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—is the guardian and final judge of its own constitutional prerogatives.

What is a committee of this body? There are certain duties which it is inconvenient for the body as a whole to perform, certain work which it can not conveniently do as a whole body, and therefore the device has been adopted, and is followed in all legislative bodies, of organizing certain members of those bodies into committees, and devolving upon them certain duties as the representative of the entire body. Work is committed to them which, because of inconvenience, the entire legislative body could not collectively perform. When that committee is one of the Senate and is assailed, when its act is called in question, when its authority is disputed, when restraints are sought to be put upon it or commands to be laid upon it, it is the same as if the assault were upon the Senate and the same as if those restraints and those commands were addressed to the Senate.

Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from New York, there are certain things which are essential to the life of a body, without which it can not exist and in the determination of which it itself must necessarily be supreme and accountable to no other body. Each department of the Government has, especially under a written constitution, those prerogatives and those powers which are thus inherent in it and vital to its life, which can not be interfered with by another department, and which each department must determine for itself. This question now before us is, I think, one which involves these powers.

By way of illustration, Mr. President, we pass laws which courts are to administer, but we can not dictate to a court what it shall determine in any given case. Suppose that Congress should pass a law requiring a court to find a judgment in a given case according to the directions in that statute, what would be the act of the court? Would it do anything else than simply disregard it? Suppose, Mr. President, that we should enact a statute that the President of the United States should nominate a certain man to be ambassador to England or to France, what would the Executive do? It is his prerogative under the Constitution to nominate the ambassador to either of those countries or to any other country; and if we were to invade his province and attempt to dictate that he should nominate a certain party for the office, there would be but one thing for the Executive to do, and that would be to ignore such action of the legislative body.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask the Senator a question, if it will not disturb the line of his argument. Suppose we pass this resolution, and the Senators who are sued, following its instruction—which they would, of course—fail to put in an appearance and plead this privilege. The court thereupon enters a default, proceeds to a hearing ex parte, and renders judgment against them; it issues a final mandamus directing them to do this act. They then decline, on the advice of the Senate, to perform the act, and proceedings for contempt are instituted. They refuse to come into court, and the power of the officers of the executive department is invoked to force them into court. In the ultimate result, must we not appeal to the courts? The Senate and the House certainly can not continue an unseemly struggle with the courts of the country, with a resort to force upon both sides. There must be some place where and some time when that question must be finally determined, and is it not to be determined by the courts of the country ultimately?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will yield for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the inquiry of the honorable Senator is absolutely foreign to the particular branch of the subject which I was endeavoring to present to the Senate. I will come to it at a later point in what I will say.

I was speaking, Mr. President, first, as to what is our right and our duty. As to what shall be our action is another question, and I shall endeavor to answer the Senator before I conclude.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BACON. I will, if the Senator will ask me a question upon the line I am on now.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I will, Mr. President. If I correctly understood the precise point which the Senator is now discussing, or which is under discussion at any rate, the question which bothers me is this, Is it legally possible for a Senator to act as a Senator in executing a law already passed by Congress?

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator I am coming to those points. The Senator will kindly permit me to answer it when I reach the particular place.

Mr. CUMMINS. I certainly will. I thought the Senator had assumed that the Senate was acting as a Senate or through a committee of the Senate in the execution of the law now under consideration.

Mr. BACON. The Senator anticipates what must necessarily be taken up before the question is concluded, and I will get to it as rapidly as I can. I shall not forget the question of the Senator, and I would have discussed it if he had not asked the question, because it lies directly in the path and can not be avoided. It is the central matter of controversy in the whole case and necessarily could not be ignored.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States is an independent branch of the Government, and in the performance of its legislative functions is independent of control by any other branch of the Government. When we have exercised our function in the enactment of a law, there is another branch of the Government which is authorized under our Constitution, as it has been construed, to say whether or not it is a valid law, passed in pursuance of the Constitution; but in all the work we do in the performance of our necessary functions as legislators it is a matter within our supreme, absolute, unconditional control. If the Senator will pardon me a little while until I make my statement, I will then listen to him with great pleasure.

Mr. President, there has been so far developed little or no issue upon the proposition that this is an invasion of the prerogatives of the Senate. So far as it has been developed by the argument in opposition to the report of the committee, it is a contention that, conceding it to be an invasion of the prerogatives of the Senate, proper respect for a coordinate branch of the Government, or an officer of it, requires that we should appear in the court and plead that fact.

There is a contention which has been suggested, and which has been adverted to by the Senator from Iowa in the question which he directed to me, that this statute lays upon the Senators and Representatives composing the joint committee administrative or executive duties, and that therefore, while as legislators they would not be subject to the processes of the court, as such administrative or executive officers they are subject to the processes of the court.

Now, let us examine that for a moment. There are some things, Mr. President, which are elementary, the mere statement of which proves them without argument. I submit to the Senate that one of these elementary propositions is that no legislative body can confer upon a committee any powers which it does not itself possess. While this is true in all cases when subjected to thorough examination, it is more pointedly true in a case where a legislative body derives its powers, as Congress does, from a written Constitution, in which the powers of the Members of Congress are defined and limited. That is a general principle—that no legislative body can confer upon a committee any powers which the legislative body itself does not possess. Applying that to the Congress, no committee of either House or joint committee of the two Houses can have conferred upon it by Congress any power that Congress itself does not possess.

There is no question of the fact—I presume no lawyer will for a moment suggest it—that Congress has any power or any function except a legislative power. The only possible exception is where either House is called upon in a certain contingency to elect a President or Vice-President, or, perhaps, the two Houses in joint session to count the electoral vote and declare who has been elected as President. It is not necessary to discuss that exception in any manner, nor is it necessary even to mention it as an exception, because we are dealing with the general, ordinary duties of Congress, with the proper, essential duties of Congress.

I say I presume there is no lawyer who will contend for a moment that Congress has any power except a legislative power. It must follow logically that Congress can not confer upon any committee executive powers. It can not confer upon any committee anything else than legislative powers. If such additional powers can be conferred in one instance, there is no limit to the additional powers which may be thus conferred. If Congress can confer executive power upon its committees, it can also confer judicial powers upon them. If it can confer one executive power or one judicial power, it can confer all executive and all judicial power upon its committees. If so, by breaking itself up into a sufficient number of these committees and thus conferring upon themselves executive and judicial powers Congress may thus absorb to itself all the powers of the Government. This is the reductio ad absurdam. Necessarily it must follow, logically, that this joint committee is a committee in its work clothed only with the powers of legislation, and in the performance of its work it is performing a legislative duty, and, as has been pointed out by the honorable Senator from New York, under the terms of that statute not only performing a duty, but performing a duty in which it is vested with a discretion.

One of two things must be true. If it be true that Congress can not confer upon a committee any powers which it does not possess, either the powers conferred by this act are legislative powers and the committee is engaged in legislative work and duty, or else if they are executive powers they are unconstitutional and nobody would have a right to claim anything under them. The court necessarily has judicial cognizance of the powers as well as of the prerogatives of Congress. If the committee is engaged in legislative work the court can not call its act in question. If, on the contrary, it is engaged in executive work, the act conferring such power upon a legislative committee would be unconstitutional and the complainant would have no right thereunder. In saying this I do not express a doubt that the committee is engaged in the performance of a legislative duty, for I have no such doubt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from Georgia think that Congress would be powerless to confer upon a Member of Congress the power to do these things? In other words, is there anything incompatible between membership in the Senate or the House and the discharge of the duty which we have devolved upon this joint committee?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it would certainly be inconsistent, if it were an executive duty, for two reasons: In the first place, Congress would not have any power to impose executive duty upon its committee; and, in the second place, if Congress does attempt to do it, it would be in conflict, if it is an executive function, with the provision in the Constitution which makes any Member of Congress ineligible to hold any other office while a Member of Congress.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That would depend upon whether this was an office of the United States. But let me put this question further to the Senator. The Senator, I think, is a member of the Smithsonian Board.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is appointed under authority of Congress.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is the Senator discharging legislative functions as a member of that board, or executive functions?

Mr. BACON. I say that is not an office of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think this is not an office of the United States.

Mr. BACON. If he is performing executive functions for the Government of the United States, he must necessarily hold an executive office.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We may have agents, we may have employees, to do things for the Government of the United States who are not officers. Some of the tests of public office are entirely lacking in this case.

Mr. BACON. I contend, Mr. President, that a Member of Congress can not be an employee of the United States, and if the Senator——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that employees do not execute laws?

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. BAILEY. They perform duties below the dignity of executing a law.

Mr. BACON. They certainly do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator concede that this committee is executing the law?

Mr. BACON. The committee is doing what Congress itself could do without a committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me if the Senator concedes that this committee is engaged in that, he concedes his case.

Mr. BACON. If that is the case, then every committee is executing the law, because every committee is performing a certain work. It would be perfectly competent for the Congress of the United States itself to award a contract for the purchase of paper for printing and provide who should furnish the paper and what should be paid for it. The committee is simply doing that which it is perfectly competent for Congress to itself do by statute. That is another reason why it is plainly a legislative duty. It is a legislative duty, being performed by its committee, because it could be performed by Congress by a statute. It is a legislative duty, being thus performed, because Congress can not devolve upon its Members anything more than a legislative duty; and if Congress attempts to devolve upon a Member of Congress a duty other than a legislative duty, it is unconstitutional, null, and void.

It is vain by refinement of reasoning to contend that a congressional committee, so named and appointed as such, is not in fact a legislative committee, and is therefore subject to the mandate of a court. By similar refinement the same contention can be made as to other committees, and, with the jurisdiction of the courts recognized to determine the issue, Congress will proceed with its work subject to the orders of the courts.

Mr. President, I want to come to the practical question. There are some Senators who agree with the proposition that this is an invasion of the prerogatives of the Senate who still think that it is due to the court that the Senators who have been cited to appear should appear, some of them say, to plead their personal privilege; others say to plead the fact which we assert—that it is an invasion of the prerogatives of the Senate. When we appear in the court we necessarily submit ourselves to the jurisdiction of the court. When we submit ourselves to the jurisdiction of the court we necessarily obligate ourselves to abide the judgment of the court.

Whenever we come to the point that the court can call the Senate or a committee of the Senate before it for the purpose of deciding and determining as to the rights and prerogatives of the Senate in the performance of its legislative functions, we have ourselves forever abandoned the right to assert and protect our constitutional prerogatives, and have left them to the determination of another branch of the Government.

It will not do to say, Mr. President, that there is warrant for doubt as to the interpretation of this law and that, therefore, the court might be left to its determination. Whenever we concede the proposition that a court has the right to call in question the action of the Senate or the action of a committee of the Senate in the performance of its legislative duties, we can not draw the line when they attempt to assert that authority in an unreasonable case, however unreasonable it may be, because in such case the court would be the judge of the reasonableness of the ground on which action by the court is based. If we have come to the point where, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] says, we must abide the judgment of the court, whatever it may be, then we are utterly dependent upon the judicial department for permission for the exercise of our prerogatives.

Let me give an illustration, Mr. President. We have another joint committee now sitting, charged with the duty, under a joint resolution, which has the force and effect of law, in the investigation of the Interior Department and of every officer in the Interior Department. There is an elaborate provision of law in which the duties of this committee are set out in detail. They are charged with the investigation not only of the Interior Department generally, but of the acts of officers of that department.

We know from things which have been said and things which have been published that there are in this investigation charges which go to the question of the personal and official honor of high officers of the Government, and questions which, if the charges are sustained, might lead to the determination of the official life of high officers of the Government. Certainly no man could have greater interest in the proceedings of an inquiring body than these men have in the proceedings of that joint committee now sitting in the Office Building of the Senate under this joint resolution.

Suppose, Mr. President, that one of these officers thus being investigated should offer a piece of evidence before that committee, and the committee should in its wisdom say that it was not legitimate evidence and should exclude the evidence, would that officer have the right to go before a court in the District of Columbia and say, "My personal and official honor, dearer to me than any property right, is at stake; my official tenure of office is at stake, which involves also the question of my honor if I am to be deprived of it in this way. I have offered before that committee certain testimony which is vital to my case; and which, under the joint resolution, it is the duty of that committee to hear, and that committee has refused to hear it; and I ask you to issue a mandamus to that committee to hear that evidence." Suppose the judicial officer arms the marshal of the District of Columbia with a writ of mandamus and sends him to the Senate Office Building to go before that committee with an order from the judge to hear that testimony, would that not be a parallel case? It is one which comes to us at this time with great force, but it is one absolutely on all fours with the proposition that, because a man has a property right and he claims that right under a statute, and that a committee of Congress is proceeding under a statute, therefore the court shall be permitted to command a committee of Congress, also acting under a joint resolution having all the force and effect of a statute, as to what it shall do in the execution of the order of Congress as to a thing vital to the performance of the legislative duties of Congress.

Well, Mr. President, if there is any argument—and in courtesy to differing Senators I concede there is—in the contention that for the maintenance of a property right a committee of Congress can be enjoined or can be mandamused, the case which I have supposed, involving personal honor and tenure of office, is one which might be presented with equal, if not greater, force. But if you concede the proposition that a court is at any time to determine when there is a case justifying judicial interference in the work of Congress, you can not at another time deny it and say when they come to attempt to exercise that authority in an unreasonable case, "While you were reasonable before, while there was some doubt before, we then submitted to your jurisdiction, but there is none now, and therefore we will not now submit to your jurisdiction." If you are going to submit to the jurisdiction of a court to enjoin or to mandamus a committee of Congress in one case and do not determine that for yourselves, then your mouth is closed forever when a court seeks to mandamus or restrict or enjoin a committee of Congress upon any ground which the court itself may deem proper and sufficient. For I repeat, the right to interfere being conceded to the court, the question of what is a sufficient and proper ground of interference is a question solely for the court.

Mr. President, we have asked Senators—I do not know that we have asked them in this debate, but in our private discussion of this matter—suppose that these Senators should appear before the court and the court should refuse to recognize the correctness of the proposition which we present, that their act is an unlawful invasion of the prerogatives of the Senate and shall order the case to proceed to trial, what then? Some Senators, at least in private conversation, have suggested that that would be time enough to say, "Well, we will not submit to it;" but what an absurd proposition it is that we will go into a court and plead to the jurisdiction with that action on our part in contemplation. If the court decides with us, well and good; if the court decides against us, we will say, "Well, we will now assert our right to disregard your mandate."

Mr. President, if we are going to assert our right to disregard the mandate at any time, the only dignified and proper way to do it is in the beginning, and not to submit yourself to a jurisdiction and then deny the legitimate consequences of it afterwards.

Sir, if you admit the right of courts to enjoin the Senate, or to direct the Senate, as I say, we can not draw the line. It will in all cases, then, be for the courts to determine. They can, when their judgment approves, with equal right mandamus the Committee on Claims that they shall award a claim or hear certain testimony with as much propriety, even though there might not be as much basis for their judgment as is contended for in the present case. At the same time, if we concede the proposition that the courts are to determine as to the ground upon which to base the jurisdiction, we can not deny that jurisdiction when they seek to exercise it in any case, I care not how ridiculous it may be. In questions which relate to the inherent and essential constitutional powers of Congress, Congress must necessarily be the sole judge.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] said, in response to a question of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I think it was, "Suppose that the district court decides against the prerogative of the Senate, what then?" The Senator from Utah said the case would go to the Supreme Court. "Then," asked the Senator from South Carolina, "suppose that the Supreme Court decides against the prerogative, what then?" "Then," said the Senator from Utah, "I would submit, as all law-abiding citizens ought to submit, to the decree of that court." The Senator from South Carolina very properly said, "That is to efface the Senate." That necessarily follows, because if it be true that the lower court can assert a jurisdiction and that we have at no time the right to dispute it or deny it, but must go and submit ourselves to its adjudication, then it must follow logically, when that case goes to the Supreme Court, if the Supreme Court determines against our prerogative, it is only a question of the gravity of that prerogative so challenged and disputed, it is only a question as to the extent and breadth of that prerogative, as to whether or not the Senate will be in part crippled by the decision, or whether, as the honorable Senator from South Carolina says, it will be entirely effaced.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the position—and it seems to be the position on both sides of the Senate—is correct, as I believe it is, that the act of this committee is the act of the Senate, as well as an act of discretion on the part of the committee, it would follow, as a matter of course, that whatever judgment the court might enter would be beyond its power, because it had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. That being true, what difference would it make, what difference could it make, whether there be any appearance or not?

Mr. BACON. Well, I do not know whether or not the case might take another direction. Right in connection with the inquiry of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], I want to ask the attention of the Senate to what this order of this court proposes to effect. Here is a contract to be let by a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress—a strictly legislative act which Congress itself could do without appointing any committee. Now, here comes a man, who says: "I am entitled to that contract," and the court calls upon the Senators and Representatives on that committee to appear before it and show cause why they should not award that contract to that man. That is the issue. If, as the Senator from South Dakota suggests, the court should determine in favor of the complainant in the case, what would be the order of the court? An order of the court that the Senate of the United States—for there is no distinction between the Senate and a committee in this particular—shall in the exercise of its high functions obey the order of the court to award the contract to a man to whom it did not originally award it. And after the contract had been awarded in obedience to the mandate of the court, the next step would be a mandamus from the court ordering Congress to appropriate the money due under the contract. It would be worse than idle to concede the authority of the court to mandamus the committee, and deny the authority to the court to mandamus the Congress, by which alone the mandate of the court could be made effectual. Are Senators ready to come to any such conclusion as that, to submit to any such contingency or possibility as that? It is untenable to claim that the court has the right to command the awarding of the contract and deny its right to enforce the observance of the contract in the payment of the money required by it. One contention is as utterly illogical and impossible as is the other.

Senators ask what we are to do in case the court issues a mandate against the Senate, or against its committee, and attempts to enforce it. In the last resort, Mr. President, I have no fears but that Congress is fully armed with all the powers necessary for the defense and vindication of its prerogatives, essential to the preservation and exercise of its inherent authority.

Mr. President, there have been various views expressed by Senators in the discussion of this matter. There are, to my mind, but two views, one of which alone can be correct. I think the view of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the view of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] each is utterly untenable. If it be true that this is an invasion of the prerogatives of the Senate, it is not a question of dignity—although the question of dignity is also involved—but it is a vital question of right of official preservation, of the very life of the Senate, and we ourselves should maintain that prerogative and not leave it to the determination of any other man or any other department of the Government. To destroy the constitutional prerogatives of the Senate is to destroy the Senate. If it be true that it is not an invasion of our prerogatives, as is contended by one or two that I know of, then the conclusion is logical that the Senators of the committee should appear; but unless it is true that it is not an invasion of the prerogative, it seems to me there is but one course to pursue, and that is to say, "We are the judges of our prerogatives in the exercise of our high functions; we are the sole guardians of those prerogatives, and we do not propose to have the matter determined or called in question by any other person or by any other authority." If any party has been aggrieved by the alleged misconduct of a legislative committee he is not without remedy, but the redress of that party can only be found in an appeal to Congress, and it can not be legally found in an appeal to the courts.

Mr. President, I do not desire to further consume the time of the Senate, because I know there are other Senators who desire to be heard, but I thought it due to myself as a member of the Judiciary Committee that I should say this much.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I have been unable to agree with the majority of the members of the Judiciary Committee as to the policy that should be pursued on this subject. In common with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and the Senator from Mineesota [Mr. NELSON], I feel that the proper and dignified thing for the committee to do in this matter is to appear in court and plead to the jurisdiction of the court.

While I appreciate the fact that the Senate is a very high body, and that no committee thereof may be lawfully commanded or restrained by the courts, I nevertheless recognize that under our form of government we submit life, liberty, and property to the courts. We have in this country a very high respect for the courts; and if we hope to see the masses of the people maintain a proper respect for the judicial branch of the Government we should, it seems to me, whenever possible set examples for them to follow.

As has been said here, Mr. President, the question as to whether or not the committee was acting in a ministerial capacity is not altogether free from doubt; but conceding that it is free from doubt, the dignity of the Senate will not be lowered by the committee appearing specially in court and objecting to its jurisdiction.

I have no desire to take up the time of the Senate by entering upon a discussion of the issues involved and content myself with the views I have briefly expressed, which led me to support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. NELSON. There were so few Senators present when my amendment was voted on that I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was rejected, in order that we may have a full vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that his amendment to the pending resolution be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there is no objection to reconsidering the vote, but my impression is that there are no more Senators in the Senate at the present moment than there were then.

Mr. NELSON. I shall call for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no objection whatever to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by him was rejected? The Chair hears none. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. On that I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Before the roll is called I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out at the end of the resolution the following words——

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum. If we are going to have the amendment read, let everybody know what is being voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bailey	Cummins	Jones	Richardson
Borah	Curtis	Kean	Root
Bourne	Depew	La Follette	Smith, Md.
Briggs	Dillingham	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Fletcher	McEnery	Stephenson
Brown	Flint	Martin	Sutherland
Burkett	Foster	Money	Taylor
Burnham	Frye	Nelson	Tillman
Burton	Gallinger	Nixon	Warner
Chamberlain	Gordon	Overman	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Heyburn	Page	Wetmore
Crawford	Hughes	Paynter
Culiom	Johnston	Piles

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I inquire if the yeas and nays have yet been ordered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] the yeas and nays have been ordered. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota is the pending question, and upon that the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BROWN. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to strike out the words—

And said Senators are directed to make no appearance in response thereto—

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That said Senators, without acknowledging the jurisdiction of said court, may, in their discretion, appear therein, for the sole purpose of showing to the court that it is without jurisdiction in the premises and is unlawfully invading the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of the Senate and of said Senators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, and upon that question the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], but I regard this as a matter affecting the privileges of the Senate and one upon which Senators can not be expected to pair. I shall therefore disregard my usual arrangement and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BOURNE (when his name was called). As I am one of the members of the Joint Committee on Printing, I ask to be relieved from voting on this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Oregon will be excused from voting. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], but, following the views of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and heartily agreeing with them, I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Being a member of the Joint Committee, I ask to be excused from voting.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the request of the Senator from Florida will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FLINT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], who is absent. For that reason I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. I inquire whether that Senator has voted on this question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. PAYNTER. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT (when his name was called). As a member of the committee, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My colleague [Mr. BURROWS] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

Mr. PAYNTER. Upon reflection, considering that the question involves the privileges of the Senate, I feel that I can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLINT. As I have heretofore stated, I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], but in a matter of this kind I consider that I have a right to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that on this vote and all other votes which may be had to-day, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY].

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—14.

Brown	Dillingham	McCumber	Piles
Clapp	Flint	Nelson	Sutherland
Cummins	Gallinger	Nixon
Curtis	La Follette	Page

NAYS—45.

Bacon	Crawford	Kean	Smith, Mich.
Bailey	Culiom	Lodge	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Depew	McEnery	Stephenson
Borah	Dick	Martin	Stone
Briggs	du Pont	Money	Taylor
Bristow	Foster	Overman	Tillman
Burkett	Frye	Paynter	Warner
Burnham	Gordon	Penrose	Warren
Burton	Heyburn	Purcell	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Hughes	Richardson
Clark, Wyo.	Johnston	Root
Clay	Jones	Simmons

NOT VOTING—33.

Aldrich	Crane	Gamble	Rayner
Beveridge	Culberson	Gore	Scott
Bourne	Daniel	Guggenheim	Shively
Bradley	Davis	Hale	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Dixon	Lorimer	Smoot
Bulkeley	Dolliver	Newlands	Taliaferro
Burrows	Elkins	Oliver
Carter	Fletcher	Owen
Clarke, Ark.	Frazier	Perkins

So Mr. NELSON's amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to have the resolution read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will again be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senate resolution 177.

Resolved, That Justice Wright, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in granting and issuing the following rule to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be issued, to wit:

In the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

RULE TO SHOW CAUSE.

Upon consideration of the petition of the Valley Paper Company filed herein this 2d day of February, 1910, it is by the court, this 2d day of February, 1910, ordered that the respondents, the said REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, show cause, if any they may have, on or before the 11th day of February, 1910, at 10 o'clock a. m., why a writ of mandamus should not be issued, as prayed in said petition, provided a copy of said petition and this rule be served upon said respondents, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, on or before the 7th day of February, 1910.

WRIGHT, Justice.

A true copy.
Test:
J. R. YOUNG, Clerk,
By H. BINGHAM, Assistant Clerk,

against three members of this body named in said rule, to wit: Senators REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., and DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, and in causing the said rule to be served upon them, in the opinion of the Senate thereby unlawfully invaded the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of the Senate and of said Senators, and was without jurisdiction to grant said rule; and said Senators are directed to make no appearance in response thereto.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as I intend to vote against the resolution, I desire in a very few words to give my reasons for so doing.

I find here upon our statute books a law passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President of the United States. That law constitutes certain persons a board to arbitrate upon the matter of letting contracts with respect to public printing. I can not understand that this board acts in any legislative capacity in passing or acting upon anything that is submitted in the shape of a bid. It is not carrying out a legislative function in any way. It exists only as a board for that particular purpose by virtue of the law under which it is created, and is not acting as a Senate committee or performing the functions of such a committee, which functions relate purely to the matter of enacting legislation and not to the matter of carrying that legislation into effect after it has become a law.

If I understand this law at all, it creates certain individual rights. The man or the company or the corporation which puts in a bid in conformity with the law is entitled to have certain things done by that committee or that board. He has a legal right, if he conforms to the requirements of the law, to compel the board to comply with the requirements incumbent upon it. If we admit that, and admit that there may be a question whether the individual or the corporation has complied with the law, then we must admit that there is some power to try that right, and the only power that I know of lies ultimately in the courts; or else we must say that there is one law upon our statute books which the courts can neither construe nor enforce; that there is one law which must depend entirely upon the Senate or upon the House for its efficacy as a law.

I can not believe that that is the legal status of the individual or the corporation which has complied with the requirements of the law we have passed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. In one moment. Now, under what authority does this board act? Does it act under the authority of the Senate for the purpose of performing legislative functions, or does it act under the authority of a law that has been passed by Congress; and if it acts under the law, then is it not subject to every legal proceeding for the enforcement of that law?

Now I will listen to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from North Dakota suggested that under the action proposed by this committee we would have a situation where the courts would be powerless to interpret one law of Congress. I think when I suggest it to the Senator he will see that he can go still further. Under our form of government we have three departments—one charged with the duty of making laws, another with the duty of executing laws, and a third with the duty of interpreting the laws. We have a situation here where the same body makes the law, executes the law, and finally interprets it, performing all three functions.

Mr. McCUMBER. Without any right of appeal to anyone.

It seems to me that that leaves the case at least sufficiently doubtful, so that any Senator, without any resolution, acting upon his own initiative, can either appear or refuse to appear; and I would prefer to leave it to the individual Senator who has been summoned to appear before that court to appear or not, as he may desire. If he appears, he can plead specially to the jurisdiction, and can take an appeal if it is decided against him. If he does not appear and contempt proceedings are the final result of that nonappearance, he still would have the right to appeal and to try his case in the courts. And I for one am not in favor of the Senate, on such a doubtful case, at least as this seems to me to be, to take the initiative and say that the court shall not pass upon its own jurisdiction, either the court of first resort or the appellate court. For that reason I shall record my vote against the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I offer the resolution I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming offers a resolution, which the Secretary will state.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Senate resolution 178.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate respectfully communicate to Mr. Justice Wright, justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the views of the Senate upon the question of the jurisdiction of said court in the case of The Valley Paper Company (Incorporated), plaintiff, v. The Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, etc., in which a rule to show cause was made by said justice on the 2d day of February, A. D. 1910, as expressed in S. R. 173.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 19390) to extend the time for the completion of bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., by the St. Louis Electric Bridge Company.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RANK OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives returning to the Senate in compliance with its request the bill (S. 579) to correct the lineal and relative rank of certain officers of the United States Army.

Mr. BRIGGS. I move that the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. BORAH. I ask consent to call up Senate resolution 175.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate resolution 175 will be laid before the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. BORAH on the 8th instant, as follows:

Senate resolution 175.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and is hereby, directed to report to the Senate as early as may be practicable whether, in the opinion of the committee, the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as submitted to the States for ratification at the special session, would, if adopted, authorize Congress to lay a tax upon incomes derived from state bonds and other municipal securities or would authorize Congress to tax the instrumentalities of means and property of the State or the salary of state officers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a few weeks ago one of our most distinguished and justly celebrated of public men, Governor Hughes, of New York, sent a message to the New York legislature recommending against the ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution providing for levying an income tax without apportionment. It has been assumed by the public press, since the message of the governor, that it would be impossible, in view of his declaration, to secure the enactment of the amendment. So firm a hold has the governor of New York upon the public mind and so high is the esteem in which he is held as a lawyer that it was regarded as in a nature conclusive against the amendment. After some considerable consideration of the matter it occurs to me that there are at least two sides to the controversy, and, in my own opinion, the grounds stated for the rejection are not such as should prevail against the amendment. The governor stated in his message as follows:

I am in favor of conferring upon the Federal Government the power to lay and collect an income tax without apportionment among the States according to population * * *. But the power to tax incomes should not be granted in such terms as to subject to federal taxation the incomes derived from bonds issued by the State itself or those issued by municipal governments organized under the State's authority * * *. You are called upon to deal with a specific proposal to amend the Constitution * * *. This proposal is that the Federal Government shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on incomes "from whatever source derived."

The contention of the governor being that if this proposed amendment should be adopted it would confer upon the Government the power to levy an income tax upon incomes derived from state and municipal bonds; and it would follow, although he does not so state, as a matter of logic and a matter of law, that it would confer the power to levy an income tax upon the salaries of state officers, executive, judicial, and legislative. In other words, the position of the governor is that it would confer upon the National Government the power to tax the instrumentalities and means of state government, and for that reason he opposes it.

It is curious to observe, Mr. President, that this is precisely the same objection that was urged to the language contained in the taxing power of the National Constitution at the time of its submission to the thirteen States for ratification. It was contended upon the part of those who opposed its adoption that the language of the National Constitution was such as to enable the National Government to impose a tax upon the instrumentalities and means of state governments, to thereby embarrass the state governments, and in the end to practically destroy them as independent and separate sovereignties. The argument was based in those days upon the plenary power which was given to the National Government to tax, it being contended that the language conveyed power to tax all property of whatever kind or from whatever source derived, and that this would give the power to tax the instrumentalities and means of the State.

When Mr. Hamilton came to answer that argument in his Federalist articles he did not recede from the proposition that full power had been given to the Federal Government to tax. He stated that the power of the Federal Government to tax was without limit, unqualified, plenary, and that it should be so; that it was intended to be so; and that that was the only reasonable construction which could be placed upon it. He gave his reasons in the following statement, quoting from the thirty-first number of the Federalist:

> A government ought to contain in itself every power requisite to the full accomplishment of the objects committed to its care and to the complete execution of the trusts for which it is responsible; free from every other control but a regard to the public good and to the sense of the people.
> As the duties of superintending the national defense and of securing the public peace against foreign or domestic violence involve a provision for casualties and dangers to which no possible limits can be assigned, the power of making that provision ought to know no other bounds than the exigencies of the Nation and the resources of the community.
> As revenue is the essential engine by which the means of answering the national exigencies must be procured, the power of procuring that article in its full extent must necessarily be comprehended in that of providing for those exigencies.
> As theory and practice conspire to prove that the power of procuring revenue is unavailing when exercised over the States in their collective capacities, the Federal Government must of necessity be invested with an unqualified power of taxation in the ordinary modes.

I am not going to assume that the effect of this tax would be any other than that which Governor Hughes suggests. For the purpose of the remarks I propose to make to-day I shall assume that it would have the effect for which it is contended without discussing that question.

The amendment which has been submitted reads as follows:

> Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.

The words upon which the governor lays stress are "from whatever source derived," he believing them to include incomes from the sources I have suggested.

I submit for the consideration of the Senate, first, that this amendment, if adopted, will add nothing to the power of the National Government to lay and collect taxes in the way of power; that the power of the National Government at the present time, as I have said, is full, complete, unlimited, and unfettered, save as to exports from the States, which has nothing to do with the argument here.

It is true that there are two rules with reference to the manner in which the Congress shall exercise the power—that of uniformity and that of apportionment—but as to the power itself, putting aside for the moment the manner of its exercise, I submit that the power is at the present time vested in Congress without any limitation, unfettered in every sense of the term.

Secondly, I invite the attention of the Senate to the proposition that the words "from whatever source derived" add nothing to the force or strength of the amendment itself. When the Constitution says that the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, it conveys all the power that it would convey if it said "shall have power to lay and collect taxes upon property from whatever source derived." If we should have said in this amendment that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes upon incomes without apportionment, it would necessarily, in constitutional parlance, include all incomes of whatever nature or from whatever source derived.

I reason from this basis: We find in the Constitution at the present time this power that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, and the court has held that it includes taxes upon all kinds of property and from whatever source it may be derived. Therefore the adding of the words "from whatever source derived" does not amplify the power conferred or make it mean any other than it would mean if the words had been entirely omitted from the amendment.

Third, the amendment did not deal, does not purport to deal, and was not intended to deal with the question of power. It intended to deal, and does deal, alone with the manner of exercising that power which is already complete, that which is already without any limit. The sole obstacle to be removed by those who sought to change the Constitution was that of apportionment. No one has ever contended that it was not within the power of Congress to lay a tax upon incomes. That power has belonged to Congress from its organization, under the original taxing power of Congress. Whether apportioned or unapportioned was a matter of discussion, and concerning which courts and lawyers differed; but the power to impose an income tax upon all property, "from whatever source derived," was never doubted, so far as I know, by either court or lawyers in this country.

As a basis, therefore, of my argument to-day, I desire to show that the power of Congress to tax is at the present time unlimited, and has been so construed; that, so far as express provisions of the Constitution are concerned, there is no reason why we could not impose a tax upon state bonds and municipal bonds or upon the salaries of state officers at the present time. If the governor were asked why we do not impose a tax upon state bonds at the present time, to what provision of the Constitution would he direct our attention? If the governor were asked what limitation is there upon the taxing power of Congress, to what provision of the Constitution or language therein would he direct our attention?

If the governor were asked upon what principle the Supreme Court has held that you can not tax the instrumentalities of the State, to what principle would he direct our attention? If he were asked what change is being made by this amendment in that principle upon which the court has held that you can not tax the income from state bonds, what change could he possibly suggest?

In other words, Mr. President, the principles upon which the Supreme Court has held that notwithstanding the completeness of the taxing power now in Congress you can not tax the instrumentalities of a State are principles which are imbedded in, interwoven with, and a part of the texture of the whole instrument, are in no sense changed by this amendment, nor could they be by any words which are contained in it.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Pacific Company v. Soule (7 Wall., 433), said:

> The taxing power is given in the most comprehensive terms. The only limitations imposed are that direct taxes, including the capitation tax, shall be apportioned; that duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform, and no duty shall be imposed upon articles exported from any State. With these exceptions—> the exercise of the power is in all respects unfettered.

That is, uniformity and apportionment and exports from States—

It will be conceded that the question of exports is not involved in this controversy, and can not be. Then, if we apportion an income tax at this time, under what prohibition or limitation of the Constitution are we inhibited from laying it upon state bonds? I ask that question so as to disclose more fully as I proceed that the reasoning is based upon principles which are not affected by this amendment, and which can not possibly be so, because of the language employed.

Again, the Supreme Court said, in Veazie v. Fenno (8 Wall.):

> Nothing is clearer from the discussions in the convention and the discussions which preceded final ratification by the necessary number of States than the purpose to give this power (to levy taxes) to Congress as to the taxation of everything except exports in its fullest extent. * * * More comprehensive words could not have been used. * * * The words used certainly describe the whole power, and it was the intention of the convention that the whole power should be conferred.

In Mr. Pomeroy's work on the Constitution, volume 1, page 188, he says:

> Because the Nation is thus paramount its taxing power is supreme; it may be applied to all subjects; it may be exerted upon all individuals, and upon every species of property.

That is the announcement by a constitutional writer of the principle which has been embedded in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States from the time the great Chief Justice Marshall first took hold of the taxing clause and construed it. Yea more, it has been a part and parcel of the accepted jurisprudence of this country since Alexander Hamilton interpreted the Constitution in the articles known as the "Federalist."

I ask, if to-day under the present taxing clause of the Constitution we can tax all property of whatever species, from whatever source derived, what inhibition is there against our taxing every state bond of the State of New York, and the municipal bonds of New York, at the present time, so far as the provision of the Constitution is concerned? Certainly no one will contend that the present taxing clause is not full enough to cover all property, of whatever kind and from whatever source derived. It has always been so construed. If it were to be construed alone, it would undoubtedly be sufficient to enable us to tax state bonds. But it can not be construed standing alone; neither could this amendment. The rules of construction which control this present unlimited taxing clause would control in the same way and for precisely the same reasons the proposed amendment.

In the late case of Nichol v. Ames (173 U. S., 515) the Supreme Court said:

It (Congress) has power from that instrument (the Constitution) to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare, and the only constitutional restraint upon the power is that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States, and that no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration directed to be taken, and no tax or duty can be laid on articles exported from any State. Thus guarded, the whole power of taxation rests with Congress.

Again, in Bank v. Billings (4 Pet., 514) Chief Justice Marshall said:

The power of legislation and, consequently, of taxation operates on all persons and property belonging to the body politic.

Mr. Hamilton, in his Report on Manufactures, said:

The National Legislature has express authority to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare, with no other qualifications than that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States; that no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to numbers ascertained by a census or enumeration taken on the principle prescribed in the Constitution; and that no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State. These three qualifications excepted, the power to raise money is plenary and indefinite.

Thus the whole power of taxation rests with Congress. When you exclude exports from States and conform to the rule of uniformity and of apportionment, there is no limitation upon the taxing power of the National Government as it exists at the present time. I submit that it would be difficult to find language which would convey more than the full and complete power which is now conferred by the Constitution.

I say, therefore, that already Congress is given absolute power; and if the reasoning of the distinguished governor were correct, the language being full and complete, conveying all power, we could tax state bonds and municipal securities and state salaries at the present time.

But there is another controlling reason why we can not do so, which reason is omitted in the message and which is not affected by this amendment in any manner. The first time the question arose as to power of one sovereignty to tax the means or instrumentalities of another sovereignty was in the case of McCulloch v. Maryland. In that case, as all lawyers well remember, there was an attempt on the part of the State of Maryland to tax the stock of the United States Bank. The United States Bank having been organized as an instrumentality of the National Government to carry out certain functions of granted power, it was held that it was not a taxable article. In that case Chief Justice Marshall considered this question and gave us the basis upon which has been built the entire structure of law which prevents one nationality from taxing the instrumentalities and means of another.

In the first place, it was admitted by the Chief Justice that there was no provision of the Constitution which controlled the subject-matter. It was stated by the Chief Justice that there was neither any limitation nor grant of power which prevented the States from taxing the instrumentalities of the National Government, and he stated in his decision that, therefore, the taxing power of the National Government being complete, the inhibition had to be found somewhere other than that of the taxing clause itself. He said, in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat.):

There is no express provision (of the Constitution) for the case, but the claim—

That is, the exemption from taxation—

has been sustained on a principle which so entirely pervades the Constitution, is so intermixed with the materials which compose it, so interwoven with its web, so blended with its texture as to be incapable of being separated from it without rending it into shreds.

Upon what principle, stated a little more fully, but never more comprehensively, did the Chief Justice argue that you could not tax the instrumentalities of Government? Upon the theory that the Constitution as a whole created two separate and distinct sovereignties independent of each other in their specific and reserved powers, and that however full the grant of power of taxation might be in the Constitution, there must always be subtracted from that power the right of the different sovereignties to perform their functions as such. In other words, said the Chief Justice, to construe it otherwise would be to rend the whole fabric into shreds.

It was not, therefore, because of the fact that the taxing clause of the Constitution had any limitations either express or implied in its language, it was not because the language failed to convey all the power of the National Government to tax, but because of the universal rule that every component part of the Constitution must be construed in the light of every other part of it; and that it all must be construed as a whole in the light of the designs and purposes and objects to be accomplished when the instrument was written. Those designs and purposes were to create a national government in its own sphere, independent and separate and distinct from the state governments, and to create the state sovereignties, which in their reserved powers are separate, distinct, and independent of the National Government.

There is one thing that we overlook in arguing this question, and it seems to me to be the vice of the distinguished governor's argument. It is that the state governments, in their separate and independent sovereignties, in their reserved powers, are just as much beyond the jurisdiction and control of the National Government as the National Government in its sovereignty is beyond the control and jurisdiction of the state governments.

In a later case, in Railroad Company v. Peniston (18 Wall., 31), the Supreme Court said:

The States are, and they must ever be, coexistent with the National Government. Neither may destroy the other. Hence the Federal Constitution must receive a practical construction. Its limitations and its implied prohibitions must not be extended so far as to destroy the necessary powers of the State or prevent their efficient exercise.

Again, the court in United States v. Railway Company (17 Wall., 327) said:

The right of the States to administer their own affairs, through their legislative, executive, and judicial departments, in their own manner, through their own agencies, is conceded by the uniform decisions of this court and by the practice of the Federal Government from its organization. This carries with it an exemption of those agencies and instruments from the taxing power of the Federal Government.

I call attention also to the following citations and authorities, all bearing out the same line of reasoning:

The taxing power of the United States is subject to an implied restraint arising from the existence of the powers in the State which are obviously intended to be beyond the control of the General Government. (Hare on the Constitution, vol. 1, p. 265.)

This clause with reference to taxation is without any express restriction except that already referred to and explained—uniformity and apportionment and exports in the State. Despite this, it has been decided that the United States can not tax the salary of a state officer or a state municipal corporation or process of state courts or a railroad owned by a State. This decision rests upon the strong ground that the power of Congress—even under this full grant as contained in the language of the Constitution—to pass a tax law is restricted to a law which is necessary and proper to carry its taxing power into effect, and as taxation of a state franchise by the Federal Government is an infringement upon the reserve power and autonomy of the State, and as the power to tax without limitation is the power to destroy, execution by the United States of a power which involves the total destruction of state functions was not only not proper, but radically improper. (Tucker.)

The revenue act of 1898 (United States v. Owen, 100 Fed. Rep., 70) provided that a stamp tax of 50 cents should be imposed upon "all bonds of any description except such as may be required in legal proceedings not otherwise provided for in this section." It was held that a tax could not be required upon a saloon keeper's bond required by the statutes of the State, notwithstanding this law. The court said:

These cases establish the principle that the great law of self-preservation, the inherent attribute of sovereignty, exempts any and all means and instrumentalities of state government from federal taxation.

Rules of Construction, from Mr. Story:

1. The first and fundamental rule in the interpretation of all instruments is to construe them according to the sense of the instrument and the intention of the parties.

2. There may be obscurity as to the meaning from the doubtful character of the words used, from other clauses in the same instrument, or from inaccuracy or repugnancy between the words and the apparent intention derived from the whole structure of the instrument or its avowed object.

3. In construing the Constitution of the United States, we are in the first instance to consider what are its nature and object, its scope and design as apparent from the structure of the instrument viewed as a whole and also viewed in its component parts.

I desire especially to call attention to the language in the case of Collector v. Day. This is the case where the question first arose as to the power of the National Government to tax the instrumentalities of the State. The case of McCulloch was a case where the State was undertaking to tax the national instrumentalities. This was where the National Government undertook to tax the state instrumentalities; and the argument upon which the court rests its conclusion controls this proposition clearly and distinctly in the face of any language contained in this amendment. The court said in Collector v. Day (11 Wall.):

> Such being the separate and independent condition of the States in our complex system as recognized by the Constitution, and the existence of which is so indispensable that without them the General Government itself would depart from the family of nations, it would seem to follow as a reasonable if not a necessary consequence that the means and instrumentalities employed for carrying on the operations of their government, for preserving their existence and fulfilling the high and responsible positions assigned to them in the Constitution should be left free and unimpaired, should not be liable to be crippled by the taxing power of another government, which power acknowledges no limits but the will of the legislative body imposing the tax. * * * In respect to the reserve powers the State is as sovereign and independent as the General Government.

We are discussing now the question of taxing the state means.

> It is admitted there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the General Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of a State, nor is there any prohibiting the State from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation, as any government whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government.

What were the conditions under which this decision was rendered, and what were the facts? In the first place, Congress had passed a statute specifically covering the salaries of all officers. Congress had passed the act under a power in the Constitution which had been held, and was held in that case, to be without limitation.

We have, therefore, the lawmaking body of the Government exercising the power conferred upon it by the Constitution to tax property of all kinds and from whatever sources, specifically taxing, in so many words, the property which was exempted by the decision of the court, and not exempted because the language of the Constitution failed to cover the property, not exempted because the court found somewhere in the language a lack of power to put a tax upon this particular kind of property, but exempted for the reason, as said by the court in practically so many words, that there must be subtracted from this unlimited power the right of the state government to exist and perform its functions.

That being true, when we should have this amendment adopted what would we have? We would have the unlimited power of the National Government to tax still unimpaired. We will assume that it does convey all the power to the Government that could be conveyed for the purpose of taxing, nevertheless we would fall back upon the principle enunciated in the McCulloch case and in Collector v. Day, upon the principle that it is not within the jurisdiction of the National Government to exercise control over the state functions or the functions of a separate and individual sovereignty; that unlimited power to tax covering property or incomes from whatever source derived will never be construed, so long as we have an indestructible union of indestructible States, so as to embarrass or destroy each other. The fullest taxing power must be construed in the light of the objects, designs, purposes, and schemes of the Constitution as a whole.

But it seems to me that this question has been even more definitely determined and decided. The income-tax law of 1864 specifically provided for the laying of a tax upon salaries, also to tax incomes derived from any kind of property. The language was quite as broad and comprehensive as the language of the proposed amendment in which we are at present interested. The Supreme Court held unanimously that this income tax of 1864 was constitutional, and it said over and over again that there was positively no limitation upon the power of the National Government to tax; that all property was subject to taxation. So under this constitutional power to tax everything Congress passes an act specifically taxing salaries and property from whatever source derived. Now, if the constitutional provision was unfettered, and Congress, under this unfettered power, specifically laid a tax upon salaries and incomes from whatever source derived, were they not in as strong a position to assert the right to tax state officers' salaries as they would be were this amendment passed? Yet, notwithstanding this express provision of Congress under this full taxing power of the Constitution, it was held that you could not tax the state instrumentalities. In other words, that while the language was unequivocal and unambiguous and the power was unquestioned, so far as the taxing provision alone was concerned, such provision and such act of Congress must be construed in the light of the fact that we are a dual Government.

The internal-revenue act of 1864 also provided that no instrument or document should be admitted into any court until the requisite stamps should be affixed. The term "any court" covered all courts, and it was quite clear that the lawmakers intended it to apply to all courts. Notwithstanding the language of the statute, notwithstanding its broad and comprehensive language, it was construed in the light of relationship between the State and the National Government and it was held this could not apply to state courts. (Carpenter v. Snelling, 97 Mass., 457; Green v. Holway, 101 Mass., 243; Barber v. Gale, 43 N. Y., 40; Bank v. Hill, 43 Tenn., 325.)

But, Mr. President, it seems to me that the question has been brought nearer to the present hour and more definitely presented in the famous Pollock case itself. We remember that in the Pollock case the income-tax law of 1894 was involved. The statute of 1894 had incorporated in it almost the identical language which is found in this amendment, covering property of whatever kind and incomes from property of whatever kind.

That law was passed upon in the light of the general taxing power of Congress. It was brought to the attention of the court that included in some of the incomes was income from state bonds. There were two things upon which the court in that case were not divided. The first was that there was no limitation upon the power of Congress, as contained in the clause of the Constitution, as to what kind of property should be taxed and what should not.

On the first proposition it was held that the power was unlimited. The second proposition was that, notwithstanding that fact, Congress could not pass an act which would cover the incomes derived from state bonds or salaries of state officers. I desire to read a quotation from both the affirmative and the dissenting opinion. Mr. Fuller, Chief Justice, said in the Pollock case:

> The power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress can not tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject and may be exercised at discretion.

Mr. Justice White said:

> The words "duties, imposts, and excises," in conjunction with the reference to direct taxes, adequately convey the power of taxation to the Federal Government. * * * It is unquestioned that the provisions of the Constitution vest in the United States plenary powers of taxation; that is, all powers which belong to the Government as such, except that of taxing exports. * * * In deciding, then, the question of whether the income tax violates the Constitution, we have to determine not the existence of a power, but whether an admittedly unlimited power to tax—the income tax not being a tax on exports—has been used according to the instruction as to method. Not power, it must be borne in mind, but the manner of its use is the only issue presented in this case.

The basis of the court's opinion rested upon the proposition that there was an admittedly unlimited power, and under this unlimited power Congress had passed an act covering this specific kind of property. It would be interesting to go back and read the act of 1894 to observe with what fullness the statute covers the same kind of property which we are seeking here to tax; and yet, notwithstanding the fact that the court started in on its reasoning upon the basis that there was no limit in Congress to tax, and that Congress had under its full power exercised its privilege to tax, it fell back to the case of Collector v. Day, and argued that you could not construe a component part of the Constitution in disregard of the instrument as a whole. Without repeating here what I have said, the court adopted and accepted to its full extent the reasoning in the case of Collector v. Day, and again announced that the doctrine must prevail that one sovereignty could not interfere with the instrumentalities of another.

In other words, Mr. President, when this amendment says "from whatever source derived," that must be a source within the jurisdiction and taxing power of the nationality which lays the tax.

I undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction from the authorities, that the National Government has no more jurisdiction as a governmental fact over the functions of a state government than it has over the property across the line in Canada as a territorial fact. They are not within its power or control. Until we revise the Constitution as a whole, take the instrument up and revise it and definitely announce that these separate and independent sovereignties are no longer to be so, no court will ever hold that you can interpret the taxing clause of the Constitution so as to destroy those sovereignties. As Judge Nelson said in one case:

> The General Government and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme. But the States within the limit of their power as granted, or in the language of the tenth amendment preserved, are as independent of the General Government as that government within its sphere is independent of the States.

Again he says:

> In respect to the reserve powers the State is as sovereign and independent as the General Government.

Justice Brewer in a noted case said:

> The States are in many respects sovereign and independent.

Chief Justice Marshall, in laying down the rule of taxation in the case to which I have already called attention, says in another part of the decision:

> All subjects over which the sovereign power of a State extends are objects of taxation. But those over which it does not extend are, upon the soundest principles, exempt from taxation. This proposition may almost be pronounced self-evident. Sovereignty of a State extends to everything which exists by its own authority or is introduced by its permission; but does it extend to those means which are employed by Congress to carry into execution the powers conferred on that body by the people of the United States? We think it demonstrable that it does not.

Take this ruling of the Chief Justice, which has been repeated in substance and in principle so often since, put it down by the side of the proposed amendment to the Constitution, and construe that amendment in the light of that principle, that only those things over which each sovereignty has jurisdiction and control are subject to taxation, what possible fear can there arise in the mind of any man that the Supreme Court will say that out of the words "from whatever source derived" comes the power to do as Marshall said, "rend the whole fabric into shreds?"

These words must always be construed in the light of these principles; that is, as expressing authority which belongs to the jurisdiction which undertakes to lay the tax.

In conclusion, on this phase of the subject, I submit:

First. That the proposed amendment adds nothing to the taxing power of the National Government. This power was complete, unfettered, plenary before. It can be no more than that should this proposed amendment be adopted.

Second. The proposed amendment does not deal or purport to deal with the question of power which is already complete, but simply with the manner and method of exercising and using that power.

Third. No one has ever questioned the power of the National Government to lay an income tax, for, as was said by Justice White, the question has always been "whether an admittedly unlimited power to tax has been established according to the instruction as to the method," and it was to remedy the method alone that the amendment was submitted.

Fourth. The words "from whatever source" add nothing to the force of the amendment. It would, in constitutional parlance, be just the same if it said "to lay and collect taxes on incomes without apportionment," for who could then say that you would not have the right to lay taxes upon all incomes? The present taxing power would not be a particle stronger if it stated "to lay and collect taxes upon all property from whatever source."

Fifth. To construe the proposed amendment so as to enable us to tax the instrumentalities of the State would do violence to the rules laid down by the Supreme Court for a hundred years, wrench the whole Constitution from its harmonious proportions and destroy the object and purpose for which the whole instrument was framed.

Sixth. To construe it to cover those incomes from sources within the jurisdiction and control of the sovereignty laying the tax is to construe it in harmony with the principles given us by Marshall and followed from that hour to this.

Mr. President, the history of the income tax since 1894 has not been one which any citizen can recite with pride. For nearly one hundred years the construction of the Constitution as established by the men who helped to write it had received the approval of an undivided court time and time again. During that period there sat upon the bench of the Supreme Court some of the greatest lawyers of that or any other period of this or any other country. During that period wealth had not become so domineering and so powerful and so determined to have its own way. During that period this Government had the power to impose the burdens and expenses of government upon consumption and upon all forms of wealth, and we did so. In 1894–95 these precedents were overturned. This Constitution received a construction unknown to its makers. In the face of two powerful dissenting opinions, assented to by two other judges, the startling and astounding doctrine was announced that the framers of the Republic had made it impossible to levy a tax upon some forms of wealth even in time of war; that the builders of this Government had made it impossible to dispose and divide the burden of government between consumption and the different forms of wealth. At the last session we were called upon to express our assent to that interpretation of the Constitution, by express act to declare our acceptance of it. Under majority rule there was submitted this amendment to cover and eliminate that supposed hideous defect in the fundamental law.

Now, Mr. President, the scheme and plan is to defeat that amendment. Having, as a legislative body, solemnly declared our acceptance of this construction of the Constitution, thereby making it practically impossible to again appeal to the courts, if this amendment can now be defeated this Government of the people, for the people, and by the people will stand alone among all the civilized nations of the earth shorn of the power to divide the burden of government between consumption and the different forms of wealth. This is the scheme and the plan; and, unfortunately, the great governor of New York has given much aid and comfort to the cause by reason of his high standing among the people of the country.

Mr. President, no one ever saw this country in just the condition in which it is to-day. Never since this Government was launched has there been such a universally restless spirit among the masses of the people, such persistent inquiries, such ugly questioning. No part of the Government seems above challenge or criticism, and it is fast becoming popular in some parts of this country to scoff at the Constitution itself. A restless, unquiet, dissatisfied, and—worst of all—a suspicious public mind is the public mind of to-day.

You can defeat this amendment; and I fear, from the men who are gathering to the crusade, that it will be defeated. Some of those who are proposing to encompass its defeat will not stop on the hither side of most disreputable means to accomplish their purpose. They are vitally involved. But when you shall have accomplished your purpose and the people shall have ascertained how their rights have been manipulated away, it will go far toward exciting to renewed force and strength that feeling of wrath and class hatred which is already too strong in this country. When those who are ill able to bear the burden of government see the expenses of the Government constantly increasing, when they see the creation of larger navies and larger armies, the burden of expenses increasing everywhere, and learn that, after all, this entire burden must be borne by what they eat and what they wear, and that certain forms of wealth which breed luxury, idleness, and idiocy go untaxed, they will not listen to you when you are called upon to plead with them against radical changes in our form of government which will be submitted to this country within the next fifty years.

I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that the governors of the States and the legislatures of this country will do their duty and see that this amendment is adopted; that they will meet this matter, whether there is a division among them or not as to when it should be exercised, upon the basis that it is a power that ought not to be taken away from the Government.

The people should bestir themselves upon this vital matter before it is too late. It would be nothing less than a catastrophe for this amendment to be defeated, if we are, out of a false idea of courtesy, to be deprived of appealing to the court. It is the people's fight, and no one should be misled by the utterly unfounded proposition that this amendment contains the power to embarrass and destroy the States and "rend the whole fabric into shreds."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I inquire if the question is on the adoption of the resolution? If so, I ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to permit his resolution to lie on the table. I desire to address the Senate on the subject, but not this afternoon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN], who had the honor to offer this amendment, will assent to the doctrine announced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Speaking for myself, I voted for that resolution, believing what the Senator from Idaho has so well expressed, and if the Senator from Nebraska, as the author of the amendment, will give his approval to that doctrine I think it will materially strengthen our case. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not hesitate to express his adherence to that doctrine.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I was not hesitating to express my opinion upon the subject; I was waiting for the Senator to get through. I have a very well-defined notion in my own mind with respect to the amendment and with respect to the argument to which we have just listened, as well as with respect to the argument from the State of New York. My own judgment is that the words against which complaint is lodged, "from whatever source derived," neither add to nor take away from the power of the Government to reach the incomes of the country, provided the proposed amendment is adopted. But I further maintain, Mr. President, and I shall do so at some length with the indulgence of the Senate, that, without regard to whether or not the proposed amendment will reach the incomes of state officers or the incomes arising from state securities, nevertheless the amendment should be adopted.

I am not so clear, Mr. President, but that the very fact that the proposed amendment makes no exception of any income does not commend it to public approval. So that, conceding for the moment that this amendment would confer a power to reach state securities, nevertheless the fact that every man's income shall be reached may become one of the reasons why the amendment should be adopted.

I want to say further, before leaving the subject, that I do not agree with my friend from Idaho that this amendment will be defeated. I agree with him that there is an assault and fight being made against its ratification and adoption, but I am not here, as a friend of the cause, predicting that it will be defeated. I have too much confidence in the patriotism of the American people to believe that they will refuse to confer upon their Government a power that is exercised by every civilized nation on the face of the earth. I do not care whether you agree to the economic policy of taxing incomes in times of peace or not, the American people want their Government to have the power to protect itself in times of trouble, and the exercise of that power may become necessary for the Government's preservation. I ask the Senator to let the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has no doubt in his mind that the state governments are as much the Government of the American people as is the General Government?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, indeed, they are, Mr. President.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I only want to add that the sincere friends of the income tax are not likely to favor a construction of this amendment which will put an argument in the mouths of its opponents to accomplish its defeat. Of course I do not mean to intimate—for if I believed that I would not intimate it; I would say it—I do not mean to intimate that the Senator from Nebraska is trying to aid the opponents of the income-tax amendment. I think when he takes time to address the Senate at length he will express practically the same views which have been expressed by the Senator from Idaho. I have no doubt myself——

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senator did not understand me to express any dissent from the argument made by my friend from Idaho——

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; I was saying that I feel sure——

Mr. BROWN. But, assuming that the point made by the governor of New York is practical, still the amendment should be ratified.

Mr. BAILEY. I assume—and this was distinctly stated—that the Senator from Nebraska will agree with the Senator from Idaho. My own opinion is that there can not be any rational ground for dissent, and I would regret very much to see any one of those who believed it unnecessary to amend the Constitution, but who, overwhelmed by a majority on that point, finally assented to the submission of this amendment, giving aid and comfort to those who are now arguing against its adoption by putting a construction upon it that no court, in my judgment, will ever sanction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 11, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 10, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 387.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands have leave to sit during the sitting of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the resolution is agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 20579) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 423), was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] reserves all points of order upon the bill.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill; but first I desire to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEIFER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 20578) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 422), was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] reserves all points of order upon the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18006) granting pensions and increase of pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14676. An act for the relief of the Pittsburg Brewing Company;

H. R. 15448. An act to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia; and

H. R. 18895. An act to authorize the Wilson and Glassport Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Monongahela River between Wilson and Glassport boroughs, Allegheny County, Pa.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution and bill of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. J. Res. 101. Joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing an extension of the tracks of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad on the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.;" and

H. R. 12438. An act entitled "An act to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled 'An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect.'"

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6171. An act to provide for participation by the United States in two international expositions to be held, respectively, at Rome and Turin, Italy, in 1911;

S. 6104. An act providing for the appointment of Commander Robert E. Peary a rear-admiral in the navy as an additional number in grade, and placing him upon the retired list;

S. 6073. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6072. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5167. An act to provide for an enlarged homestead;

S. 2777. An act to establish the Glacier National Park in the Rocky Mountains south of the international boundary line, in the State of Montana, and for other purposes;

S. 1324. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians; and

S. 1232. An act for the relief of James L. Bradford.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bills (S. 5522) to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River near Paroquet, Ark.; (S. 5523) to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the St. Francis River near Parkin, Ark.; and (S. 5524) to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the White River at Augusta, Ark.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY] to submit another privileged report (No. 427).

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Speaker, by request of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York submits a privileged resolution from the Committee on Appropriations, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 165.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to furnish for the use of the House the following information:

First. Statement of appropriations for permanent, specific, and indefinite objects, giving titles and dates of acts of appropriations and references to statutes.

Second. Statement of appropriations for permanent, specific, and indefinite objects proposed to be repealed by the bill H. R. 13833, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and the expenditures therefrom during the fiscal years 1908 and 1909.

Third. Statement of appropriations for permanent, specific, and indefinite objects not repealed by the bill H. R. 13833, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and the expenditures therefrom during the fiscal years 1908 and 1909.

Fourth. Whether in his opinion said bill H. R. 13833 should be enacted with or without amendment.

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what he means by the indefinite business in there?

Mr. MALBY. To what does the gentleman from Missouri refer?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I desire to know what you mean by indefinite objects?

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Speaker, under the present law there are a great many appropriations which are carried in the general law which are not appropriated by Congress. They are appropriated under a general statute, and the Congress has no information in relation to them. I may say that this resolution is in substance and in form with that of a resolution passed by the Sixtieth Congress and bringing that information down to date. This resolution requires that the Secretary of the Treasury shall give information carrying down the information which we had two years ago on these subjects to this date, as to what has been done with these permanent indefinite appropriations which have been made under general statutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, is it the intention of this resolution to get rid of these permanent appropriations, or so that the House will have information about them?

Mr. MALBY. That is one of the objects.

Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose is to obtain information regarding the number of these appropriations, with amount authorized and the amount expended, so that the Committee on Appropriations can consider the bill pending in that committee for the repeal of certain permanent indefinite appropriations and certain permanent specific appropriations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How long is it since you obtained that information before?

Mr. TAWNEY. We never obtained the information in full. The resolution adopted by the House at the beginning of the last Congress and referred to the department was never answered in full, they claiming that the work involved was so great that it is impossible for them to answer the resolution in full.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, these things——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]?

Mr. MALBY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Minnesota seemed to take it off your hands.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]?

Mr. MALBY. For a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this resolution intended to look into the reducing of appropriations or increasing them?

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is for the purpose of obtaining intelligent information as to what appropriations are carried under those statutes over which Congress has no control. I presume that it would result naturally in furnishing, at least to the Appropriations Committee and the House itself, intelligent information as to the present conditions, which they do not now have. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that there is an express purpose on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to make this inquiry for the purpose of abolishing certain permanent appropriations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, as a matter of fact, when you come to make up the schedules for the appropriations, these permanent appropriations do not figure in the totals at all, do they?

Mr. TAWNEY. Always.

Mr. MALBY. They figure in the totals. We do not appropriate for them at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know that a distinguished Member of this House made a speech in Kansas City two or three years ago, in which he accused me of charging that he said there were $75,000,000 more appropriated that year than were appropriated. It seems to me by this permanent appropriation there is a lot of stuff covered up.

Mr. MALBY. That is what we want to know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that is so, I am with you.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MALBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I notice the resolution provides:

> The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to furnish to the House.

The practice of both bodies of the Congress has been to direct the Cabinet officers to furnish information, and not to request it. I see no reason why we should vary from that practice. Is not the gentleman willing to have it read:

> Is hereby directed to furnish.

Mr. MALBY. I am not very particular, if that is the way in which those things are usually done.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] submit an amendment?

Mr. MANN. I can not submit an amendment, as I have not the floor. Then I would like to ask the gentleman this: I see by the third section of this provision it refers to a House bill now pending in the Committee on Appropriations as repealing certain laws. Since when did the introduction of a bill and reference to the Committee on Appropriations repeal the statutes?

Mr. MALBY. I do not know what the gentleman from Illinois has reference to.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will notice in the second paragraph he provides for indefinite objects proposed to be repealed, but in the third paragraph he provides for permanent, specific, and indefinite objects not repealed by the bill pending in the Committee on Appropriations. That would indicate that the introduction of a bill and the reference to the Committee on Appropriations repealed certain statutes of the United States.

Mr. MALBY. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that his reference is to a matter before another subcommittee, and I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota on that matter.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that the gentleman had in mind the objects that are proposed to be repealed by the pending provision. I would like to ask the gentleman a question on another matter.

Mr. MALBY. I yield for a question.

Mr. MANN. That is whether, in the opinion of the gentleman from New York, the House of Representatives, when a bill is pending before it, ought by formal resolution to ask a member of the executive department of the Government whether it ought to pass that bill or not. Can the gentleman find any precedent for such action? The gentleman brings this resolution in as a privileged resolution, and stated that it was a privileged resolution. It was impossible for the Members of the House to hear it when read. It is not a privileged resolution, and if I had heard the resolution read I would have made that point of order against it.

Now, the gentleman proposes to have the House pass a formal resolution asking the Secretary of the Treasury whether we ought to pass a certain bill or not. We never have asked him such a thing before, and I hope the gentleman will consent to strike out the fourth paragraph of this resolution.

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Illinois that this is not a privileged resolution. This is a resolution reported by the Committee on Appropriations calling upon a member of the Cabinet of the United States for certain information for the enlightenment of the House and the Committee on Appropriations when it is considering certain appropriations. Why, gentlemen, that is a privileged resolution. Now, I will say to the gentleman, further, that I know of no rule, never heard of a rule, never heard the proposition criticised, if Congress should not ask any of its public officials to furnish such information as may lead to their enlightenment in the discharge of the duties of the House or any of its committees.

Mr. MANN. I do not criticise obtaining information.

Mr. MALBY. We are asking the Secretary of the Treasury here whether a certain bill in his judgment should pass with or without amendment. We ask him for that information because it is within his peculiar province to know. We are not bound to follow any advice he gives. But certainly a Cabinet officer, charged with the administration of the law to which an inquiry refers, ought to have some information which it would not be a bad thing for this House to have. This resolution is altogether in the interest of economy, intelligent legislation, and good government. It is a notorious fact that for many years millions of dollars have been appropriated under general laws over which no committee of Congress has any jurisdiction or control whatsoever. It amounts to nearly $135,000,000 a year.

The Committee on Appropriations has no power and no control over a single dollar of this immense sum which is annually appropriated under general laws. It is charged by the Secretary of the Treasury that they are spending moneys in various departments and that they are not intelligently expended. We are asking him for information in relation to the manner in which this money is being expended. Certainly we ought to have that information. Certain it is that various appropriations are carried by general and special laws that have never been passed upon by any committee. Certainly we ought to obtain information in some way concerning these appropriations and the way these vast sums of money are being expended by our various departments. Now, there is not a Member of Congress who has a particle of accurate information with reference to these annual appropriations carried under general law, and the purpose of this resolution is to get that information. I trust that the gentleman from Illinois, who is always interested in an economical administration of the affairs of our Government as well as securing intelligent information in regard to it, will not interpose any technical objection.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman about the desirability of getting information, and hence propose that the Secretary be directed to furnish that information; but I question the propriety of Congress, in either branch, requesting by formal resolution the opinion of a Cabinet officer upon whether a certain bill ought to pass with or without amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. If my colleague will yield to me for a minute.

Mr. MALBY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the purpose of the fourth paragraph of the resolution to which he has referred is to obtain information concerning the advisability of the repeal of certain specific permanent appropriations. There are $135,000,000 expended annually from permanent appropriations, which, as the gentleman from New York says, Congress has no control over whatever. Many of these permanent appropriations are in the nature of trust funds. There is no department of the Government that has a more intimate knowledge concerning the administration of the permanent appropriations than the Treasury Department, presided over by the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, this bill referred to in this resolution is very broad and sweeping in the matter of repealing permanent appropriations. It may be that some of these permanent appropriations ought not, in the judgment of the Secretary, to be repealed, because of the purposes for which they have been made and in the administration of them; and it is merely to obtain information from the Secretary of the Treasury, who is charged with the responsibility of administering all of the permanent appropriations, to know whether or not all the appropriations proposed to be repealed in this bill should be repealed or whether the bill should be amended in any respect as to particular appropriations or trust funds.

That is the only reason for it, and that information has been called for by the House for a number of years. As I said in answer to the gentleman from Missouri a few moments ago, the work of obtaining this information is so great that we have never yet succeeded in securing all of it, and the committee has never yet been able to act on the bill which was introduced for the purpose of putting an end to at least a great many of these permanent appropriations. There is not the least reflection upon Congress in asking for information with respect to these particular appropriations, as to whether or not they should all be included or some of them omitted.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MALBY. For a question; yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it not true that this House bill 13833 is the bill that has been in here so often, to take away the permanent appropriations from various public undertakings, such as small custom-houses and other matters of that sort, and to put the power in the hands of the Appropriation Committee to say whether those things shall be starved to death or not? Is not this the same old bill?

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how aged this bill is to which the gentleman referred. If it has been here a long time, it ought to have been passed. I am fully aware that there are certain custom-houses throughout the United States where forces of men are maintained to collect customs where no customs dues have been collected for a number of years. I know of certain customs districts in the United States where it costs 100 per cent to collect all customs dues which are collected. I know of other places where they have not collected a single dollar in customs for the last ten years, and yet customs offices are maintained. If this law should have the effect of wiping out those useless institutions, which are only an expense to the Government, I should consider that we had accomplished very much with reference to this legislation.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MALBY. Well, if it is a question; yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman remember that the House voted on this same proposition, on the custom-houses, some years ago, and totally disagreed with the position the gentleman has taken?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House has never voted on the question of repealing the permanent appropriation of $5,500,000 for the collection of customs.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The motion made by the gentleman from New York to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider that bill was overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; it was not for that purpose at all. That bill was for the consolidation of the customs districts of the United States.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Its object was precisely the same. The object was to get rid of the small custom-houses. This bill goes much further, and embraces the whole question of permanent appropriations.

Mr. MALBY. I just yielded for a question. I do not know what the objection is to getting information.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. None at all.

Mr. MALBY. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts does not object to being enlightened on the subject.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Not a bit.

Mr. MALBY. I hope he does not object to this House being enlightened, and I am only seeking for information.

Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution so that it will read as I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the resolution so that it will read:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to furnish for the use of the House the following information:

"First. Statement of appropriations for permanent, specific, and indefinite objects, giving titles and dates of acts of appropriations and references to statutes.

"Second. Statement of appropriations for permanent, specific, and indefinite objects proposed to be repealed by the bill H. R. 13833, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and the expenditures therefrom during the fiscal years 1908 and 1909.

"Third. Statement of appropriations for permanent, specific, and indefinite objects not proposed to be repealed by the bill H. R. 13833, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and the expenditures therefrom during the fiscal years 1908 and 1909."

Mr. MALBY. By that amendment the fourth section is stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is as read by the Clerk, which amendment proposes to strike out and insert.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY] accepted the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], striking out the provision that the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to give his opinion as to the advisability of this legislation?

Mr. MALBY. Yes; the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois has been incorporated in this amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois come from the fact that this member of the Cabinet is a distinguished Democrat, and is he afraid to have his opinion submitted to the House? [Laughter.]

Mr. MALBY. I do not know whether he is a distinguished Democrat or not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill, H. R. 18282, and I ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the following conference report with the request that the statement be read in lieu of the report. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill H. R. 18282, making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the year 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if this conference report has been printed in full?

Mr. TAWNEY. It has been, on page 1594 of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

[For conference report and statement see proceedings of the House, Tuesday, February 8, 1910.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want to make one inquiry in regard to amendment 28, where the House insisted on excluding state monuments on the battlefield of Shiloh. The States directed the monuments to be turned over to the Federal Government, and they were accepted by the Federal Government. The Federal Government cares for them and keeps them in repair. A storm came through that battlefield and destroyed the trees and damaged the monuments. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota why they refuse to replace the monuments destroyed by the act of God. They are under the control of the Federal Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the part of the House, in considering this matter, came to the conclusion that the Government of the United States, in the first instance, is not obligated to repair or rebuild the Iowa monument, the only monument, it seems from the report of the War Department, that has been destroyed. It is estimated that $19,000 will be required for the purpose of rebuilding that monument.

There is another consideration that entered into the action of the committee. The monument was originally erected by the State of Iowa to commemorate the services of the soldiers of that State who fought on the battlefield of Shiloh. Now, the reconstruction of the monument by the National Government would change, to that extent at least, the character of the memorial, making it National rather than State, and the committee felt that perhaps the State of Iowa would want to retain that same relation toward that monument that marks the spot on the field on which her sons had fought than to have the Federal Government rebuild the monument to be known hereafter at least as a quasi national monument rather than a state monument.

It is true that these monuments, when dedicated, are turned over to and accepted by the Federal Government for the purpose of police protection, and if any person should deface a monument the Government of the United States would be obligated to repair that damage; but in this instance the monument has been destroyed by the act of God, and the committee felt that the State of Iowa at least ought to have the first opportunity to reconstruct the monument, originally erected by the State as a memorial to the heroic services of citizens of that State engaged in that great battle at Shiloh, and that is the reason the Senate conferees receded and concurred in the action of the House.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the State having erected the monument, having done its part in commemorating the valor of the state troops, when the monument is turned over to the Federal Government and it is accepted as its property it becomes the duty of the Federal Government to do whatever is necessary to perpetuate the monument on the battlefield. I have no doubt that if the Federal Government refuses an appropriation, ultimately the State of Iowa will gladly make it. But it may be some other State the next time; and as years go by, lack of interest in some States may come, and an act of God may destroy other state monuments; and if the Federal Government refuses to do what, to my mind, is its clear duty to do, then the men who are commemorated by the original monument may pass out of the memory of men.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, that may be all true; but, in the first instance, I think the State ought to have an opportunity to reconstruct the monument which it originally constructed and dedicated to her sons as a memorial to their valor and patriotism on that great battlefield. It was erected by the State with the understanding that the memorial should stand there forever as an evidence of the appreciation on the part of the people of the State of the heroic services which her sons rendered in this great battle.

If a State refuses to reerect its monument, then the Federal Government may consider the question of reconstructing it, or removing what is left of it entirely, for the purpose of making the park more harmonious, or making it conform to the monuments in that vicinity. But in the first instance we felt that the Federal Government should not step in and reerect a monument that a State had erected for the purpose of commemorating the services of its citizens in any of the great battles of the civil war. If the State of Iowa does not do it, I grant you that then the Federal Government ought to do it, in order to maintain the park according to the original idea and plan.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments not concurred in, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 39, and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands a separate vote upon amendment No. 39. The question will first be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to further insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendments not concurred in, with the exception of Senate amendment No. 39, on which the gentleman from Massachusetts demands a separate vote.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 39 and concur in the same. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

39. Immigration Commission: For the expenses of the commission provided for in section 39 of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," $125,000, to be available until December 5, 1910: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for field work, nor shall any member of said commission be entitled to or receive any salary as such member after March 1, 1910. And the said commission shall complete its entire work and make its final report and the commission shall cease on the first Monday of December, 1910.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire how much time the gentleman from Massachusetts desires.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Have I not the floor, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. While the motion to recede and concur in an amendment is a preferential motion, yet the gentleman in charge of the conference report does not thereby lose control of the floor. That is the uniform practice.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I was aware that the gentleman could not be taken off the floor by the motion to recede and concur, but I was not aware that the floor did not transfer under the circumstances. However, I hope the gentleman will yield me some time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly; how much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think fifteen minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that this question of the appropriation for the Immigration Commission has been confused with so much acrimony in debate. I suppose if there is anybody in this House who has a right to be acrimonious with regard to this Immigration Commission it is I myself. I opposed the creation of that commission. I was voted down, after one of the closest fights ever had in this House, and I was taken off the conference committee because my position in reporting the bill did not agree with that of the majority of the House. I opposed that commission because the paragraph creating it was used for the purpose of supplanting the educational test by amendment. That by no means meant that the commission would not be useful. I objected to it because it postponed the question of the educational test. I objected to it because it was used to defeat the educational test; but that has nothing to do with the question now. That commission, in my opinion, has done most valuable work. I have served for four years on the Committee on Immigration with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]. My colleagues on that committee, one and all, will bear witness to the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has made a profound study of immigration questions, has devoted more faithful and laborious work to it than any man on earth. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, Mr. Speaker, let us not pursue a penny wise and pound foolish policy. This commission has expended $657,000, an enormous sum, it is true, and now they ask for $125,000 more with which to complete their most valuable work; $125,000 more, not for trips to Europe, though if another trip to Europe were wanted by Mr. BENNET I should favor it with all my heart [applause on the Republican side], because I think every minute of time he spends there is worth to this Nation its weight in gold, if time can be said to have a weight in gold. But there are to be no more trips to Europe; there is no more salary for any member of the commission; there is no question of more field work. It now remains to put the report in shape, where legislators and the press and the public can use this vast mass of valuable facts that have been acquired by this commission, after the most diligent work, after work on the part of no man so diligent as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Now, Mr. Speaker, as an opponent of this commission, as a man who probably had a more mortifying experience than any man on the floor of this House when that immigration bill was under consideration, when I was, for sound parliamentary reasons, removed from the conference committee, I feel that I can advocate this expenditure without misconstruction. As one of the strongest restrictionists in this House, I feel that I can, as well or better than anyone, defend this commission which I so vehemently opposed. The expenses of its European trip were $20,656.51, and no more. If any gentleman, in or out of Congress, says or implies that these expenses were in excess of that sum I shall take the liberty of rising to a question of personal privilege for the purpose of denying the accuracy of his information. The cost of the trip was $20,656.51. There were $509,800, or nearly six-sevenths of the whole, expended for the collection and tabulation of material, for the general field work and clerical force, with 153 field agents and 310 clerks employed. If any gentleman had taken the trouble to go down to the Maltby Building, where the commission's office force was stationed, and had there examined the work of this commission, he would have found less idle people there, less people sitting around doing nothing, than in any other department of the Government of the United States. So far as I know, this statement is also true with regard to any department of any state government. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I have no interest in the personal controversy that has arisen between a Member of this House who is a member of the commission and another Member of the House. I am interested solely in the question as to whether the money asked for is necessary for some useful public purpose. Six hundred and fifty-odd thousand dollars have already been expended. The life of the commission was to expire on the 4th of March, 1910, and the money was appropriated at the last session of Congress, which, in the opinion of Congress, would be sufficient to complete the work. The work is not completed; an extension of time is asked until December, 1910, and $125,000 is the amount asked to enable the work to be finished. I have not been able to ascertain to what purpose the $125,000 can properly be put. It is said that the field work is complete, that no more money is to be expended for that purpose, that the only object of obtaining this appropriation is to enable the commission to put in proper shape the information already collated; that in doing the necessary work, whatever it may be, to put it in shape and to place it at the disposal of the public, the commission asks that it be authorized to expend for office work alone the sum of $12,500 for each of the next ten months of this year. Mr. Speaker, there has been no detailed estimate of the amount that is required, but there is a peculiar coincidence in the fact that $125,000 is the identical sum that this commission tried to obtain from the Congress at the last session in addition to the amount then appropriated.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is not that a very good indication as to the accuracy of the estimate of last year, as to the amount it would cost?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My experience differs from that of the gentleman, Mr. Speaker. My experience has been that when estimates are made for a certain sum to accomplish a certain amount of work there is a certain pride, if it would not be more properly termed obstinacy, of opinion on the part of those asking for the money to see that they expended every dollar that in the original estimates they thought to be necessary. This commission was commanded by the Congress to complete this work by the 4th of March this year. It was given the money that the Congress decided would be sufficient for that purpose. Did it obey the command of the Congress? Not at all, but it proceeded with this work along the lines it had projected when it made its original estimates, and did the very thing that the Congress has been condemning departments of the Government for doing for some years, and that is, it did what it pleased rather than what the Congress determined should be done. What excuse has been offered for not completing the work? The only excuse that I have seen in any place is that they have exhausted the money in paying compensation and expenses which they decided to be necessary. If this commission had a proper conception of its duties, Mr. Speaker, it would have so planned its work as to complete it within the authority given by the Congress, but instead of doing that it proceeded along the lines originally outlined by itself, disregarding the limitations placed upon it.

I do not believe that a commission composed of Members of the Congress is either above or beneath the law. I think that we are entitled to more careful action on the part of such commissions, and they should be particular in obeying the injunctions of the Congress, because when the House and Senate are so persistent in holding down the Executive to the limitations placed upon it, the Members of the House and Members of the Senate should set a good example to the Executive. Until some one is able to point out with that particularity which Congress insists on from all of the departments of the Government when they ask for appropriations, what is to be done with this money, I shall not vote to appropriate it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Was not that what the commission did—to use the money allowed them last year to complete their work so far as they could? If they do not get any additional money, some of their work will be uncompleted. They could not complete it all with the money they had. They did the best they could.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement of my colleague is not quite accurate. With the money so appropriated for the commission it was charged to complete its work. The word "complete" has a definite and significant meaning, and it is not to do what they could, but it was to complete the work; and they should have made a complete report, even if not as full as the commission might have thought desirable.

Mr. PARSONS. Well, they had certain material——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will not contend for a moment that an accumulation of a mass of undigested material in the office of this commission, unavailable for any purpose, can be considered in any way a completion of the work it was charged to do?

Mr. PARSONS. Then the gentleman is opposed to making use of all the material they gained?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; he is not. I think I am competent to express exactly what I intend, and I do not require the assistance of my able and courteous colleague to make plain exactly what I wish the House to understand to be my position. No one has ever had any trouble, Mr. Speaker, in knowing exactly the position I occupied in this House upon any public question, and no twisting or ingenious running about by my colleague can put me in any other position than the one I occupy. I have my opinion as to how much will enable the commission to do all that is desirable to do at this time. No one has yet, as I have stated, given any satisfactory explanation of how this money can be used.

I am not willing to have this accumulation of material wasted, and I shall at the proper time offer an amendment which will permit the commission to have what I believe will be a sufficient sum to do the work they have to do, to do it economically, and to make some effort to do it with proper regard to economy.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman's position is that what was allowed them before was sufficient?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not grant that the amount was sufficient. But I charge that the commission grossly ignored the act of Congress imposing a certain duty upon them, and it is somewhat of an effrontery for them to come here now and say that the Congress was so ignorant, so incompetent, and so unintelligent that it did not accept the views of the commission, instead of proceeding upon its own judgment. That kind of egotism on the part of commissions does not appeal to me. If I were upon a commission and Congress said its work should be completed at a certain time, and a certain amount of money were given for that purpose, I would take a particular pride in completing the work within the amount appropriated, and would not come back begging for more money, on the plea that Congress was such an ignorant body that it did not know what it was doing and was incompetent to determine how much it required for a particular work. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the theory, Mr. Speaker, upon which the Republican administration has been proceeding for a great many years, and it grew to such an extent that even Republican Congresses were compelled to enact laws within the past three or four years which made it a penal offense for the heads of departments to pursue such a course under certain circumstances.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman was on a committee that has charge of the Office Building, was he not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That has charge of it now.

Mr. PARSONS. Has that committee always seen that the Office Building was kept up under the appropriations made by Congress? Has it not requested Congress to increase the appropriations at times?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not to my knowledge; not since I have been on the commission. I am not familiar with what took place before that. I have taken particular pains to see that there was no deficiency in the appropriation; and not only that there was no deficiency, but I made the Superintendent of the Capitol present to me an itemized statement of every position desired, the compensation that the person was to receive, and an explanation made where each person was to serve, and, until I was completely satisfied, refused to give consent to the appropriation requested. And I intend to pursue that course in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, it is extremely embarrassing for me to make any comment upon the business of this commission because of the recent direct personal attack made upon a friend, Mr. BENNET. It is almost impossible for one to separate himself in the performance of a public duty like this from the hold which his conscience has upon him and the inclination to take the part of a friend. I was not here the other day when the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] made his attack upon the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]. They are both very sincere men. I greatly deprecate the fact that he found occasion for the assault. I think the discussion of this amendment may be had without feeling and can be disposed of in a way that will do justice all around. Before I give to the committee the benefit of such investigation as I have made, I want to now bear testimony to the integrity of the gentlemen who compose this commission. I do not think that it is fair toward men who have lived long lives of rectitude to quickly assail them in public place, lest the public become inflamed, and thereby induced to destroy.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and his colleagues took a long trip abroad. I concede that they could not have performed their important duty unless they had taken the journey. It becomes absolutely necessary for gentlemen traveling on public or private business to make certain expenditures of public or private moneys. It may be that here and there the members of the commission might have practiced greater economy. I do not think, however, that they ought to be decried because perhaps in one place or another they may have expended a bit more public money than the most rigid economist would have spent.

I do think, however, doing both the country and the alien square justice, this appropriation ought not to be made. I feel that $657,000 is sufficient money for the purpose for which this commission was created. I again repeat in making that statement, and I want it publicly understood, that I have no reflection to make upon the honor of the gentlemen who served on this commission, whether they sit with the Democrats or with the Republicans. I do not mean to criticise them in any way; but with all due respect to their knowledge of the subject and their zeal in its application, they have taken too wide a range in endeavoring to furnish to the country the information they were directed to furnish. Congress never anticipated such an extensive examination of the subject.

Mr. Speaker, I will not tire the House long. I am sorry that I can not vote for this amendment. I am sorry, because in voting against it I fear that I may be considered in some way reflecting upon the integrity of these commissioners by reason of the attack made upon them. I would like to see their work finished; but to see the end would not justify the cost of reaching it. I requested some facts that I might myself know and might thereby be able to give them to others—and you all appreciate how tiresome this kind of inquiry is if you have engaged in it. I did not want to be considered as preparing for criticism without facts to warrant it, if they existed, so I asked the auditor for a copy of one of the commission's pay rolls. I found no hesitation whatever upon the part of its secretary in promptly furnishing me such information as I desired for myself and for the information of the House.

This work has covered a tremendous scope. These gentlemen have had employed between 40 and 50 special agents. I find that they have been employed from all parts of the United States—continental United States and territorial United States. They came from Porto Rico, and I believe that there are some of them now employed from Alaska. It may be that I am not accurate in giving the detail; but there is no place that we own or pretend to own that these special agents have not been employed to do special duties. Mr. Speaker, I asked the commission to furnish me information as to the character of the work that has been performed by these employees, and I asked information as to the date of the employment, and further asked the secretary to furnish me with the place of residence of these employees at the time of their employment, and further asked him to furnish me with the names of the people who indorsed their applications for appointment. I find they come from all over the United States. The secretary says that in some instances—I am not pretending to quote accurately from his letter, but I will ask to have his letter published in the RECORD—the applicants have been recommended by Members of Congress, and in many instances they were recommended by people who had knowledge of their qualifications, and for that reason the appointments were made.

When I joined in the movement the other day to take from this bill the appropriation reported by the committee, I had it in my mind that, perhaps, these men had been appointed for political reasons. I make no objection if they were, if capable, but I desired to know. I did not have the information and I asked for it.

These special agents have been drawing from $100 per month to $166.66 per month. They have also been drawing quite a large sum of money for traveling expenses. The Acting Secretary of the Treasury writes me on the subject of traveling expenses in a letter dated February 2, 1910, which is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 2, 1910.

Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Your inquiries concerning the accounts of the Immigration Commission have related to the following topics:

1. Organization. This the vouchers do not show, except in so far as suggestions may be obtained from the titles of officers as they appear on the vouchers and rolls. The general administrative scheme is not disclosed.

2. Number of officers and employees and rates of pay. It was your wish to deal, not with the entire force of the commission from its beginning, which has varied from time to time in numbers and personnel, but with an illustrative period. I am inclosing herewith copies of two rolls—your own selection. One of these shows payments by check during the period July 1 to September 30, 1909. (The check method of payment was used where employees were absent from Washington on pay days.) It will be observed that payments were, in the majority of cases, semimonthly; hence, covering, as it does, a period of three months, the roll repeats the names of many permanent employees five or six times. Many employments were transient. The total number of individuals whose names appear on the roll is approximately 170.

The other roll, covering the period September 1 to 15, 1909, shows cash disbursements of salary, the ordinary method where employees are present at the place of payment. It should be remembered that neither of these rolls shows in itself all employees for a given period, and that it is only for the period which they jointly cover—September 1 to 15—that they together show practically the commission's entire force. The vouchers do not show the legal residences of employees, nor do they show at whose instance appointments were made.

3. Travel expenses. At your suggestion, I have selected a representative period—the month of July, 1909. The accounts show that during this month expenses, in the aggregate, of $2,811.58 were incurred by 43 officers and employees of the commission. The average expense per employee for July was therefore $65.39. It should be understood, however, that in many cases travel was not continuous throughout the month. Trips varied in length. In some instances there was no railroad travel, the charges consisting of expenditures for street-car fares, telephone, postage, etc., within a city. The greatest individual travel expenditure for the month was $203.30. Of the 43 charges there were:

One over $200.
Five over $150.
Nine over $125.
Thirteen over $100.

The bulk of the charges in these and in all travel vouchers of the commission were for railroad and Pullman fares, baggage, cabs, livery, street-car fares, telephones, telegraphs, expressage, meals, and lodgings. In the majority of cases employees received a per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence (meals and lodgings) of $3.50 while traveling. These per diem allowances have, of course, been included among the travel expenses. Charges of frequent occurrence in travel vouchers, and of considerable aggregate amount, are for the services of interpreters.

The travel vouchers show practically nothing as to the work done. They are merely formal statements of travel from point to point; the objects in view or the operations at points reached by travel are not revealed. Upon every voucher, however, there is a statement that the expenses were incurred in the discharge of public duty; the maker subscribes under oath or affirmation in verification of his expenditures, and all vouchers are approved by the chairman of the commission.

Respectfully,

CHARLES D. NORTON,
Acting Secretary.

Whether or not the money expended for traveling expenses was economically used I do not know, and I do not suppose these commissioners know. I understand that by the amendment which has been proposed by the Senate all these traveling expenses are to be hereafter denied.

I see by the warning of the Speaker that my time has expired. I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the House conference committee [Mr. TAWNEY]. I wish that the conferees had seen fit to report to the House a provision that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor should designate some one or more men, well qualified for the purpose of going through this mass of material, which I have no doubt is valuable to the country, and to report to this House how much it would cost the Government to publish it, and to report to us what, in his opinion, ought to be published and what ought not.

I want to repeat what I said in the beginning. In voting against this amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] I desire to state publicly that it is not done for the purpose of reflecting upon any gentleman belonging to this commission. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD the letter and pay roll to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print certain matter in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there will be no objection from me.

Mr. BUTLER. I am grateful to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

FEBRUARY 7, 1910.

Hon. THOMAS H. BUTLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have received your letter of February 4, 1910, in which you request information regarding those employees of the Immigration Commission who were on its pay rolls during the quarter ending September 30, 1909 (beginning July 1, 1909, instead of July 31, as stated in your letter), as follows: When each employee was appointed; his place of residence immediately prior to his appointment; upon whose recommendation he was appointed; whether any test was made of his qualifications prior to his appointment; and the character of service rendered by each employee and his fitness for such work.

In accordance with your request, and by direction of the commission, I am sending you herewith a statement showing the name, designation, character of work done, date of appointment, salary, and residence of all persons employed by the commission during the period specified.

The date of original appointment to the service of the commission is stated in each case. In the group designated as "Clerks, who were special agents prior to July 1, 1909," the dates of appointments as special agents rather than as clerks are given. The salaries of these special agents as such for services in June, 1909, were, of course, paid in July, and the list includes two special agents who did not become clerks until August and September, respectively.

It is impracticable to state upon whose recommendation each employee was appointed, for the reason that employees of the commission, generally, were not appointed solely because of any individual indorsement. Many of the clerks were selected because of their previous good service in temporary government and other positions, and on the indorsement of persons having knowledge of their ability and experience. Among these and other clerks appointed were many who were indorsed by Senators and Representatives in Congress, while a considerable number also were chosen on their own application, because, by their credentials, they were obviously qualified to do the work. The superintendents of agents and many of the field agents were chosen by the commission, or by a committee of the commission charged with conducting some particular branch of the inquiry. The great majority of the minor field agents were appointed on the recommendation of the superintendents of agents under whom they worked. Under the rules of the commission all appointments were subject to the approval of the commission or executive committee.

In the selection of employees no formal examination was required, but, so far as practicable, preference was given to applicants who, by training or experience, were best fitted for the work they were expected to do. In several cases persons who were not applicants accepted appointments at the commission's request. Both field and office forces as a whole rendered excellent service. Monthly efficiency records were kept, based upon the accuracy, speed, adaptability, and attention to duty of clerks when the work upon which such clerks were engaged made such records practicable. Clerks were divided into five classes, according to their efficiency, the classes being designated as follows: A, B, C, D, E.

The basis of the rating was a good, average clerk, capable of doing work satisfactorily, both in quantity and accuracy. Such an average clerk was rated "C." The ratings indicated by all the above letters are:

C—Average.

During the quarter ending September 30, 1909, the efficiency record included 246 clerks. According to the latest rating given such clerks during that period, the total number was distributed among the five classes as follows:

Much above average	59
Average	76
Much below average	10
Total	246

A rule of the commission required that any clerk receiving the rating "E" two months in succession should be dropped. Under this rule eight clerks left the service during that quarter.

Respectfully,

M. E. CRANE, Secretary.

[a] Special agent until July 31, at $125 per month.

[b] Special agent until September 8, at $100 per month.

Employed in June, 1909, but not thereafter.

SPECIAL AGENTS.

Aitken, Agnes, Illinois; Grubb, W. Neal, Illinois; Harris, Estelle, Illinois; Harris, Louis L., New York; Kirk, W. A., ———; Lavery, J. S., ———; Maloney, R. Q. M., District of Columbia; McCalmont, J. K., District of Columbia; Painter, Florence M., New York; Points, Juliet S., New Jersey; Warshaw, Jacob, ———; White, Charles N., New York; Neighbors, R. G., New York; Tate, Edythe L. M., Illinois.

OBSERVERS, OR AGENTS (ANTHROPOLOGICAL WORK).

Braun, M., New York; Frachtenberg, Leo, New York; Frachtenberg, M., New York; Lewis, I., New York; Lubarsky, D. A., New York; Michelson, Truman, New York; Vital, Joseph, New York; Wineberg, Louis, New York.

Of the special agents employed in June, 1909, but not thereafter, Messrs. White, Kirk, McCalmont, Harris, Warshaw, Maloney, Neighbors, Grubb, and Lavery were engaged in field work in the industrial investigation. The Misses Harris, Painter, Tate, Points, and Aitken were engaged in field work in the congestion investigation. Payments of salaries to these agents for their services in June were made in July, as also to the observers or agents in the anthropological investigation.

Of the clerks who were special agents prior to July 1, 1909, W. Frank Turton was a special agent until July 31, and D. Lucile Field Woodward until September 8, each becoming a clerk after the respective dates. All the other clerks in that list came in from field service and became clerks July 1 at reduced salaries. They were all engaged in field work of the industrial, agricultural, or congestion investigation.

Voucher No. 3480.

[a] "37. Mary Crawford, clerk, $60; September 1–15, 1909, $30; 37 (no signature)." On this date, September 16, Mrs. Crawford was on leave of absence with pay, and was therefore put on the roll for the full period, September 1–15; but she resigned her position with the commission soon afterwards. Her resignation deprived her of the amount of leave of absence which she would have been entitled to had she remained with the commission until the end of the year. She was accordingly entitled to salary only for the period September 1–2, $4. This amount was paid her September 16, as per her receipt herewith attached.

The balance of $26 is in my possession, and will be turned in to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 16, 1909.

Received of Morton E. Crane, secretary and disbursing officer of the Immigration Commission, $4, salary as clerk from September 1, 1909, to September 2, 1909.

MARY CRAWFORD.

[b] "85. E. H. Hubbard, jr., clerk, $60; September 1–15, 1909, $30; 85 (no signature)." Mr. Hubbard has been absent since September 4. All efforts to locate him have failed. The $30 is in my possession, and will be turned in to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

W. P. DILLINGHAM,
Chairman Immigration Commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] for his very kind expressions. He and I have disagreed more directly on the general subject of immigration than possibly any other two men in the House. I have full confidence in his integrity of purpose, and I am glad to hear from his own lips that he has the same confidence in mine.

I desire to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] for his very fair, correct, and kindly statement. And I desire to agree with my colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that when this Congress gave us $150,000 it was our duty to cut off field work at the earliest possible moment and to complete the work so far as the money given us by Congress would go.

We did more than that. On the 1st day of July, the moment that the $150,000 appropriation became effective, we cut off every particle of field work except a trifling amount in relation to immigrants in agriculture, and we devoted that entire sum to the tabulation of the material we had secured.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] says correctly that our investigation was widespread. It was. It covered the United States, and that is what we were directed to do.

Said commission shall make full inquiry, examination, and investigation, by subcommittee or otherwise, into the subject of immigration.

It was a duty imposed upon us by Congress, and at that time imposed without any limitation whatever as to funds, with a fund which was constantly increasing and to be increased by the doubling of the head tax from $2 to $4.

We went ahead on our duty, as directed by Congress. When Congress cut us off, the very moment that the fiscal year ended, we ceased our field work and commenced the tabulation of the materials.

We had collected an enormous quantity of material, and we had investigated on the Pacific coast the Chinese and Japanese question, most important to this country. We had selected tons of material. We had investigated the 22 leading industries in this country. We have in our commission tabulated and reported statistics, more or less full, relating to 3,000,000 foreign-born people and their descendants; and of all the questions relating to immigration the two most important are the environment, surroundings, and antecedents of the people in their homes and what they and their children do here. We have gone into every industry; coal; iron; we have gone into the steel industry; we have gone into the manufacture of cotton; into the agricultural business; into boots and shoes; into any leading industry that can be named; and can, if Congress gives us this money, report to Congress just what wages the people in these industries get, and in particular the unskilled people, about whom no statistics have ever been gathered.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. I want to ask whether this refers to matters three years old or not? You are going to furnish us with an old report that is of no use at the present time, because conditions are constantly changing.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Our information will be up to July 1, 1909, not yet a year back. The gentleman from Wisconsin, who has collected statistics, knows that in gathering a large mass of statistics you can not get the information any closer than a year and a half. When the census was taken ten years ago it was a year and a half before they got out the first information, and that was a bulletin on population. This will be the quickest report ever made from an investigating commission of statistics of this size.

I have here a detailed statement showing how we want to spend the $125,000. I went personally, as the gentleman from Minnesota will bear me out, before the subcommittee on the urgent deficiency prepared to answer any question they wished to ask, and I did answer every question they asked in relation to the expenditure. We have done a tremendously valuable work.

It has been stated that we only made three reports. That is not correct. The reason the small pamphlets have appeared is because they are small and the printing took no time at all. We have furnished five reports in all, three of which were presented to the Senate at this session and are still in the hands of the proof reader for correction. These reports, whether we get this appropriation or not, will be completed. One shows the history of the bituminous-coal industry. It may interest the House to know that since 1885, a quarter of a century, the bituminous-coal industry of the United States has increased 539 per cent, and into that industry has largely gone the work of aliens. We have found out all about them—the wages they get, how they live, and, most important of all, it seems to me, what their children are doing in the second generation; because, after all, the big question in relation to immigration is just that question.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOULDEN. I think the House would—at least I should—be very much interested if the gentleman would give us the items of the $125,000 that they want to complete the work of this commission.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will do that. The principal item is 100 tabulating clerks, stenographers, and typewriters (six months, average salary $75), $43,000. In passing, I might say that it seems to me it ought to be a source of gratification to Congress that the commission appointed by Congress without any civil-service trammels at all paid a lower rate for the same service than the bureaus of the divisions which have the civil service.

The Bureau of Labor pays $107.50 average salary per month. For this same service the committee paid $66.53. The same bureau pays $123.09 for special agents, and we paid $120.42. Our total average salary, including two or three fairly high-priced secretaries, was $79.02 per month, certainly not an extravagant proportion. Now, for janitor, messenger, and charwomen (nine and one-half months), $1,425. E. A. Moffett, salary $150 per month to complete inquiry into the competition of immigrants; a study of the effect of immigration from the workingman's standpoint, $1,150.

Clerical assistance on the Pacific-coast work, $4,988. Prof. Franz Boas, salary $250 per month, to complete tabulation and preparation of material for the anthropological report, $3,650.

We have for the first time in the history of this country taken up the question of whether the immigrant and his descendants assimilate; and scientists, persons who know, say to us that for two hundred years our commission will be remembered, if for nothing else than for the partial report that we have already made on anthropological work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman seriously wish to inform this House that one of the important questions investigated is whether the immigrants that come to this country assimilate with the population?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly; it is one of the most important questions, and I will just show my colleague why. If my colleague will look at this table which I hold in my hand, and most of the House can see it, I will state that the dark lines diminishing in size from the year 1882, at the bottom, up to 1900 show the number of immigrants coming from Germany, Ireland, Scandinavia, England, and so forth.

The light lines indicate the immigration that came and is coming from southern Europe. My colleague will note that they have tremendously increased. I think the most important question before the American people to-day is to determine, so far as we can by investigation and work, whether this, which we call for the purpose of this discussion, "new immigration" is assimilating or not. My colleague asks me if I regard it as important; and I say "yes," by all means.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that at the beginning of the great German, Scotch, Irish, and English movement to this country the same antipathy and the same prejudice was as openly displayed against those people as is now displayed against the people who are coming from the countries referred to. Any man of any sense knows that people who voluntarily come to this country to make their homes not only assimilate, but become a valuable part of the citizenship of the country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I can agree with the gentleman personally. He will find, however, numerous men on his side of the House and on this, also, who will not agree with him, and it is a mooted question in the country, and the country is entitled to know the facts. The motto of our commission was that we were not afraid of a fact, whether it fitted in with our preconceived views or not. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I believe that I am as free from racial prejudice of any kind as any man can possibly be. Did I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to say that the new immigration coming to this country is assimilating with the population of the country to the same extent and in the same way that the Irish immigration of years ago and the English and Scotch and German immigration did? If he does not mean to say that, then I desire to say that the gentleman from New York is very seriously mistaken about a very serious proposition.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have at least demonstrated that there is exactly the conflict of opinion in this country that I stated there was, and that the country is entitled to a full report of the facts.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to know how much of the money heretofore expended has been expended in field labor, and how much in tabulating and arranging the results of that field labor?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I can give that to a penny, I think. In general field work, industrial, agricultural, economic investigation, and clerical force, $374,741.36. Investigation of excluded classes—well, I regret to say that that was not a separated. There is some tabulation included in that.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman can give me roughly how much, all told, has been expended up to this time, I would be very glad to have him do so.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Six hundred and fifty-seven thousand nine hundred and ninety-two dollars and fifty-seven cents up to the 10th of January.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much of that has been for field work, approximately? That is all I desire to know.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Over one-half of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, as I understand the gentleman, practically all of the present $125,000 is to be for compilation of field work?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Practically every cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, then, I want to suggest to the gentleman this proposition, that over 50 per cent of the total expenditure is an expenditure for compiling and presenting material gathered in the field. Does not it strike the gentleman that that is rather excessive?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I do not think it is. We have had the best supervising force that we could get.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that either the reports from the field have been wrongly made and therefore require a great deal of revision, or the office force is incompetent, if it takes 50 per cent of every dollar to give to the public the information gathered in the field.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I either did not make my statement correctly to the gentleman, or he has not correctly understood me. In addition to the industrial field work and work of that character there has been spent in the investigation of the excluded classes $43,632.92, and a great deal of it does not come into the special field work or tabulation; investigation of the criminal alien, $7,248.12; steerage conditions, $5,014.99——

Mr. SHERLEY. Would the gentleman say that $400,000 of the $600,000 had been expended in the field work?

Mr. BENNET of New York. In field and special investigations?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I should be inclined to think—no; I could not state with the accuracy I should like to upon the floor of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. From the gentleman's figures it would indicate there has been something over $400,000 that has been spent exclusive of office expenditure, tabulation, and so forth.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, take that as a basis and you have got, say $200,000 expended for office work and tabulation and $125,000 which you are asking for office work, and I submit that when it costs even 40 per cent to tabulate and present what you have gathered in the field you have got the wrong system.

Mr. BENNET of New York. No; I can not agree with the gentleman. We took a man who had been at the head of a similar investigation and our rate of cost for tabulation is less than it has been in any other investigation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Minnesota will extend the time of the gentleman from New York a few minutes. This is a very important matter, and we desire to get all the information we can.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for an inquiry.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. I am much interested in this matter, and the people I represent are more deeply interested in it. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York this: Can not a great deal of this information that the country wants, and that we all want, be procured through the agency of the Census Bureau? If it can, we should avail ourselves of it without delay.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It can be secured by any agency that will go out and duplicate this work. This has already been done, we have done the work, we have got the statistics, and all we want is the necessary money to tabulate them and present them to the country, and if we do not get that the public money we have already spent under the direction of the Congress—not of our own volition, because we were sent out—will be absolutely gone and wasted. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I stated my position a few days ago in regard to this appropriation for work of the Immigration Commission. I believed then and have believed for a year and more that the work of this commission ought to have been concluded by the beginning of this session. I still think, Mr. Speaker, that too much time has been taken by the commission. I believe if in our investigations we had gone into typical neighborhoods, if we had taken types of character and types of conditions, instead of extensive individual investigations, that there would not have been so much matter accumulated and not so much delay created, but it would still have been sufficient for the purposes of the commission. There is a great deal of matter accumulated by the commission that is important to the people of the country and to Congress. I still think, that this material can be brought to a conclusion before the end of this session. I believe if that be required, $125,000 would not be necessary to bring it to a conclusion. Now, if the work is extended to next December, the salaries of high-priced clerks and other employees will be continued and expenses kept up until they will consume the $125,000 asked for, but if it is completed and report made by the 1st of May, I think $75,000 will be adequate.

I believe enough force can be brought together, Mr. Speaker, to finish this work by the 1st day of May, and I hardly suppose Congress will adjourn before that time, and we will then get the benefit of the legislation that may be recommended by the commission at this session. It was an important investigation, and we have gone very seriously into it, perhaps more extensively than was necessary. That is, the commission has, in my opinion, prolonged and extended its investigation much further than it should have done..

There is one item into which the commission has gone that I have thought all the time should not be incorporated in the work, and that was what was known as the "anthropological investigation." As I understand it, some of the investigations under that branch of our work will be continued if this appropriation is made and the time extended. I believe that part of the work ought to be stopped right now and that portion of the expense cut off.

It was thought by Congress that there ought to be some investigation in the matter of peonage. It was asked for by two distinguished southern gentlemen, Members of this House, who thought that their States had been maligned by government officials and by reports that had gone to the magazines and newspapers of the country, namely, my friend from Florida [Mr. CLARK] and my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. The commission did not seek that work, Mr. Speaker, but it was imposed upon it by Congress. That is a part of the work that has been done by the commission, and for which a considerable sum has been expended. That investigation has gone along just as far as the members of the commission could give it their personal attention, and we did not want to report upon so important a matter without giving it our personal attention. There will perhaps be some expense attached to the finishing up of the work.

I believe that with a number of competent clerks this work can be brought to a close on the 1st day of May, and I think, as I said before, that $75,000 will be a sufficient sum to complete it. I am not here for the purpose of casting any reflections upon the work of the commission.

I believe they have acted conscientiously in regard to the extent of the work, and, as has been stated by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], so far as the expense is concerned, I undertake to say it has been less expensive for the amount of work that has been done than the work of any other commission in this country. We were required by the act creating the commission to go fully into the investigation, both in Europe and in this country, yet I believe that the work should have been concluded and the report made before now. I am free to say that I do not think that we could now make the report by the 1st day of March, as required by Congress a year ago. That is only a little over two weeks off. But I do believe that by proper activity the whole thing can be done, and well done, by the 1st of May, if required. The men in the clerical force are workers, both the subordinates and the chief clerks and secretaries, and there is perhaps a lot of nonessentials that may be disregarded, although I am not competent to speak about that, as I am not on the executive committee of the commission. I believe the work should be concluded by the 1st day of May, at an expense of not exceeding $75,000, and as now presented I shall vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to extend the time to December and make the appropriation $125,000.

Mr. MACON. May I ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. MACON. I understood that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Mr. Strauss, has stated that he could have the work of this commission completed without extra expense to the Government. I would like to know if the gentleman has heard of such a statement?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the first information I have had on the subject; besides Mr. Strauss is no longer Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I never heard of it, and I understand from the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] that the gentleman's information is incorrect.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], in opposing this motion, referred to the history of the law which by this amendment will be repealed as to the amount of money to be expended and the time within which the commission is to complete its work. This commission was created to do a certain work without limit of time and without limit of money, except in so far as the aggregate amount of money in the immigration fund limited their expenditures.

Now, at the last session of Congress—and I refer to this for the purpose of giving the House the benefit of a few historical facts connected with it, the Committee on Appropriations recommended the repeal of the permanent indefinite immigration appropriation—that action was approved by the House. Then, we also recommended that hereafter the department having control of that service come to Congress with their estimates for the Immigration Service, so that Congress could appropriate annually for that purpose. The Committee on Appropriations also in the same bill, and in the next paragraph relating to the estimates, recommended the provision for the expenses of the commission provided for in section 39 of the immigration act of February 20, 1907, including the salaries of the commissioners, their clerks, and other employees, $300,000. That was recommended by the Committee on Appropriations as a specific appropriation for the work of this commission during the fiscal year 1910.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman do me the justice to say——

Mr. TAWNEY. On the floor of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] made a point of order against this provision, and it went out of the bill.

Thereupon the Senate, in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, in which this provision was originally incorporated, amended the House bill by inserting the provision of the House that went out on the point of order, fixing the amount of the appropriation at $250,000, instead of $300,000, as originally recommended by the House committee. In conference, without any information whatever as to the length of time it would require to complete this work, the conferees agreed on $150,000, and fixed the time for the commission to make its final report arbitrarily on March 1, 1910. That time was fixed without any investigation as to the amount of work to be done or the length of time required to complete the work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will yield to me, I think the gentleman is in error in his statement. The conferees originally fixed the first Monday of December, and upon the request of the chairman of the commission, the Senator from Vermont, fixed March 1, 1910.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the gentleman is correct in that the conferees agreed on December 1, and in submitting the conference report the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who has just taken his seat, asked that we fix the time for completing the work March 1. But I referred to it merely for the purpose of showing that the limit of time Congress put on the completion of the work was done arbitrarily and without any investigation as to the amount of work to be done or the length of time required to do that work.

Now, this is the situation: We have already expended $657,000 in carrying on the work which this commission was authorized to do, and that work is not complete. The only question is, Are we willing to complete the work? And if so, are we willing to accept the judgment of the commission as to the amount of money necessary to complete the work and fix the time within which they say the work can be completed? It is therefore a simple business proposition that confronts this Congress. We are not discussing to-day the question whether or not this work ought not to have been authorized or whether or not the money expended was expended extravagantly. Questions of that kind ought not to influence our judgment now.

A previous Congress authorized the work to be done. It fixed no limitation of time within which the work should be completed. This work has gone on under this previous authority; it remains incomplete; it has cost the people of the United States almost $700,000. Now, I say that if the work originally ought to have been done, and if it is necessary to complete it, to have a tabulation of the statistics and other data collected, we owe it to the country, if this report and work are to be of any value, to appropriate enough money to complete the work and then give the country the information this commission has collected. Otherwise we simply throw away $657,000, or work which has cost the Government that amount of money.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think anyone is to be criticised for favoring this appropriation to thereby complete this work. We arbitrarily fixed the time for its completion without any information as to when it could be completed. What we aimed at primarily in the last Congress was to bring to a close the work of this commission within a reasonable time. I think that the action of the last Congress in fixing this limitation, both as to the amount of money and time, was wise. I do not believe it would be wise now to stop the work and throw away what has already been expended simply because we then erred as to the time required to complete the work of this commission, or because in the judgment of some Members of the House the expenditures were not in every instance wisely made.

I therefore move the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask a division on the question.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. A parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER (continuing). The question will be: Will the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment?

The gentleman will now state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER. The previous question having been ordered, will any further opportunity be given to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered would cut off amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I requested the gentleman to give an opportunity to offer an amendment, but I now find that it is cut off.

The question was taken on the motion that the House do recede, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 83.

So the motion to recede was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House determines to recede, and the vote now comes upon the motion: Will the House concur in the Senate amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to commit the amendment to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, with instructions to report it with an amendment as follows.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I refer to the decision in volume 5 of Hinds's Precedents, page 287.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] makes the point of order that the motion is not in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I refer to the decision at page 287, volume 5, of Hinds's Precedents. It is stated as follows:

> The previous question having been ordered on a motion to agree to a Senate amendment to a House bill, a motion to commit is in order.

That was decided in 1893.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman has confused a motion which would be in order before the stage of disagreement has been reached with the status after the stage of disagreement has been reached. I think the general principle of parliamentary law is pretty clear that, after the stage of disagreement has been reached, that motion shall be in order which shall tend to bring the Houses nearer together. Now, I am aware that when we have receded, we have receded from the stage of disagreement, so far as that particular portion of the legislation is concerned; but I doubt very much whether, after the previous question has once been ordered, his motion is in order. My impression is that there is a decision which would seem to carry out the gentleman's idea; but if he reads the footnote, he will see that it was based on a previous decision, made in contravention to the facts. The previous decision, which was quoted incorrectly in the Manual at that time, did not deal with a situation in which the previous question had been ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to read the footnote to which the gentleman refers, because he has given me no reference to it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I was not prepared for the question, but I stated it from memory.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the previous question had not been ordered, it would have been in order to have offered an amendment to the gentleman's motion.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. After recession, because that restored the state of nondisagreement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The previous question having been ordered, it has been held——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may be. I simply submit the authority upon which I base my opinion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman claim this is either a bill or a joint resolution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This motion is not under my amendment to the rules at all; it is under the general parliamentary practice that it is in order to commit this bill with a Senate amendment, with instructions, after the previous question has been ordered. The gentleman has the wrong rule.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand; but the other rule——

Mr. FITZGERALD. A conference report on a bill is before the House. The bill is before the House. If it were not before the House, we could not act on the conference report.

Mr. MANN. If when the gentleman prepared his celebrated amendment he had used the term "bill" in its generic sense, it would have applied to all propositions; but when he says "a bill or joint resolution" it removes the bill from its use in the generic sense.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman talking of what I said a moment ago, or of what I said at some other time, about the use of this word "bill?"

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the precedent cited by the gentleman from New York, and it is short. The Chair will read it:

The previous question having been ordered on a motion to agree to a Senate amendment to a House bill—

Which is this case—

a motion to commit is in order.

On November 1, 1893, the House was considering the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 1) to repeal a part of the act of July 14, 1890, relating to the purchase of silver bullion.

Mr. LEONIDAS F. LIVINGSTON, of Georgia, submitted the question of order whether, after the previous question should have been ordered on a motion to concur in a Senate amendment, it would be in order to commit the bill and amendment to a committee with instructions.

The Speaker expressed the opinion that the motion to commit would in such case be in order.

That was a ruling by Mr. Speaker Crisp, of Georgia. The Chair has not been referred to, and does not recollect any other precedents, but upon general principles it seems to the Chair that the precedent referred to is correct. The previous question operates upon a motion to recede and concur. Under the operation of that question the House has receded, and the question now is, the previous question operating, whether the House will concur, which brings the two bodies together. But the motion to commit with instructions, under Rule XVII and under the precedents, seems to the Chair to be in order. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

To commit to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization with instructions to report forthwith the provision amended so as to read as follows: "For the expenses of the commission provided for in section 39 of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate immigration of aliens into the United States, $65,000, to be available until May 1, 1910: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for field work, nor shall any member of said commission be entitled to or receive any salary as such member after March 1, 1910; and said commission shall complete its entire work and make its final report, and the commission shall cease on the 1st day of May, 1910.'"

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to modify the motion by substituting the Committee on Appropriations for the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the motion so as to commit it to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. While the Chair is of the opinion that the effect of the phraseology of the instruction is to amend the Senate amendment, if that is what the gentleman desires to do, perhaps it would be better to so state specifically; that would carry the bill with it, of course, with instructions to report the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought that my amendment did that.

The SPEAKER. It does not in words, but, perhaps, that may be the legal parliamentary effect of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the Clerk to modify it so as to amend the Senate amendment 39.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commit to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to amend Senate amendment 39, so as to read as follows.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to commit the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions, which have been read.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 131, noes 94.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 128, answered "present" 17, not voting 106, as follows:

For the day:
Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. LINDSAY.
Mr. SCOTT with Mr. LEVER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the report, in obedience to the instructions of the House, be made immediately from the floor?

The SPEAKER. The tenor of the instructions was that the Committee on Appropriations report forthwith.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Committee on Appropriations is not in session on the floor of the House. If the committee is to make the report, then it is necessary that the bill be referred to the committee, and that the committee meet for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. This is largely a parliamentary fiction, and in such cases the practice has been for the chairman or some member of the committee, upon instructions of the House, to report the bill forthwith, with the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. With that understanding I make the report, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commit the Senate amendment No. 39 to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report forthwith the provision, amended so as to read as follows:

"For the expenses of the commission provided for in section 39 of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' $65,000, to be available until May 1, 1910: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for field work, nor shall any member of said commission be entitled to or receive any salary as such member after March 1, 1910, and the said commission shall complete its entire work and make its final report, and the commission shall cease, on the 1st day of May, 1910."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the amendment is voted down by the House, will a motion then to concur in the Senate amendment be in order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not the pending question on a motion to concur?

Mr. TAWNEY. To concur in the amendment with an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To concur in this as amended.

Mr. TAWNEY. The House has not yet debated the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring to the amendment just reported back, which is, in substance, to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not the question now whether the House shall ask for a conference or concur in the amendment?

The SPEAKER. We have not yet reached that stage.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I am not so sure about that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was pretty sure about it, but his faith was shaken somewhat by a real or supposed precedent, but on examination it seems that a vote was taken on a former occasion as to whether the House would agree to the amendment as reported from the committee forthwith, under the instructions of the House. It seems to be, in one sense, perchance, a useless vote, although it would not be a useless vote if the majority refused to concur.

The question is, Will the House concur in the Senate amendment with this amendment?

The question was taken; and on a division (at the request of the Chair) there were—ayes 126, noes 120.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 130, answered "present" 13, not voting 108, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if Mr. ANDRUS, of New York, is recorded as having voted.

The SPEAKER. He is not.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. OLCOTT with Mr. SAUNDERS.

Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey with Mr. GORDON.

Mr. CARY with Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi.

Mr. CHAPMAN with Mr. BURLESON.

Mr. WHEELER with Mr. HEFLIN.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion to agree to ask for a conference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Messrs. TAWNEY, MALBY, and BOWERS.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of high privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution No. 371 was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report what action the House of Representatives should take in the matter of a rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue against the Joint Committee on Printing or its members, including the Members of the House on that committee, and particularly in the matter of instructing Messrs. COOPER, STURGISS, and FINLEY of the House as to the course they should pursue in the premises. This rule to show cause is returnable in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to-morrow, and it is therefore essential that the House should take speedy action in the matter of this most unusual proceeding.

We have held protracted meetings of the committee and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY], a member of the committee, is empowered by them to report the conclusions of the majority of the committee. Three of us file our minority views. I would ask that the report as presented by the gentleman from Georgia, and the minority views of myself, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] may be read to the House, and thereupon, after the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] presents the resolution offered by the committee, I will move an amendment thereto in pursuance with those minority views, and will ask the House to fix the time for debate and a vote.

The SPEAKER. Has the committee submitted a report?

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] submits a report, and I submit minority views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] will submit the report.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the supreme court of the District of Columbia, at the instance of the Valley Paper Company (Incorporated) as plaintiffs, has caused to be served on ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY, Members of this House, a rule to show cause why writ of mandamus should not issue against them as members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress by reason of their alleged action as members of such committee in rejecting certain proposals of the said Valley Paper Company (Incorporated) to furnish certain paper for public printing and binding: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the said ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY be, and they are hereby, granted permission to enter an appearance in response to said rule for the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction of the court, and taking such further action and interposing such further defenses as to them may seem proper, and for all such purposes they are hereby authorized and permitted to absent themselves from the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] desire to submit the views of the majority?

Mr. PARKER. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the report of the majority and the views of the minority be now read.

The SPEAKER. The report of the majority and the views of the minority when submitted would have to be read either by unanimous consent or in the time of some member of the committee.

Mr. PARKER. I will not ask unanimous consent unless that be desired. I offer an amendment to this resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] yield for the purpose of having the amendment offered?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire that to come out of my time.

The SPEAKER. Certainly not.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I have no objection to the reading of the amendment that the minority submitted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the words—

"For the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction of the court."

And insert after said words the following:

"And if necessary to prosecute an appeal on writ of error from any judgment, and for such purpose they are hereby authorized and permitted to absent themselves from the sessions of the House."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a substitute for the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama offers the following as a substitute for the resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir; that is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Resolved" and insert:

"That Justice Wright, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in granting and issuing the following rule to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be issued, to wit:

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be but fair to the gentlemen and myself that he should ask unanimous consent that the views of the minority and report of the majority should first be read.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the report of the committee and the views of the minority should now be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The preamble and resolution, the report of the committee, the exhibit to the report, and the views of the minority were read, as follows:

[House of Representatives Report No. 432, Sixty-first Congress, second session.]

Mr. BRANTLEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany H. Res. 390):

TITLE.

Suit, The Valley Paper Company (Incorporated) v. The Joint Committee on Printing of Congress.

Mr. BRANTLEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (No. 432), to accompany House resolution 390:

Your committee has had under consideration House resolution 371, which resolution reads as follows:

Sixty-first Congress, second session.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 7, 1910.

Mr. FINLEY submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 371), which was ordered to be printed:

Whereas ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY, Members of the House of Representatives, and constituting the Committee on Printing, and along with three Members of the Senate, constituting the Joint Committee on Printing, have, at the instance of the Valley Paper Company (Incorporated), plaintiffs, been sued in the supreme court of the District of Columbia as members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, calling in question their action as members of such joint committee in rejecting the proposal of the said Valley Paper Company (Incorporated), for furnishing paper for public printing and binding for the period from March 1, 1910, to February 28, 1911, as was done by said Joint Committee on Printing of Congress at the present session of Congress; and

Whereas it is sought by the said plaintiffs, or petitioners, that a writ of mandamus be issued and directed against said members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, to wit, the three Members of the Senate, who together with the three Members of the House, above mentioned, constitute the said joint committee, commanding them to withdraw awards which have heretofore been made and to award said contracts to the plaintiffs; and

Whereas the following rule to show cause has been issued by Mr. Justice Wright, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, to wit:

In the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

The Valley Paper Company (Incorporated), plaintiff, against The Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, composed of REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, respondents. At law, No. —.

RULE TO SHOW CAUSE.

Upon consideration of the petition of the Valley Paper Company filed herein this 2d day of February, 1910, it is by the court this 2d day of February, 1910, ordered that the respondents, the said REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, show cause, if any they may have, on or before the 11th day of February, 1910, at 10 o'clock a. m., why a writ of mandamus should not be issued as prayed in said petition; provided a copy of said petition and this rule be served upon said respondents, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, on or before the 7th day of February, 1910.

Therefore be it

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives to inquire and report what action the House of Representatives should take in the premises, and particularly in the matter of instructing the said ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY as to the course they should pursue in the premises.

And in compliance with the instructions therein submits the following report:

It appears that the said House resolution was adopted in consequence of the institution of certain proceeding for mandamus in the supreme court of the District of Columbia by the Valley Paper Company (Incorporated) against the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress and the issuance and service of a rule to show cause therein by said supreme court of the District against three Members of this House, who are members of said Joint Committee on Printing. For a better understanding of the nature of said proceeding a copy thereof and of the rule to show cause is hereto attached as an exhibit.

Your committee, mindful of the privileges and prerogatives of the House, has carefully considered said proceeding in connection with the claim of authority for its institution and in connection with the constitutional powers of the coordinate branches of the Government. Your committee believes that while the House of Representatives should be diligent in the preservation of its dignity and of its prerogatives, it should also pay due regard at all times to the dignity and prerogatives of the other coordinate branches of the Government, and bearing these considerations in mind we find that the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress is created by statute, and not by the rules of either House of Congress. The members of said committee are Members of Congress, and must be such Members under the statute (see acts, 1895, vol. 28, Stat. L., 601), but the duties they perform are prescribed and defined by law.

Your committee knows of no authority that the House of Representatives has to control or direct the action of said joint committee, and knows of no way by which its duties can be enlarged or diminished or direction given to its work, other than by and through the enactment of some additional law. This statement of the situation naturally causes certain questions to suggest themselves as to the real status of this joint committee, and as to the character of its duties, whether legislative or executive. An inspection of the suit that has been filed also suggests a question as to whether it purports to be a suit against Members of Congress as such Members, or against a legal entity created by act of Congress.

These suggested questions we do not attempt to determine, nor do we understand that any duty is imposed upon us to determine them. It has occurred to us that the sole and only question necessary for our determination is as to what action if any shall be taken by the House by reason of the pending suit against said joint committee, and particularly in the matter of instructing the House members of said joint committee as to the course they should pursue in the premises. This question your committee believes can be determined without a consideration or determination of other questions incidentally or directly connected therewith. It is sufficient therefore to direct attention to the fact that said legal proceeding has been instituted and is based upon a law of the land, and that the acts of the Members of this House complained of are alleged to have been performed under and by virtue of a statute imposing certain duties and not by virtue of any duties imposed by rule or order of the House. Your committee does not believe that Congress has any power to construe the statutes that it enacts, and that regardless of any individual opinions as to the meaning of the particular statute in question and regardless of any individual opinions as to who is or is not exempt from the power of the courts to enforce obedience to said statute, we are of the opinion that the court is the proper forum before which to plead exemption and privilege and by which to interpret and expound the meaning of the statute involved.

And we are further of the opinion that due and orderly procedure and a proper respect for the judicial department of the Government requires that the writ of the court in this particular matter should be responded to.

Your committee would likewise entertain a different view of the matter if it clearly and conclusively appeared that the acts of the Members complained of were performed under rule or order of the House and not under statute and if it likewise was entirely clear that said acts were legislative and not executive in character. We do not intend by this expression to intimate or suggest any opinion as to the character of the acts complained of, or upon the question as to the exemption of the Members from suit. Believing that these and kindred questions are, under the facts in this matter, judicial and not legislative questions, and having reached the conclusion that the writ of the court should be responded to, we think these questions should be left, for the present at least, to judicial determination.

We can not assume that the courts will improperly determine them or that the courts will invade by any order or decree in this matter the constitutional prerogatives of this House. Should these things unfortunately result, it will then be time enough for the House to assert its dignity and enforce its constitutional rights.

The question presented by the record is not entirely free from difficulty, for it is a fact that membership of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress is based upon membership of Congress, and all the duties of the House Members of said joint committee, although clearly imposed by statute, are nevertheless the direct result of legislative responsibilities imposed upon the membership of the House.

Upon the other hand, the Constitution does not exempt any laws or statutes enacted by Congress from judicial construction and enforcement and Congress can not write into the Constitution any limitation upon the judicial power. Neither can your committee, in passing upon this matter, ignore the fact that the acts of the Members of this House complained are distinctly alleged to be in violation of a statutory executive duty. Upon the whole, therefore, your committee concludes that there is at least sufficient doubt upon all the questions raised by the said court proceeding, in so far as they may directly or indirectly involve the dignity of the House, to authorize a response to the writ of the court and their consideration in the forum of the judiciary.

Your committee has not overlooked the fact that, under the rules and precedents of the House, no Member thereof can waive the privileges of the House except by the express consent of the House, and in order to save all questions of privilege we think it would be advisable for the House to grant permission to the three Members involved to make response to the order of the court. We have not overlooked the further fact that the House is now in session and that the Members thereof, without the consent of the House, can not, while such session continues, be haled into court except in certain specified cases of which the case pending is not one. Believing, however, that Congress, nor its Members, are above or superior to the laws they enact, and believing that the highest legislative body in the land can not afford to set the example of defiance to the law and the courts, except in a clearly defined case of invasion of legislative prerogatives by the judicial power, and believing that in this particular case a due and proper respect for the judicial branch of the Government requires that that department be fully advised and informed of the attitude of the House in these matters and likewise be fully informed as to all the facts in connection with the appointment of members of the Joint Committee on Printing and of their duties to the end that a proper decree and order may be entered in the premises, we recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Whereas the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at the instance of the Valley Paper Company (Incorporated) as plaintiff, has caused to be served on ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY, Members of this House, a rule to show cause why writ of mandamus should not issue against them as members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, by reason of their alleged action as members of such committee in rejecting certain proposals of the said Valley Paper Company (Incorporated) to furnish certain paper for public printing and binding: Now, therefore.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the said ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY be, and they are hereby, granted permission to enter an appearance in response to said rule, for the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction of the court, and taking such further action and interposing such further defenses as to them may seem proper, and for all such purposes they are hereby authorized and permitted to absent themselves from the sessions of the House.

EXHIBIT.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Valley Paper Company (Incorporated), plaintiff, v. The Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, composed of REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, respondents. At law, No. —.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

To the honorable the justices of the supreme court:

The petition of the Valley Paper Company, of Holyoke, Mass., through its attorney, Fred B. Rhodes, for a writ of mandamus against the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, respectfully represents:

1. That your petitioner, the Valley Paper Company, is a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of Massachusetts.

2. That the respondents, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, are charged under the law with the duty of considering proposals for furnishing paper for the public printing and binding of the United States Government and with the duty of awarding contracts for such paper to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government.

3. In pursuance of the provisions of section 3 to 11, both inclusive, of "An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895, the Public Printer invited your petitioner to submit a bid for furnishing paper for the use of the United States Government and forwarded to said petitioner proposals to be opened by said Joint Committee on Printing of Congress on January 21, 1910, at 10.30 a. m., for furnishing paper for public printing and binding for the period from March 1, 1910, to February 28, 1911.

4. In compliance with the provisions of said proposal, your petitioner submitted a bid for furnishing the aforesaid paper for public printing and binding, which bid said members of Joint Committee on Printing of Congress have refused to consider on the ground that said bid was not accompanied by a bond approved in the manner prescribed by the law hereinbefore referred to, to wit, that the bond which accompanied said bid was not accompanied by a certificate of approval. The certificate required to be filed in connection with said bond reads as follows:

"I certify that I have made due and diligent inquiry as to the ability of the sureties on the above bond and am satisfied that they are good and sufficient for the sum of $10,000."

Your petitioner states that there was filed with the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress before said bids were opened a certificate of Mr. Justice Stafford certifying that the Illinois Surety Company, which was surety on the bond of your petitioner, was good and sufficient for the sum of $10,000. Said certificate was read by said Joint Committee on Printing of Congress at the time the bids were opened. Your petitioner further alleges that the bond of the Illinois Surety Company accompanied said proposal, but the certificate showing the Illinois Surety Company was good and sufficient for the sum of $10,000 was not attached to the bond, but was filed separately. Your petitioner alleges, however, that there is no requirement in the law or regulation which requires that the said certificate of approval should be attached to the bond.

5. Your petitioner further alleges that said bid was accompanied by a bond which had been approved by the United States judge of the District of Columbia, as required by law, and that said bond was executed with all the formalities required by the law hereinbefore referred to.

6. Your petitioner further alleges, however, that the law requiring the certificate of approval of a judge or clerk of the court of record does not apply to bonds which were executed by a corporate surety, and, as the bond of your petitioner was executed by a corporate surety, no certificate of a judge or clerk of the court of record was required under the law.

7. Your petitioner is advised and believes that the bid submitted by it was the lowest and best bid received on a large number of items and that the refusal of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress to consider said proposal filed by your petitioner is without authority of law and is to the great injury of the petitioner.

Wherefore petitioner prays:

1. That a writ of mandamus be issued and directed against said members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress—REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY—commanding them to withdraw awards which have heretofore been made, and in the event the aforesaid bid of your petitioner should be the lowest and best bid, commanding said respondents to award said contract or contracts to your petitioner.

2. That a rule may be issued and served upon the respondents requiring them to appear and show cause why the prayers of this petition be not granted.

3. That such other and further relief may be granted to your petitioner as to the court may seem proper.

RULE TO SHOW CAUSE.

Upon consideration of the petition of the Valley Paper Company filed herein this 2d day of February, 1910, it is by the court this 2d day of February, 1910, ordered that the respondents, the said REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, show cause, if any they may have, on or before the 11th day of February, 1910, at 10 o'clock a. m., why a writ of mandamus should not be issued as prayed in said petition; provided a copy of said petition and this rule be served upon said respondents, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, on or before the 7th day of February, 1910.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

The undersigned dissent from the views of the majority of the committee. The Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, in our opinion, is not a mere creature of a statute. It is appointed under rules of the House of Representatives and the Senate. The appointment of the House Members is provided for in Rule X of the House, and the jurisdiction of the committee is defined under House Rule XI. This committee is the creature of Congress. The House Members are provided by House action, and the Senate Members are provided by Senate action. Manifestly this joint committee, created in this way by the two Houses of Congress, was, for the convenience of the two Houses, for the proper discharge of the legislative functions of the Congress, composed of the two Houses. Of course, the House and the Senate could have provided some other way for their necessary printing and the like, but the two Houses of Congress have seen fit to adopt this plan of a joint committee to control the printing, and so forth, of the two Houses. This committee is not appointed by the statute. No legislature can bind any subsequent legislature. Any Senate or any House of Representatives of any Congress may at any time refuse to appoint members of this joint committee. They are not created by and do not hold under a statute.

It is true that when so appointed by the Senate and House of Representatives they receive aid from a statute. Such aid is often granted to different committees in their legislative duties, it being necessary, in the opinion of the two Houses, for the more convenient discharge of their duties to have power conferred upon the committee. For example, it is often necessary that a joint committee of investigation—such as the committee now investigating the Interior Department and the Bureau of Forestry—should have money for its expenses and should have power to enforce process by subpœna, which can be obtained only by law. That law, however, so far as it creates such a committee, is in the nature of a concurrent resolution. A concurrent resolution of both Houses is included in such a law, and the law being for the appointment of a committee for the information of the two Houses, the committee is subject only to the control of those Houses. The law is in aid of their legislative duties and not in derogation therefrom. The printing of bills, House and Senate documents, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the executive documents was and is primarily for the information of Congress—a necessary part of its legislative business. The proper publication of the laws enacted by Congress is essential to their validity. Congress either directly or through its committees and each House of Congress have from the beginning exercised a control over the public printing. The printer was formerly called the "Congressional Printer," and was elected by the joint action of the two Houses. It is true that the scope of the work of the Public Printer has been enlarged perhaps to an extent not thought of in the early days of the Republic. It includes a mass of public documents which are for the information of the people as well as for that of Congress, but which are primarily for the information of Congress and in order to secure good legislation.

Instead of making separate contracts for printing, as was done by Congress in the early days, a supervisory control of the work of the Printing Office is allowed to the Joint Committee on Printing, including the ordering of such emergency documents as may be needed, the selection of the standard of paper, and, in this particular case, the determination by their award as if they were a committee of arbitration, which particular bid is "lowest and best for the interests of the United States." This function of supervision of public printing is one necessarily belonging to the Houses of Congress, so far as the congressional printing is concerned. Such supervision is a legislative act, and the fact that it incidentally affects the other public printing does not make any action of the joint committee in that regard any the less a legislative act. That committee are a committee of Congress acting for the two Houses and not subject to suit at law. And this legislative power and discretion of Congress to direct and control its printing, the purchase of its stationery and the like, can not be abridged or interfered with by the courts.

There are many like examples. The Committee on the Library originally had the duty of purchase of books for the information of Congress in the Library of Congress. That library has grown so that it is now managed by outside officers under a law, but that law still recognizes a supervisory control in certain matters as belonging to the Committee on the Library of the two Houses. Whenever the Joint Committee on Printing has anything to do with the public printing it acts solely as a committee of the two Houses. The Secretary of the Interior, when he acts at all in the mattter of the public printing acts as an officer. In his case he may be amenable to court action, but the committee of Congress can not be subjected to court process because the legislative department in the discharge of its functions must be forever independent of the judicial department.

It is impossible that any Member of Congress can become an officer under the United States, because upon his becoming such officer he can no longer be a Member of either House, for the reason that "no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office." Any statute is void, so far as it endeavors to give any civil office to a Member of Congress. The statute in question should not be construed as adding any official powers, but only as aiding the committee properly to carry on their work. There is no power conveyed in the statute in question which is inconsistent with the legislative duties of the committee. In fact, as already stated, it is only in aid of their functions as legislators.

The functions of the joint committee in the matter complained of were not a statutory executive duty. They were purely of judgment and discretion, for the contracts are to be awarded by them to the lowest and best bidder in the interest of the Government. Their functions in this matter are not executive, but purely of judgment and discretion as a committee as to what proposals are lowest and best for the interest of the Government. A careful examination of the statute with reference to public printing will show that no executive functions are intrusted to the joint committee. Everything executive is to be done by the Public Printer, and the joint committee only advise, decide, and award, and all this is done in the discharge of a necessary authority of the two Houses of Congress—of Congress itself to provide for the printing of the RECORD, documents, and so forth.

To hold that the members of the joint committee are answerable to court process would be to hold that they are officers within the meaning of the Constitution, and might render nugatory the act which was intended solely to aid the joint committee of the two Houses conveniently and properly to discharge a duty necessarily incidental to the full exercise of the legislative powers of Congress. The inconveniences which would attend the recognition of such a suit are manifold. Members are to be summoned from their legislative duties to appear in court. If judgment goes against them they are in contempt, but no process of contempt, under the Constitution, can issue against them while they are engaged in their legislative duties. These members are now so engaged.

It is evident from the process of the court which has been served upon the Representatives named in the preamble to the resolution that whatever acts have been performed or have not been performed by the members of the joint committee were solely in the discretion of the members of the committee as Members of Congress, and it is also evident from the same process that the action of the committee is sought to be reviewed by a writ of mandamus after the act has been performed. A writ of mandamus will not lie for such purposes.

Two courses, in our judgment, are open.

The first course is to resolve that the judge in granting and issuing the rule to show cause in the mandamus proceedings, and in causing the same to be served upon the Members of the House, thereby unlawfully invaded the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of the House and of its Members, and that the court was without jurisdiction to grant said rule, and that the Representatives should be directed to make no appearance in response thereto.

The second course would be to amend the resolution as reported by the majority of the committee by striking out all after the words "they are hereby granted permission to enter an appearance in response to said rule for the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction of the court" and inserting in lieu thereof "and if necessary to prosecute an appeal or writ of error from any judgment therein, and for such purpose they are hereby authorized and permitted to absent themselves from the sessions of the House."

We are unwilling to allow a general appearance which will admit, even for this particular case, that the committees of this House are responsible to any authority except the House itself.

RICHARD WAYNE PARKER.
HENRY D. CLAYTON.
R. L. HENRY.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a few moments, I think I can make perfectly clear the position of the Judiciary Committee. If the House paid attention to the reading of the majority report, the House should now very well understand and comprehend the purposes and the conclusions of the majority of this committee.

Mr. Speaker, there is no member of that committee, as there is no Member of this House, I apprehend, who would not resent any attempt upon the part of the executive or the judicial departments of this Government to control or coerce or direct legislation or to interfere with any legislative duty of this body or of any Member of it. Your committee was confronted with a proposition that did not seem on its face to involve any matters of legislative duty. Our friends who dissent from us, as I gather from the reading of the minority views, assert that this Joint Committee on Printing is not the creature of a statute. I desire in reply to this position to direct the attention of the House, first, to the rules of this House. Rule X provides, among other things, that:

Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall appoint at the commencement of each Congress the following standing committees, namely—

Naming a great many committees, and among them—

A Committee on Printing, to consist of three members.

We have involved in this case a suit instituted against the Joint Committee on Printing, composed of six members.

Rule XI, which defines the duties of the various committees, says in paragraph 37:

All proposed legislation or orders touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House.

There is a provision that certain bills shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House, but there is no rule that creates the Joint Committee on Printing. Now, where and how does the Joint Committee on Printing originate? I have in my hand the acts of January 12, 1895, and there is recited there a law that was approved by the President on January 12, 1895, the caption of which is:

An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

It is quite a lengthy act, but the very first paragraph of it reads:

That there shall be a Joint Committee on Printing, consisting of three members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, who shall have the powers hereinafter stated.

The act then proceeds to define the powers of this joint committee; and we find that their powers are by no means limited to the printing for Congress, but they supervise the printing for the Government of the United States. Among other things, we find that they shall "advertise for proposals to furnish paper for the Government."

Not for the House or for Congress, it will be noted, but for the Government; and it is provided in section 5 of the act:

The sealed proposals to furnish paper shall be opened in the presence of the Joint Committee on Printing, and the contracts shall be awarded by them to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government.

Now, there are numerous acts that this joint committee is authorized to perform, and nowhere is it provided that they shall submit their recommendations to the Congress as to what contracts shall be entered into or as to what shall be done; but the law provides that they shall perform the acts, and that is an end of them.

Now, my able and learned friends who maintain that that sort of work is legislative, it seems to me may have some difficulty to maintain that proposition. The majority of this committee, Mr. Speaker, having reached the conclusion that the matter was one that, for the present at least, should be disposed of by the courts, did not think it wise for Congress to undertake to determine in advance of the judicial hearing that the acts of this committee were either legislative or executive. We did not think, if we were going to refer the matter to the courts, that we ought to determine it in advance of the hearing. But, Mr. Speaker, when gentlemen undertake to say that the act of awarding a contract for printing or for paper on behalf of the Treasury Department of this Government, for instance, is a legislative act, I would ask where or how does this Congress receive the power to delegate to this joint committee the power to legislate? If it is a legislative act, then it seems to me that there must be very grave doubts, to say the least, as to the validity of the act on the part of the committee representing Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the majority of this committee find as a fact that this Joint Committee on Printing is the creature of a statute. By the way, that has been true longer than since this act of 1895. If gentlemen will refer to volume 28 of the Statutes at Large, where this act is set forth, there will be found a citation to the Revised Statutes referring to an act passed in 1852. In that year Congress enacted a law that there should be a Joint Committee on Printing, and distinctly provided that the Speaker shall name the three Members of the House, and the President of the Senate shall name the three members of the Senate. When your committee came across the fact that this committee was the creature of a statute, we had before us the Constitution of our country, in which it is recited in section 2 of Article III that the "judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution and the laws of the United States." We were somewhat at a loss to reach a conclusion that a case in law, arising under a law of the United States, was beyond the judicial power. We did not believe that Congress itself had any power to write into the Constitution a limitation of the judicial power by saying that that power was to extend to all cases arising under the laws of the United States except certain cases.

Having reached the conclusion that the judicial power did extend under the Constitution to cases arising under this act of 1895, we could not bring ourselves to the conclusion that any court of competent jurisdiction, entertaining any suit that is predicated solely upon this law, was invading the domain or the prerogatives of the Congress.

It seems to us that if there is to be an invasion of our prerogatives, it is yet to come. We can not assume that the judicial branch of this Government will fail to do its duty. We can not assume that the judicial branch of this Government will not be as true to the Constitution as we claim to be. We can not assume that it will undertake to construe this statute wrongly or to enforce any order or decree that will invade the domain and prerogatives of the Congress of the United States. Should the courts undertake to do so, it seems to me that then would be time enough for Congress to assert its dignity.

Now, the status of this matter is simply that here is a suit filed. There are allegations in it that certain individuals who are not even described as Members of Congress have disobeyed or failed to follow a statute, a law of the land, and relief is sought by reason of those allegations.

That suit has been served upon each of the parties named as a defendant. Does not that fact give the court jurisdiction to enter whatever decree may seem to the court proper, upon the showing made by the complainant? The presence of the defendants who have been served is not necessary to enable the court to enter a decree in the matter. It might be that if the defendants absent themselves a decree will be entered. It might be that we will believe such decree in violation of the prerogatives of this House; but we have not reached that point yet, and it seemed to us that inasmuch as the case was preceding on its face for a violation of a statute, upon allegations that certain people charged with certain executive duties had not performed them, the proper thing to do would be to make a response to the summons of the court. It seemed to us that in the zeal of the legislative department to enforce its prerogatives and its dignity it should not go to the extent of curtailing the prerogatives and the dignity of a coordinate branch of the Government; and it seemed to us that it was a matter of policy, of wisdom, and of showing proper respect to a great coordinate branch of the Government, that response should be made to this suit. So believing, we have recommended.

It is suggested in the minority views, as I gather from the reading of them, that if this Joint Committee on Printing constitutes an office, these Members of Congress are not eligible to hold it. If we turn to the Constitution, we find that the language is that—no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office.

And the question might be not, Is the holding of the office void, if it be an office, but, Is the seat in this House valid because the Member holds an office under the Government of the United States?

Your Committee on the Judiciary have not undertaken to determine that or to determine any question involved in this case. It has seemed to us that the questions involved are judicial questions, and that a proceeding having been instituted, due and orderly procedure of the same ought to be had.

Now, for myself, Mr. Speaker, I have an opinion from reading the statutes in reference to this joint committee, that it might be wise on the part of Congress to confer the duties of that committee upon some other parties than Members of this Congress.

Certain it is, Mr. Speaker, that if we are in danger of having any of our membership involved in any litigation, or in any trouble, by reason of service on this committee, the remedy is within the hands of Congress; not by denouncing a great coordinate branch of the Government that is clearly exercising, so far, expressly conferred judicial power, but by repealing this law, or by amending this law, so that there could be no possible conflict or question to arise in the future. That is merely a suggestion that I throw out as pertinent at this particular time.

The only question now for this House to deal with is whether or not a response shall be made to this writ or whether the court shall be ignored and defied. So far, Mr. Speaker, as it is proposed to defy and ignore the court the majority of your committee can not agree. Having concluded that it is wise to have a response made to this writ, it occurred to us that possibly we should not limit the action of these named defendants when they did respond, and therefore it was thought in our resolution after reciting that permission of the House should be given them to enter an appearance and plead to the jurisdiction of the court, that they should also be empowered to take such further action as to them might seem proper. I understand that that part of our resolution is the part that the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey excepts to and wishes to strike from the resolution. It seemed wise to your committee that if these Members were going to the court they should go prepared to fully advise and fully inform the court as to the law and the duties of these Members of the House who chanced to serve on this Joint Committee on Printing. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, it is only because this is an important matter that there is a minority report from the Committee on the Judiciary. At the first blush, it is of very little importance whether three gentlemen, Members of this House, should appear in court to answer a suit actually asking a mandamus to set aside something already done, and actually asking for a peremptory mandamus to direct them as to an award which should of right be made, in their discretion, "to the lowest and best bidder for the interests of the Government." This would seem of very little importance; but a larger question lies beneath this suit, namely, whether a committee of this House shall be haled before a court of justice for any action of that committee or whether the action of that committee is not in its essence, and must not be in its essence, legislative action.

This is, we are told, an unusual committee. True, it is a joint committee. It is recognized by law. The Revised Statutes recognize the Joint Committee on Printing, and the act of 1895 and several other acts recognize that committee, just as similar statutes recognize the Committee on the Library. The Statutes give those committees supervisory powers. They do not give them executive power.

The Public Printer has all executive power. The committee supervise. They have the right under the law to say what kind of paper Congress wants in this RECORD and to fix the standard of paper. They are given the right to arbitrate and decide whether the paper comes up to that standard. They are given the right to look over the books and say to the Public Printer that he may advertise for only so much material as is needed. They are given the right to order extra copies of any public document; they are given the right to limit the expense that is placed upon lithographs; they are given the right in that way to supervise and decide on many matters. But they are not executive; they do not do a thing. The Public Printer advertises for bids; the Public Printer does the printing; the Public Printer runs the office, and his employees are under the civil service. All that the committee do is advisory, and to decide and say what ought to be done for the Houses of Congress. In this particular case the bids received for paper by the Public Printer on the advertisement of the Public Printer are to be opened in the presence of this committee of the House, and they make "award." An award is not an executive act, but a judicial act. They make the award as a judicial committee of the House as to what particular bid is the lowest and most for the interests of the United States, and then the Public Printer makes the contract.

Mr. STERLING. The gentleman stated a while ago that their function was purely advisory. He corrects that later by saying that they granted the award. Now, that is not supervisory, that is making the contract itself. All the Public Printer does is to prepare the contract, is to write the contract, which this committee makes.

Mr. PARKER. I do not care to have my time taken with a statement. I will answer that, however. I made no correction; their act is perfectly advisory. They are to award what bid is lowest and best for the Government. It is the decision on a matter of fact, a quasi judicial decision on a matter of fact, and upon that judicial decision the Public Printer makes the contract. I am glad the gentleman made the interruption for that reason.

Our statement has been read to the House. I do not want to take much more time. I want to say briefly what I feel on this subject. This is a committee, now and from the beginning, appointed in this House. It is not appointed by statute. This House, notwithstanding any statute, could refuse to appoint it. There is a statute which aids the House in getting the paper and print that it needs for its work.

The statute aids the joint committee in doing this. If a statute of the United States gives power to a committee of this House to issue a subpœna to bring witnesses for an investigation, does that make the statute the author of the committee? By no means. It gives extra power to the House committee and aids it in legislative matters, and that is all. If anything more than powers which are for the benefit of the legislative branch of the United States be given to that committee, the statute in that respect would be void. Committeemen are officers of this House. They can not constitutionally be made officers of any other department of the Government. They can not, therefore, be sued by mandamus as such officers. The statute should be construed so as to be valid. It should not be so construed as to grant powers which we could not grant and which would turn the men who took them out of office.

Now, what shall we do as a practical matter? I have thought, perhaps, that it would not be inadvisable to plead to the jurisdiction and take a writ of error or other form of appeal, if necessary, to the Supreme Court of the United States, so that we should have an authoritative decision on that matter rather than to stand against the court. That is the purpose of my amendment.

The purpose of the amendment offered by my associate, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], is to declare that the court has no power in this matter; that we will not allow this kind of action to be brought against committees of this House, that they may be haled into court at any time. I shall vote for it, but I shall vote certainly for my own amendment. The amendment offered by my brother on the committee is the one that has been adopted already as to the other defendants in the suit, I believe by almost unanimous vote. It is a question of policy for this House, in the protection of its own privileges, whether it will allow plea to be made to the jurisdiction and fight that question to the highest court and to the end. It is not a question of policy, but to my mind entirely out of the question, that this House should allow and order its own committees to appear in court like any other defendant, and to plead and defend generally.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Georgia to consume some of his time now.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that each member of the committee is entitled to time. I was recognized in my own right as a member of the committee, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PARKER. It is not the intention of the gentleman to limit debate, because it is now 20 minutes past 4 o'clock.

Mr. BRANTLEY. It is for the House to limit debate.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address the House briefly on this subject, but before doing so I would prefer that some Member in favor of the majority report of the committee would debate the question first. I ask now if any gentleman in favor of the report desires to further debate the question?

Mr. DIEKEMA. I do.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER of Vermont). The gentleman from Michigan is recognized in his own right.

Mr. DIEKEMA. Mr. Speaker, the two reports, the majority report and the minority report, are very radically different. The majority report proposes two things, first, a permission to be given to this committee to appear and plead to the jurisdiction of the court, raising the question in the court of the jurisdiction of the court over these defendants, because they are Members of the House of Representatives; and in the next place, the majority report authorizes these Members to take such further steps in the courts as they may deem necessary. The minority report, on the other hand, seeks to absolutely ignore the court and say to the court that we will not appear at all, we will treat your citing us into court as an invasion of the constitutional rights of the Members, and we will have nothing to do with you.

I think all Members will agree with me upon this proposition that if there is any reasonable ground for difference of opinion as to whether the court has jurisdiction or not, then in such a case we should submit that question to the court; that under no circumstances, unless we feel absolutely sure that the court is invading our authority, our jurisdiction, our constitutional rights, should we ignore the court and say we will not appear at all. Then the simple question seems to be, Is there so plain a case here of invasion that we can afford to say we will not appear at all. If, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIEKEMA. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is it not true there is very little difference between the majority and minority reports on the very question the gentleman has been discussing?

Mr. DIEKEMA. That is not true.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The majority report asks, does it not, that this House give the members of the committee leave to answer the court process and appear in court? Does not that imply that without such leave they have no power to so appear? That is practically what the minority report says, too, is it not?

Mr. DIEKEMA. No; everybody concedes that those Members must first submit to the House the question as to whether their rights and the rights of the House have been infringed upon, but here comes the difference. A great majority of the Committee on the Judiciary do not concede that under the special conditions of this case we have the right to say to the court that it has assumed jurisdiction in this case, and that in so doing it has infringed upon our prerogatives. There is the difference between the two.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. But does not the report of the majority necessarily imply that those Members who have been cited by process to appear can not appear without leave of the House, and does not that imply the court has exceeded its power and jurisdiction?

Mr. DIEKEMA. It implies that any man who is proceeded against by process from a court ought not to answer without first submitting the question to the House. We are all agreed upon that proposition.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say everyone here does not agree to that proposition, because the Supreme Court of the United States has held just the opposite.

Mr. DIEKEMA. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will except the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio frequently needs exception.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. DIEKEMA. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer to the rule. Under Rule XI, which provides for the appointment of this joint committee, I read this, paragraph 57:

> All proposed legislation or orders touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House—

And then comes this significant statement:

> In addition to the executive duties of the joint committee, the House branch exercises legislative functions, reporting resolutions and bills relating to printing, propositions to correct the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—

And so on.

Definitely setting forth that when this committee acts as a joint committee their duties are executive. Now, this committee, when acting as a joint committee, its duties are exclusively executive, and it is only when they act here in the House as a House committee that their duties are judicial. If their duties as a joint committee are executive, then there has been no invasion of our constitutional rights by the court, and our rights have not been infringed upon. Now, Mr. Speaker, coming back to the proposition I was trying to state when interrupted, I desire to state this, that if there is any reasonable doubt upon the proposition, then we certainly ought to raise the question in the court. We have no more right to infringe upon the prerogatives of the judicial department than the judicial department has to infringe upon our prerogatives. In the Judiciary Committee of this House there are 14 members who believe that it is a question of the greatest doubt, and there are only 3 members who disagree with the 14. Certainly, then, we can not say that it is a clear question, a question plain and explicit, so clear that we have a right to defy the authority of the court.

This joint committee acts under statute law. The Constitution has given to the court the right to construe statutes. These men were acting, not under the directions of the House, not under any rules of the House, but they were acting under one of the statutes of the United States. The construction of that statute is a question for the court. If that be so, then the question as to whether these Members obeyed the laws of the land is a question to be determined by the court.

I am not here to say that the question of jurisdiction will not be finally settled in favor of this committee, but I am here to say that there is the gravest doubt upon this proposition on the part of 14 members of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is not long since, Mr. Speaker, that some people in the land refused to obey an order of the court upon this high plea. They said:

> Under the Constitution of the United States our individual rights have been infringed upon. Our rights as American citizens, protected by the Constitution, have been infringed upon, and we will not obey the orders of the court, because these orders infringe on our constitutional rights.

Shall we follow this example in a case so uncertain and doubtful as the present one? Shall we assume a position of defiance to the courts, or shall we say that we will submit to a coordinate branch of the Government this great judicial question?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I agree that the liberties of our people can not be maintained unless each one of these three great departments of the Government—the executive, the judicial, and the legislative—is jealous of its own authority; but I am also here to say that law must finally be interpreted by the courts, and we can safely intrust to the courts of this land, whether State or Federal, our rights as Members of Congress and our rights as individual citizens. The courts are the bulwark of safety for all the future of this land. Our lives, our liberties, our possessions, our reputations are safe in the hands of the American courts. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DIEKEMA. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is it not true that under the law, if the act is done already, a court will not issue a mandamus in that case?

Mr. DIEKEMA. That is the general rule relating to mandamus.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Now, then, the only exception under that rule is when there is fraud or bad faith in the committing of the act. Is not that also true?

Mr. DIEKEMA. That enters into the merits of the question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is there any charge of fraud in this petition?

Mr. DIEKEMA. There is not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If there is, the Clerk did not read it. Then, is not the whole question as it now comes before us a purely academic one?

Mr. DIEKEMA. It is not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Why not?

Mr. DIEKEMA. The question which the gentleman from Illinois raises, Mr. Speaker, is simply one of defense in the courts. Now, the question before us is whether we will get into court at all and defend, yes or no.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. But if the court issues process against Members of this body in some matter that was clearly academic, would that Member be required to appear in court, and would this body permit him to appear in court?

Mr. DIEKEMA. Certainly not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And if this case be one like that, will the Member be allowed to appear? Let me restate the questions I asked you, so that they may appear concretely. The law unquestionably is that the court will not issue a writ of mandamus to order the doing of a thing which is already done. But this thing is already done. It is also the law that if in the doing of it fraud entered, the court holds it was not done at all; but in this case there is no charge of fraud. Therefore there is nothing now before the district court in the way of a subject for mandamus. The thing has been done. They came into court and asked the court to order the doing of a thing which is done. The court will not entertain such a proposition. Now——

Mr. DIEKEMA. I will yield to a question, but not to a speech.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I would like, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] would yield to a question from me——

Mr. DIEKEMA. I have the floor now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. In response to that very query that you have propounded to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA] I would like to propound one to you. The Constitution says that no man shall be held responsible before the courts for words uttered upon the floor of this House in debate. If the court in a suit issued a writ against the honorable gentleman from Illinois or a suit was brought against him for slander or libel now, it is perfectly apparent that the gentleman is exempt from liability, but he will not come to Congress and ask whether he ought to plead; he would enter court and plead his privilege, and that is exactly what the resolution of the majority here asks us to do. I have no doubt that upon the facts of this case the court upon hearing will dismiss the case. There is no doubt the moment those people are in court they are out of court; but surely your proposition that the court can not enforce the remedy is not proper; that mandamus is not the proper remedy. To withdraw a contract already awarded does not release the defendants from making this defense in court. That is the exact question there, and your question goes to the power of the court, not to its jurisdiction.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, instead of interrupting the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has just taken his seat, I concluded to begin my remarks by noticing his assertions. The gentleman fails to distinguish between the personal rights of an individual Member and his rights as a Representative. He fails to distinguish between the rights of individual men and the constitutional rights and prerogatives of the House of Representatives. This is not a question of personal or individual rights of men.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Alabama pardon me for interrupting him?

Mr. CLAYTON. If I have misstated your case——

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. You have unquestionably misstated the intention of my remarks. I did not attempt to draw any analogy between the rights of the individual and those of the committee.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then for what purpose was your illustration, if it was not an act analogous?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I simply say that, notwithstanding the fact that either the committee or the individual might be exempt from prosecution, they were not exempt from going into court and pleading privilege.

Mr. CLAYTON. Ah, the gentleman steps aside from the consideration of the question now before the House and tries a supposititious one, one that is not at all analogous to the one under consideration by this House; and that is what I intended to call the attention of the House to.

Mr. Speaker, I could answer the remarkable speech made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA] a few minutes ago. I could answer it and give to this House a tone to my utterance that would smack, as his did, of a stump speech against a labor organization; but, sir, I think the dignity of this House rises above reference to court cases where, perhaps, misguided men have been advised to pursue a possibly mistaken remedy to obtain legal redress. Mr. Speaker, where he indulges in what is pronounced by the books on logic as "begging the question," I might follow that obnoxious example and beg the question here. I might do better than he has done and refer to the decision in another body on this precise question as having been well-nigh unanimous in favor of the proposition that I present to the House and contrary to his own, diametrically opposed to the views of that gentleman, the gentleman from Michigan. If he is to parade before this House one case in the courts and hold it up to us to deter us from deciding this question, for fear that we might follow the example of other gentlemen whom he thinks mere agitators, let me hold up to him and commend to the House the better illustration or case that comes of a body charged with the duty of deciding this precise question, and which upon a fair consideration has decided this question in favor of my contention.

The gentleman further begs the question by the pitiful plea of telling this House of Representatives that 14 members of the Committee on the Judiciary concur in the opinion which he has advanced. Ah, Mr. Speaker, if this were on the field, where physical force decides the contest, numbers would count, but in this intellectual forum the brutality of numbers is not the determining factor. The avoirdupois of your 14 committeemen is not the question. Often minorities are correct. Often majorities are wrong. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is but recent history that the Committee on the Judiciary resolved unanimously to change the day of inauguration, and we brought that question before this House and got so badly walloped that the committee sought the first opportunity to withdraw it from the House and take it back and bury it in the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is one involving the rights and privileges of this House. The gentleman says, eloquently, that this House ought to stand for the law. It is upon that fundamental principle that I shall base my remarks in advocating the adoption of the substitute which I have offered—the law, the supreme law of the land, the organic law of the Union. That law the Constitution itself provides:

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in the Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives. (Const., Art. I, sec. 1.)

And the Constitution further provides that—

> They (Senators and Representatives) shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, etc. (Const., Art. I, sec. 6.)

And, again, the Constitution says:

> • • • No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office. (Const., Art. I, sec. 6.)

It is for the observation of that law, it is for the preservation of the rights of this House and the representatives in Congress of the people under that law, that I now contend.

It is for the separation and independence forever of the legislative from the judicial that I oppose the opinion of the majority of the committee. There must be no trespassing upon the rights of the lawmaking power by the judicial power. These powers are well defined and distinct. This House will not attempt to usurp what belongs to the judiciary. The judiciary must not attempt to obtain what belongs to the Congress or to abridge the full and free exercise of the powers delegated to the Congress.

The matter here presented involves the consideration of several questions. It involves the question as to preserving the rights of this House. It involves the question of preserving the rights of Representatives in this House. The report made by the majority of the committee asserts in substance that even from the view point of the majority this is a close question. That majority carefully refrains from expressing any view on the possible grave consequences of the conflict of two departments of the Government should the judge of a court disregard the limitations imposed upon the judicial department, but the majority do seek to commit this House to the view that a Representative here should be haled into court and made to respond in an action at law in a matter inseparably connected with the discharge of his duties as a Representative in this body, and that, too, while the Congress is in session.

According to the report of the majority this is a doubtful question; that is to say, they have doubt about the correctness of their view of the constitutional question and seem to defend their report upon the ground that it is nice, in consideration of this grave question, to be excessively deferential to a judge who has nothing to do with the transaction of the business of the Congress. The 14 members of that committee said it was doubtful, and that weighty majority of 14 have resolved all doubts under the Constitution, under the rules of the House, under the prerogatives belonging to the House and Members here; have resolved all these doubts in favor of the court. If I had any doubt on this question, I take it the safer rule for this House would be to resolve that doubt in favor of the House and in favor of the protection of the Members and the preservation of a quorum here.

Mr. Speaker, our Government has lived over one hundred years, and I believe, under the blessing of God, it will live and hand down human liberty for centuries to come. [Applause.] This is the first time in the long history of our Government, with men as selfish in the past as they are to-day, seeking government contracts in the past as they seek them to-day; with judges in the past trying to broaden their jurisdiction as they are to-day; but this is the first time in the history of the Government when an action has been instituted at law against a Member of the House or the Senate on account of his official action while and as a Member of the House or Senate.

Talk about the growth of the Constitution without amendment! We all deplore that. Talk about the growth of the law without statutory enactment! Talk about your judicial amendments! Talk about your judicial enactments! In my humble opinion, if we depart here to-day from the long course of conduct of the House of Representatives and authorize such action as is proposed here to-day, we will have in some sort a pretended amendment of the Constitution by action of the House of Representatives that will rise up as a precedent to plague this House in the future conduct of the public business. [Applause.]

Now, I am going to assume, because I know it to be a fact, that every Member in this House, whether lawyer or layman, knows of the division of the Government into three coordinate departments. You know the wisdom of it. The history of the Constitution, the history of all attempts at the creation of a republican form of government, demonstrates the reason. Before Montesquieu wrote men had considered the division of government into three coordinate departments and the preservation of the rights and independence of each of these departments. The line of cleavage between the powers of one department and the others has been the very safety of the people and has been the means of the perpetuity of our free institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to call attention to the fact that when the Speaker appointed the regular committees of the House he also appointed a Committee on Printing, composed of ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STUBGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY.

Now, is it not a fact that that regular committee as appointed by the Speaker are members of the Joint Committee on Printing, but that they are nevertheless members of the Committee on Printing of the House, appointed by the Speaker when all of the other committees are appointed?

Mr. CLAYTON. And could not have served on this joint committee if two facts had not concurred; first, a membership in this House, second, an appointment by the Speaker.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I just want to call the gentleman's attention to that fact.

Mr. CLAYTON. Those two facts concur, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] in the ingenious and able speech which he made, laid stress upon the statute, but he ignored what the House of Representatives had done. He ignored the fact that the people had elected those three Representatives to this Congress, and that they had taken an oath of office. He ignored the fact that by authority of this House they were put upon this committee. It is but half a statement to say that they were made eligible to appointment on that committee. If so, then it falls back still upon the proposition that under the rules and by authority of the House, they were put upon that joint committee, and it is a matter of law and fact that with the expiration of this Congress the three Representatives who are on that committee will cease to be members of that committee.

Furthermore, it is in the power of this House to remove them at any time. So at last, in any view, these three men are of the body of this House and in this official capacity a committee of the House, provided and controlled by this House. The House can remove them and put in others. Then, how can it be said that they are the mere creatures of a statute?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the independence of the House as such is involved. Shall we permit that independence to be invaded? Shall we permit these powers to fully exercise that independence in order to discharge the full functions of legislation to be taken away by judicial process? Shall we permit those powers to be abridged by a court? Whenever the House permits a court, or recognizes the right of a court, to hale before it members of a committee of this body and question the official action had under the direction of the House, then is surrendered to the court the authority to examine a multitude of questions and matters that would hamper or defeat the proper discharge of the duties of the House and the Representatives.

Now, that is taking the view of it, so far as the House is concerned, that the independence and dignity of this House is involved. You can not get away from it. For the convenience of the business of this House the House and the Senate passed this act, which is invoked to justify the conduct of the judge, not creating the House committee, not creating the Senate committee, but in recognition of the committee, for the purpose of enabling the House and the Senate to more conveniently discharge its public duty. Whenever the House selects an agency to perform some duty incidental to the legislative duty, no court can thwart the will of the House upon the pretense that such agency performed executive functions, and are therefore amenable to its jurisdiction.

Again, the right of the individual Representative to discharge his official duties is involved. Here it is proposed in the report to surrender to the scrutiny of the court the work of your committee, for your convenience, the printing of your RECORD, the printing of your documents, the execution of your legislative will in the matter of detail, just as necessary as it is to have a clerk to keep the Journal. That is the first thing you are asked to do.

Then the next thing you are asked to do is to surrender three Members of this House now in session, protected by the Constitution, to the jurisdiction of the court, not in a strictly civil action, but in a proceeding that may be said to partake of a quasi criminal nature; an action that does not seek to recover damages, an action that does not seek to recover property, but an action at the bottom of which is the power to imprison for failure to obey the alternative writ of mandamus. You can not get away from the proposition that we are asked to authorize these Representatives, a part of this House, to go to court, subject themselves to its process, and when they are there that court can enforce its judgment by a term of imprisonment. Now, the gentleman from Georgia is very ingenious when he says that we must not assume that the court would order these gentlemen to jail and we will reserve what we will do until the court has taken the three Representatives surrendered by us to its jurisdiction. You have all heard the old rag-time song sung by a coon behind the bars, "I rather be outside than to be inside."

I do not think that we ought to humiliate these gentlemen in subjecting them, if you please, to the possibility in an unwarranted proceeding which it is argued will come to naught. The report shows that the contract has been awarded. Well, if so the writ of mandamus will not lie, for there is no allegation of fraudulent conduct, and, therefore, mandamus can not be invoked to undo what has been done and done according to an admitted discretion. But we ought not to assume that the judge who acted in this case will stop short of an order commanding your committee to undo what has been done. Rather, we may be permitted to assume that the court will order what this petitioner wants done. Is that petitioner bringing that suit for fun? Do you expect him to go down to the court and say, "Why, the mandamus will not lie, let it be dismissed?" He is not prosecuting this case for fun.

I am reminded here of the man who had imbibed too much at some banquet, and who later was hanging on to the lamppost heaving up well-nigh his immortal soul at every heave. Some one came along and said, "My good friend, are you sick?" He said, "Yes; you ——— fool, do you suppose I am doing this for fun?" [Laughter.] Do you suppose, Mr. Speaker, that this man brought this suit for fun? Do you suppose this court issued this rule for fun? What is at the bottom of it? If the plaintiff does not intend to insist that the court nullify the action of the committee, it is a mere waste of breath. It is worse than sounding brass and tinkling cymbals to talk about it. What is the case? These gentlemen, if they should be ordered there, will be directed to make an answer and to defend that answer. If that answer, if that defense, does not suit the court, if a mandamus will lie, as the judge seems to hold it will, and he doubtless will still hold, what will be the result of enforcing its judgment? It will be to take three Members of this House by your direction and by your sanction, by your surrender to the jurisdiction of the court, and to let their services be taken away from this body, and they may be confined in some prison. If that is not the intention, if that lies not at the foundation of this suit, then what is the suit for?

Now, the question is twofold, as I said, the independence and dignity of the House, the rights of the individual, and the rights of this body to keep a quorum. I lay down this proposition, that this House ought never to do anything that would effectuate or anything that would seem to effectuate any plan whereby this House can be deprived by a court of a quorum. Yet, if we sanction this, the right to hale our Members down there in a mandamus proceeding, with the power of imprisonment at the back of it, if that is insisted upon and acquiesced in by us, you can readily see that logically it might result in the breaking of a quorum by the action of a court. Now, it is too absurd to contend that we ought to do anything that might lead to such a result. One of our greatest Presidents refused to attend a court in response to a subpœna duces tecum upon the ground that it would set a dangerous precedent, and that a number of judges, by concerted action, could keep him indefinitely away from the discharge of his executive duties at Washington.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. When was this contract awarded?

Mr. CLAYTON. On the 21st of January, my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] tells me.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. I believe the majority report is to the effect that the Members should obtain leave of this House to raise the question in the court. Is that a fact?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is the majority report of the committee, yes; in a case where the action is already had, and out of an extreme desire to respect the court, who does not seem to have had any respect for the law and not much for the dignity and independence of this House, when he improvidently issued this notice.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. Will the gentleman answer this question? How would a Member obtain leave of this House, provided he would be sued, while we are not in session, and after adjournment?

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, I do not think that is the question here, and as I said I do not want to try any case that has not come before us. The Members are here present, and Congress is in session. Of course if Congress were not in session there would be nobody to instruct the three Representatives who are here involved.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Just for the purpose of giving the information, as suggested by the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROTHERMEL], these proposals were opened on the 21st day of January. The awards were made on the 28th day of January, and this writ was issued on the 2d day of February.

Mr. CLAYTON. After the award had been made. Then, so far as the legal status was concerned, it was like a last year's bird's nest, and the eggs and birds all out. There was nothing in it.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the gentleman's argument, and I admit the force of it; but ought not the argument to be made in court instead of here? Is not that the proper place to present the question? Ought not we, the lawmakers of this country, to show our respect for the courts by submitting the question, first, for judicial decision, and then if the courts impinge upon the prerogatives of this branch of the Government, would it not be time then for us to take action?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I thought the gentleman was going to ask me a question. More at length, if not in more eloquent terms, has the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] made that same statement; more at length, if not in more eloquent terms, has my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA] said the same thing. I was endeavoring to answer them, and the gentleman's query, injected into the belly of my speech, served no purpose except a "damnable iteration," if I may quote, of what had been said before. [Laughter.] But in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER], I will say that I do not think the course suggested by him is the proper one, as I have endeavored to show and will further endeavor to show.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to invite the attention of the House to a further consideration of this question. If this House decides that these Members are amenable to this process, then we decide that they are members of a commission with executive powers amounting to making them officers; we decide that they are officers within the meaning of the Constitution. Now, if they are officers within the meaning of the Constitution, holding office incompatible with that of Representatives, holding it in violation of the Constitution, whatever they may have been doing as members of the joint committee may be void or voidable in law. This committee has been acting for some years, long before the act recognizing the joint committee was passed. It is a committee of this House—for this House can not appoint a commission vested with authority other than to aid in the exercise of legislative power or powers necessarily incidental to the full exercise of the legislative power. Whenever the Congress invades the executive branch of the Government to appoint officers to execute duties apart from the legislative duty of Congress, the Constitution is violated, and a Member of Congress who would attempt to execute any civil office outside of his position as a Member of Congress would be guilty of exercising an incompatible office and would forfeit his membership in the Congress.

The joint committee acts as a committee or as executive officers. Whenever an executive office is created it must be filled by executive authority and not by the legislative authority. It is submitted that the correct view is that the joint committee is a legislative committee, and exercises power inseparable and necessarily incidental to the proper discharge of the legislative functions of the Congress. Let me repeat, that whenever Congress appoints persons to civil office the executive department of the Government is invaded by the legislative, and this would offend against the Constitution. It can not be denied that this joint committee holds place by virtue of the fact that the members are elected to the Congress and are afterwards appointed, under the rules of the respective Houses, to the Committee on Printing. This committee performs purely administrative functions. While legislative functions can not be delegated, administrative functions can. The joint committee is simply an agency appointed by the respective Houses for their legislative convenience, to do what the Houses might do directly by concurrent resolution.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understand it—I did not hear the reports read, and I do not know exactly the nature of this action or what is sought to be done here—but as I understand it an order has been issued by a court in this city directing this joint committee to rescind a contract and award it to somebody. Is that it?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is the object of it, of course.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, suppose upon the hearing this committee should refuse to obey the finding of the court that there must be a rescinding of this contract and order it to make another award. Then what would the court do to the committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. I assume it would attempt to enforce its orders even to the extent of imprisoning these Representatives.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is, an imprisonment for contempt——

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Constitution says that no Representative or Senator, except in case of treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be arrested.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But he would be arrested in the discretion of this judge and imprisoned, would he not?

Mr. CLAYTON. Undoubtedly, or else there is no way of making the writ of mandamus effective.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, one more question. I am sent here under the Constitution to represent approximately 200,000 people as a legislator——

Mr. CLAYTON. That is right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (continuing). To make laws. Accurately speaking, they send me here for no other purpose, and my functions are purely legislative. Ought I to jeopardize the rights of my constituents as a legislator by surrendering to a judge in this city the right, possibly, to imprison me for contempt in a case not mentioned in the Constitution?

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the gentleman owes it to his people not to do that thing.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is exactly the point and——

Mr. CLAYTON. And I think this House owes it not only to its own dignity, but to the constituencies back of you gentlemen here present, to take no chance of setting any precedent that might deprive this House of the presence of the Members of the Congress, either now or hereafter.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman permit me one question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Most assuredly.

Mr. JAMES. When Congress is not in session, who performs the duty of opening these bids and awarding them?

Mr. CLAYTON. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to do that.

Mr. JAMES. Now, does not that go to show the duty devolving upon this committee is purely legislative, because when the session ends its duty ends?

Mr. CLAYTON. Why, undoubtedly so. The whole scheme contemplates that this joint committee is created by the two Houses for the purpose of carrying on the business of Congress and if it has gone beyond the business of Congress or what is necessarily incidental to the business of Congress its action is in its nature ultra vires and therefore futile.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Did I understand you to say that if the Secretary of the Interior performed the duty of this joint committee, the Secretary of the Interior was legislative?

Mr. CLAYTON. No, sir. I said he performed a part of the duty that belonged to this legislative committee.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Do you think the Secretary of the Interior can perform any legislative duty?

Mr. CLAYTON. No; I do not. This committee, if it performed the duties of a legislative committee or duties incidental to the full and convenient exercise of the legislative duties of Congress and merely incidental to the proper discharge of legislative duties, then the committee can not be said to have acted in the capacity of civil officers within the meaning of the Constitution. In this way, the committee's discretion in awarding a contract can be sustained. If the committee was acting not as a legislative committee, acting without the sanction of the House, then whatever it may have done was futile.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Does the gentleman believe that Congress has the power to delegate legislative power to any committee or any person?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is not the question. It is no more a legislative duty than the other committees of the House perform every day. It is no more delegation than that. It is incidental to the proper discharge of the business of this House, just like other committees perform.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Can the committees of this House do anything more than to report to the House?

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, yes; they can execute the will of the House in a number of minor particulars.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Is not the joint committee charged with the duty of awarding contracts?

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is getting away. Let us pursue this inquiry a little further. This very House at this very session appointed under the law certain members of an investigating committee, enjoining upon them duties, just as similar duties are enjoined upon other committees; and I say that their action in the Ballinger and Pinchot matter is not subject to court review or court revision or to be interrupted or impeded by the action of the court. Now, the gentleman may not agree to that.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will ask the gentleman if he understands that the Ballinger-Pinchot committee is to do anything more than to investigate and ascertain certain facts and report them to the Congress?

Mr. CLAYTON. When is this Committee on Printing to do but one main thing as its primary object? Its primary object is to provide paper, stationery, and printing for this House and for the Senate, and the other duties enjoined upon it are inseparable incidents to that main duty, and I do not think because an inseparable incident goes with a primary proposition that it invalidates the primary proposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to refer the House to a number of decisions that have drawn that distinction. It has been uniformly held in a number of cases, in a number of commissions or committees composed of Members of the House and Senate, and it has been adjudicated in a number of cases in the courts, which are analogous, that whenever the duty of a committee—the main duty of that committee—is to carry out the proper legislation incidental to the office of legislating, then the fact that some incident arises in it does not deprive the legislative body of having the services of that agency.

I am just going to cite you to one or two. It can not be contended that every position held by a Member of Congress is an office within the meaning of the Constitution. A definition of the word "office" might be profitable. The chairman of a committee in Congress is in one sense an officer holding a position different from other members of the committee. Marks of honor and distinction are given to Members of Congress in every way, but all incident to or growing out of their position as a Member of Congress. It is a mark of distinction to be elected as members of escorts to those particular Members who die; designations are made of committees to notify the President and Senate of certain matters. The mind will run over lists of many positions of trust and honor that are conferred upon Members of Congress where no pretense will be made that the offices are within the meaning of the Constitution.

In The United States v. Cardwell (6 Wall., 393) it is laid down that an office—> is a public station or employment conferred by the Federal Government, and there must be an express idea of tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties.

Here the tenure of the House members of the committee is coterminus with their membership in this body. The member of the committee takes no oath as a member of this committee; he takes his oath as a Member of this House. He receives no emoluments; he gets his pay as a Member of this House. So that there is nothing here to make him an officer.

Then you will find the case in Seventh Ohio State Reports, page 556.

A careful consideration of all the decisions above referred to will show that the positions were merely transitory, occasional, or incidental in their nature, and none of them possessed the element of duration, tenure, or emoluments. Inasmuch as the appointees were but instruments to procure detailed information for the better information and guidance of Congress, they are wholly lacking in the essential elements of an office within the meaning of the Constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, briefly, and I shall conclude. I am not going to assume that a judge who so improvidently issued this writ upon an inartificially drawn petition will not improvidently direct these men to do a thing that they can not now under the law undo. I am not going to assume that he will not put the penalty for violating his order upon them. The question rises higher and above that. As much respect as I have for the courts, I think that a judge on the bench ought to have some respect for a Senator and a Member of the House.

It would be well for us to follow the example of St. Paul, who said:

> I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office.

I think that we are justified in exalting the high offices that we hold here. We hold here under our Constitution, the only body, the only men under the Federal Constitution that can hold a commission direct from the people. Senators hold through an intermediary, the Executive holds through the electoral college, and the judiciary through appointment. We come direct from the people with our commission, and I believe are entitled to be treated with as much respect as the gentleman from Georgia says we ought to treat the judiciary. I think, Mr. Speaker, that in this case the prerogatives and privileges of the House have been violated. We are not seeking here to limit the power of the judicial department of this Government; we are simply saying to a part of that judicial department, We have our legislative duties to perform, we have provided certain agencies and instrumentalities for the printing and the proper conduct of our business, for our convenience, as we see proper to do, and you have issued a mandamus in a case where an authorized committee, a joint committee of the House and the Senate, has already acted to the satisfaction of or without any complaint from the bodies whose creatures they are.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, the House will adopt the substitute that I have offered for the original resolution. I suppose that I may say, as a matter of history, that during Speaker Reed's incumbency he employed the language of a former Speaker, Mr. Grow, and said, in substance, that the proceedings of the other body may in some proper cases be referred to as history without violating any of the rules of this House. So I can say I am justified, I think, in telling this House that the Senate, after consideration of this identical resolution—the names of the men being changed, the body of which they are Members being changed—exactly the resolution, with those exceptions, I have offered as a substitute, the Senate has adopted, I am told, to-day.

Well, now, Mr. Speaker, this involves the business of this House and the business of the Senate. The gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Michigan would yield everything to the courts. I have respect for the Senate, which is trying to discharge a duty similar to ours. The Senate is in the same position as the House. No man can say that the Senate has no respect for the judiciary of this country. It is composed for the most part of men riper in experience and perhaps wiser than we are. Certainly many of them have the softening influence of age upon them, and age to most men brings conservatism.

I believe that conservative and great body, with some of the greatest lawyers in the world as its members, well-nigh unanimously agreed that this joint committee has done what was necessary, what was proper, and what was right in the discharge of their legislative duty in the printing of our records, documents, and the like. I believe that that decision of that body is entitled to more respect than the action of one judge who issued this writ in this case.

Mr. BURNETT. If the report of the majority was adopted, would not the House find itself in this anomalous position: That some of the members of that joint committee are requested by the House to make answer and other members of the joint committee who are members of the Senate are instructed not to make answer, but to pay no attention to it?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is the effect. The Senate has adopted a resolution instructing its members to pay no attention to this writ or notice from the court.

Mr. SHERLEY. If I understood the gentleman, in answer to an inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin, he seems to have the idea that an answer by these gentlemen would make them amenable to contempt proceedings subsequently. Now, is it not true that their failure to answer makes them just as amenable? Are they not before the court now by virtue of the process?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes; by reason of a wrongful process. If we must go up against the courts and the use of wrongful process we might as well go now, instead of postponing it to the future day indicated by the gentleman from Georgia. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Suppose we do not have to go at all, by taking the course suggested by the majority of the committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. Then we are setting a dangerous precedent and authorizing the court to interfere with the work of the committees of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Which is setting the more dangerous precedent, simply to ignor the summons or to instruct the Members who are summoned to present to the court a proper answer and plead the fact that they are immune from this suit?

Mr. CLAYTON. I think it would set a dangerous precedent, and it would open a veritable Pandora's box, and every little two-by-four lawyer that had an imaginary grievance against a committee of this House would go to some little judge and get a writ against the Members of the great American Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit an interruption right there? I should like to say just a word. In view of what the gentleman from Kentucky has said as to which is the better policy for the House to pursue, with the permission of the gentleman from Alabama, I will read five lines in the Evening Times, which has just been handed to me by my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP].

Senator ROOT, of New York, made a strong argument to the effect that the court had no jurisdiction. He urged that the Senate not only pass the resolution reported by the Judiciary Committee, but that it direct the appropriate officer of the Senate to communicate its action to the court.

Mr. CLAYTON. That gives the minority four Members, not quite equal in avoirdupois to the total weight of the majority, but still a respectable showing. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Would not all the respect that is necessary to be shown to the court be shown by adopting a resolution instructing the Clerk of the House to appear there?

Mr. CLAYTON. And communicate the resolution of the House? The House has done that in some cases, according to my recollection.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no.

Mr. CLAYTON. Not to respond in such a suit as this, because such a suit was never instituted before; but if you will consult Hinds's Precedents, volume 3, you will find that the House has adopted resolutions instructing Members not to appear in court in answer to a court process.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the form of a clean-cut proposition, this House ought to assert its dignity and protect its Members and its committee in their work, the work that we want done every day, and to say to its committee not to appear in that court. That is the proposition that I advocate. My colleague [Mr. PARKER], who is always anxious to soothe that awful 14, says that he will vote for my proposition, but that if the House should be guilty—I hope it is not going to be guilty—of voting down the substitute, then he would vote to let them go down there and plead to the jurisdiction only. The proposition of the majority is for them to go down to the court and submit themselves in full to its jurisdiction by pleading to the jurisdiction, and by making such other or further answer as they see proper; in other words, to go and submit their persons wholly to the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the Joint Committee of Congress on Printing do not hold any civil office. They hold no places except as Members of the Congress. They perform no duties except in connection with their legislative functions.

Sir, it is trifling with the grave question under consideration to say that nothing is involved but the construction of a statute, and that the court ought to be allowed to construe it. The courts can construe any statute in a proper case. No man denies that. But the real question here is that the court can not be allowed to impede the discharge of legislative duties—can not control what is necessarily incidental to the exercise of legislative power—can not be permitted to try an alleged private grievance through the process of mandamus against Representatives who acted under the appointment of the House—can not be permitted to deprive the people and the Congress of the services of three Representatives upon the complaint of a pretended civil injury to a corporation. If Members of Congress performed the duties of executive officers their acts were futile and the courts are open in proper case to the complaint.

The argument that this whole matter should be submitted to the court for decision would lead to the conclusion that the judicial department of the Government is superior to the legislative department, and the submission of a question of the proper discharge of legislative functions to the courts would result in court control of the legislative department. And then, indeed, would it be possible for "miners and sappers" to accomplish the ruin of the Republic. The Senate of the United States, the House of Representatives of the United States, must not be deprived of freedom in making laws in pursuance of constitutional power. The Congress must not be submerged by the despotism of judicial authority exercised without constitutional warrant.

Sir, I think that the substitute offered for the majority report here should be adopted to maintain the majesty, the dignity, and the independence of the House of Representatives of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour I would like to take the sentiment of the House as to some certain time for closing the debate. Personally, it is immaterial to me how long we go on. I have no disposition to cut off any gentlemen who desire to speak, but the House must realize that it must be closed to-day, because this rule is returnable at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, and in order to bring the matter to some agreement I will ask if it will be agreeable to take a vote at 6 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the House vote upon this matter at 6 o'clock.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object at this late hour, but I desire at least fifteen minutes to address the House. I do not think so important a question as this, which is liable to get us into great trouble, ought to be concluded without a proper discussion.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that will give time to discuss the question, and I hope the gentleman from Georgia will modify his request.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me to suggest that we take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. BRANTLEY. It might be better to fix an hour for a vote at 8 or 9 o'clock, and let the debate continue from now until then.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] desires twenty minutes and the gentleman from Ohio desires fifteen minutes. I do not know whether there are any others who want to speak or not.

Mr. BRANTLEY. There are two or three gentlemen on this side that desire to speak.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hour for voting on this matter be fixed at 9 o'clock, and let everybody speak who wishes to between now and then; and those who wish can go to supper, and those who do not can stay here.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I think, Mr. Speaker, there should be some agreement as to the division of time between now and 9 o'clock. Is the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New Jersey and myself; what was the suggestion by the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not make any suggestion as to the control of the time.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Georgia use fifteen minutes time, and at the end of that time we take a vote.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not think it is fair to submit this question to a vote without an opportunity for other gentlemen to express themselves.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to amend the request of the gentleman from Missouri by adding that the time be controlled by the gentleman from New Jersey and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that debate close at 9 o'clock, that the House then vote upon the resolution and the amendments pending, and that the time be equally divided, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and the other half by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY of Texas and others. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I will make that motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That motion would hardly be in order under the rule. The right way to close debate is by moving the previous question under the rule.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that all debate be closed in thirty minutes, one-half of that time to be given to the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent that all debate shall close in thirty minutes?

Mr. STERLING. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, the resolution referred to the Judiciary Committee directed that committee to report as to what action, in its opinion, the House should take in regard to the matter of this suit, and to particularly instruct the members of the Committee on Printing what steps they should take concerning it. It considered that resolution, and a majority of the committee reported to the House the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia, to the effect that this committee is permitted to appear in court and plead to the jurisdiction, setting up, of course, in that plea the fact that they were Members of Congress, that they were members of the Joint Committee on Printing, and to take such other steps as they saw fit in the premises.

During all the consideration of the matter I have not been able to conceive where the independence or the prerogatives of Congress were involved in this question. Gentlemen here can talk about the dignity of Congress, and we can aver that the court, when it assumed to issue process in the regular way against Members who happened to be members of a joint committee, invading the prerogatives and assaulting the dignity of Congress, but that talk does not appeal to me and it will not appeal to the country.

I take it that the only dignity that we enjoy is the dignity that comes from the fact that we have had imposed upon us the duty of making legislation; and I submit that it is no assault upon that dignity, when the construction of a law which this Congress made is involved, to submit the construction of that law to the tribunals that are provided by the Constitution. These gentlemen have proceeded on the theory that this is a legislative committee, that its functions are similar to all the other committees in this House. It has been said that in all the history of this Joint Committee on Printing it has never yet performed a legislative function; that its sole purpose and the absolute extent of its duties are purely ministerial and executive. I submit it is not material what other duties they may have to perform.

The only question involved in this discussion is the duty it was performing in this transaction that constitutes the basis of this suit in court. They were acting under this statute. This law provides that all bids shall be accompanied by a bond and that that bond shall be accompanied by the certificate of a judge or clerk of a court of record, and that that committee shall consider no bids not accompanied by a bond and not accompanied by a certificate from a judge or a clerk of a court of record as to the solvency of the bonding company or the individual. The law further provides that this committee shall consider no bids that are not accompanied by this bond and this certificate from a judge or clerk of a court of record, and that upon consideration of the bids which comply with the terms of that statute they shall grant the contract to "the lowest and best bidder for the interests of the Government."

Now, is it possible to conceive that that committee in the performance of that duty prescribed by this statute is performing legislative duty? I say that it is clearly and plainly an executive or ministerial duty, but I say further that regardless of that fact, whether I be right or wrong, it is not our function and duty to construe the law, but it is the function and duty of the courts to determine whether it is legislative or executive and ministerial. Now, if the court finds that the function that the committee was performing at that time is legislative, it will not issue this writ. It will find that it has no jurisdiction. That is the law everywhere in this country. I undertake to say that you will not find a single instance where any federal or state court has undertaken to review legislative acts. If it is an executive act, they can review it. They have a right to review it, and it is the court's duty to review it. They have a right to construe this statute, and then to determine whether or not this committee was complying with it.

Here is a law that provides plans for letting contracts, and it is not, as the chairman of the Judiciary Committee said, purely a supervisory duty. They award the contracts; they determine the terms and conditions of the contracts; they make the contracts. The statute says the awards shall be awarded by them—this joint committee.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If this is purely an executive committee and performing purely executive functions, then why is Congress having anything to do with it at all on this occasion?

Mr. STERLING. The only reason at all, in my judgment, why this House should consider it is the reason involved in the closing sentence of the majority report of the Committee on the Judiciary, wherein it says that these gentlemen are given permission to absent themselves from the House to take care of this lawsuit. They have to have permission to do that under the rules of the House. They can not waive that privilege themselves. The House must necessarily act on that, and for that reason, and that alone, it ought to have been submitted to the House, as it was.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the court has jurisdiction to determine whether certain duties devolved upon Members of Congress are legislative or ministerial?

Mr. STERLING. The courts have nothing whatever to do in determining whether or not we do our duty as legislators. They would have no jurisdiction at all over any of the ordinary committees or any of the actions of the ordinary committees or any member of any of the committees in the performance of legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not get my question. Is the gentleman of opinion that a court has any jurisdiction to determine whether certain duties devolved upon Members of Congress are legislative duties or duties apart from their representative capacity?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly it has.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, suppose there should be a conflict of opinion between the court and the House, which would prevail? Suppose the court were to determine, for instance, that certain duties were apart from the duties devolved upon Members in their representative capacity, and proceeded to a point where it determined to issue process punishing Members in some way, and the House should determine that it would not permit the Member to be punished. In that situation, how would the gentleman reconcile the conflict that must inevitably result?

Mr. STERLING. No conflict would result. If a committee is acting under a rule of this House, the courts would not undertake to review its acts. The courts would not construe a rule of the House.

They have no jurisdiction to construe the rules of this body. If that committee is acting under the law no other tribunal of this land has any right to construe the law but the courts. Now, this committee is acting under this statute. The statute provides a method of letting these contracts. Persons come here and submit their bids under the proposals made by this committee. They submit their bids according to the terms of this statute, and it is the duty of the committee to pursue the statute. Suppose the committee disregards the statute entirely and grants that bid to the highest bidder instead of the lowest? Has not that party any redress? Where is his redress? Would anyone here say that this statute should operate only on one of the parties, operate upon the bidder and not operate upon the committee or upon Congress or the Government? Why, such a proposition would be intolerable, and no one here would undertake to take that position.

I submit to you gentlemen, I submit to you now, where would the man's redress be if this committee ignored the law and granted these bids regardless of the terms of the statute under which they were acting? I submit to these three gentlemen, who claim to possess all the intellectual wealth of the Judiciary Committee, where would his redress be? Would he have none? The law is provided for him as well as us; the law provided for the individual who makes a bid as well as for the Government, and has he no redress? Would you say he would appeal to Congress? Then he appeals to Congress. What would we do? Just determine that the committee had the right to do what they pleased, or would we say it was the duty of the committee to obey the statute? That is what we would say if we were honest with our conscience, if we wanted to be fair to the citizen making the bid. We would look at the statute; we would find out the facts and determine whether or not the committee had obeyed the law, and if we do that we are taking upon ourselves the power to construe the law. We would arrogate to ourselves the powers of the courts—a coordinate branch of the Government.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If I understand the gentleman's position he seems to take the position that the court has jurisdiction in this case to mandamus this committee. Is that right?

Mr. STERLING. That is not the question that we are concerned with, but I will say to the gentleman that so far as I have examined the facts I have not any doubt in my mind but what they have the power to mandamus this committee.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Then it would follow logically, of course, they would have the power to enforce their decrees.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. And this House might find Members of the House who happened to be incidentally members of that committee absolutely arrested in face of the statute which says that Members could not be arrested.

Mr. STERLING. They would not be arrested. Let them obey the mandates of the court; let them go and do what the court directs them and not assume to themselves prerogatives that they have not got. There is no man in this House whose dignity, whose position, makes him not amenable to the laws, the same as other citizens. He need not be arrested. He submits to the same tribunals that every other citizen submits to. He ought to willingly submit to the mandates of the courts provided by the Constitution.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Suppose the court attempts to mandamus any other committee of this House from doing a certain thing; in other words, would you concede that during the session of the House Members of the House, who might be members of a committee appointed by the Speaker, may be called into the jurisdiction of the court and punished by arrest and imprisonment if they do not obey the orders of the court?

Mr. STERLING. Replying, Mr. Speaker, to the question of the gentleman, I do not think the court could arrest and imprison a Member of the House while Congress is in session. I think after Congress has adjourned they could enforce a mandate against that Member and imprison him.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Let us assume that one of the Election Committees of this House——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will try to enforce the rule during the remainder of this debate that when gentlemen desire to interrupt they must first address the Speaker as the rule provides.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Let us assume that one of the Committees on Elections of this House was holding its sessions during a recess, investigating conditions attaching to an alleged false return pertaining to an election of a Member of the House. Suppose while that committee was performing those functions it ran counter to the wishes of one of the parties and he invoked the power of a local court to punish or to mandamus that committee to do or not to do a certain thing in connection with the very thing which this Congress had designated it to do, would you hold that the court would have power in that case to interfere with the functions of that committee?

Mr. STERLING. I will say this: The line of distinction is very clear. If that committee was performing an executive duty marked out by statute, it would be subject to review by the courts; that is, its actions would be subject to review by the courts. If it was performing a legislative duty, its actions would not be subject to review by the courts. I am not prepared to determine whether the act you speak of, and it is not necessary to determine it, would be a legislative act or whether it would be an executive act, being performed under the direction of the statute.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But does the Government hold in this case, concerning which I ask for information purely, that the functions of the particular committee now under discussion is executive or legislative?

Mr. STERLING. In my judgment the act that it was engaged in; that is, the act involved in this suit, is purely executive; but I say it is not material here whether it was or not. It was for the court to construe this statute and determine whether or not the acts being performed by that committee were such as can be reviewed by it or not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin and Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. STERLING. I will first yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman, in admitting that the particular duty in this case——

Mr. STERLING. That is purely my individual opinion, you understand.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Your opinion being in this particular instance that the duty was executive, do you admit at the same time that this particular committee has legislative functions to perform?

Mr. STERLING. I can not answer that, because I do not know what all its duties are. I will say this, that if a joint resolution regarding printing was presented in this House and the Senate and it was sent by the House and by the Senate to the Joint Committee on Printing, that in the consideration of that joint resolution the committee would be in the performance of a legislative duty. I do not know whether that ever occurred or not. I do not know whether it can occur, but I will say this: The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] raised the point by asking the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] a question a while ago. He referred to the rule, and said this committee is created by the rule or this rule provides for a committee on printing. I should think that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] disposed of that when he read the rule. This joint committee is created by this statute, and it so happens that the Speaker of this House and the President of the Senate appoint on this committee the same men they appoint on the Printing Committee of the House and the Printing Committee of the Senate.

They are three separate and distinct bodies, and there is no connection between them. The Speaker could, I dare say, appoint three other Members as the Committee on Printing different from the Joint Committee on Printing. I do not think there is anything in the rule, and I am sure there is nothing in the law, that requires him to appoint the three members of the Committee on Printing to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman give anything from the statute in relation to the opening of the bids? Are they required to award the contract to the lowest and best bidder?

Mr. STERLING. They must grant the award to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly. Now, one moment. Will the gentleman permit a question right there that seems to me furnishes an opportunity to solve this whole problem without question: "The lowest and best bidder" does not necessarily mean the lowest bidder, does it?

Mr. STERLING. No, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, this committee might say that John Smith, all things considered, was the lowest and best bidder, and be perfectly honest in the exercise of its discretion in so determining. But the court might say that John Brown, all things considered, was the lowest and best bidder, and he might mandamus this committee of the House and be perfectly honest about rescinding the contract and awarding it to John Brown.

Now, then, in answer to a question a moment ago by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] said there is no danger of arrest, because it is the duty of this committee to obey the mandate of the court. Would they be honest under their oaths to discharge their duty to the country? They say that John Smith is the lowest and best bidder; on the contrary, the court says that John Brown is the lowest and best bidder. They refuse to award the contract to John Brown. Are they to be tried for contempt?

Mr. STERLING. No. I just want to say to the gentleman that he raises a question not involved in this discussion at all. There is a discretionary power in this joint committee under the law, and the question as to whether it was abused is for the courts to determine. If the committee acted within the discretionary power granted by the statute, the court would not interfere with its acts. That is a matter of defense in court and has no place here at all.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. But, Mr. Speaker, does not that go to the power of the court and not the jurisdiction of the court?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The only question before this House is as to the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. STERLING. That is a question that will be tried on the merits of this case in court. It is the same as to the other question. The question of discretion is not the only question this committee can plead as a defense in this case. There is the other question, as to whether the committee complied with the law. I want to say now in defense of this committee that they have complied with the law absolutely and literally, and they have an absolute defense in this case on that point also. I say, however, those matters are not involved in the discussion here. They are questions for the court, and they are questions that can be raised under this report of the Judiciary Committee, which the majority brings in here. After they have pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court, these gentlemen representing the committee can take such other action as they may see fit.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Was there any allegation of fraud in this?

Mr. STERLING. Not at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, do I understand it to be the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that the conduct of the joint committee of Congress in the honest exercise of its discretion is to be submitted to the court for review?

Mr. STERLING. Who is to determine whether it is honest or not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You say there is no allegation that it is dishonest?

Mr. STERLING. It may be absolutely honest, but every man should have a right to inquire into that, and who else ought to determine whether it is or not but a court?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think it would add to the clearness of the view if I should explain what are the facts. It is not a matter of allegation. The petitioners say that the joint committee have absolutely refused to consider the bid of this Valley Paper Company. That they have never attempted to exercise their discretion. The allegation is that they threw out the bid because they said it was not accompanied by a bond certified by a judge as to the sufficiency of the security. Therefore the question of discretion never entered into the count in the allegation in the petition filed in this case.

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. Speaker, coming back to the question I left a moment ago, when I was interrupted. The gentleman from Georgia quoted the Constitution to this House very well. He said that the—

Legislative power of this Government was vested in the Congress, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives.

He might have read further—

That the judiciary power of the United States is vested in the Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress sees fit to create.

These are the fundamental laws of the proposition. That is the language of the Constitution—that we shall make the laws, and the courts of this country shall construe the laws. This committee was acting under this law. A party here feels aggrieved. He says that the joint committee disregarded the law. That party construes it one way and the committee construes it another. Now, where is his redress? Who shall construe the law? Shall we invade the province of the courts and construe the laws? These gentlemen talk about the jealousy we should entertain for our rights and our privileges. But the court should be jealous of its independence and its freedom, and its coordinate powers, and all that. Should we be any more jealous of our powers and our rights than we should be jealous of the duties, the powers, and rights of the courts? If we take this action we are now called on to take, we will be invading the powers of the courts, instead of the courts invading the powers of Congress.

RECESS.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield to me. Without taking the gentleman off the floor, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. STERLING. I yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House was declared in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] has the floor.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I think we can get some idea of where these gentlemen on the other side of this proposition would lead us by referring to a few things stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]. Gentlemen will remember that during his speech he referred to the character of the acts which this committee were performing; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] asked him this question: Does this committee continue to perform these duties after the adjournment of Congress? The gentleman from Texas replied that they did not, that they were performed by the Secretary of the Interior. The gentleman from Kentucky then exclaimed in great confidence: "Does not the fact that these gentlemen cease to perform their duties when Congress adjourns prove that the acts are legislative and not executive?"

Now, I submit that it does not prove anything, but if it does prove anything it proves the contrary. The official character of the man does not determine the character of the act that he performs; and because this committee act while Congress is in session is no proof that what they do are legislative acts. If the Secretary of the Interior performs the same acts, would not that prove that those acts are executive? They are things done in the execution of a law. Does the Secretary of the Interior perform legislative acts? Or will you say that this committee, granting awards, inspecting bids, determining which is the lowest and best bid for the good of the Government, are legislating, and when the same function, the same duties, and the same acts are transferred from this committee to the Secretary of the Interior that they become executive?

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Your contention is that the duty performed by the Members of Congress upon this committee is not a legislative duty. Is that it?

Mr. STERLING. I insist that the acts which are involved in this litigation are purely executive.

Mr. JAMES. Now, if what they do is not incident to and a part of the legislative duty of Members of Congress, why is it that the duties of the Member of Congress stop when the session ends, and do not go on until the end of his term?

Mr. WEBB. May I answer that question?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. If you will read the statute you will find that the duty of these Members does not end when Congress adjourns, but that that committee is a continuing committee, and the statute expressly gives the committee this power when Congress is not in session, to make contracts and to supervise the acts of the Public Printer.

Mr. JAMES. In reply to that I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that the gentleman from Illinois just admitted that when Congress was not in session the Secretary of the Interior performed this duty in the absence of Members of Congress.

Mr. WEBB. The Secretary of the Interior may or this committee may. The statute expressly says so.

Mr. JAMES. I should like to ask you a question.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Do you contend that it is an office that the Member of Congress is performing?

Mr. WEBB. I contend that it is a commission, and these committeemen are acting under the supreme law of the land.

Mr. JAMES. But the question is, Is it an office?

Mr. WEBB. That is a question for the court to determine.

Mr. STERLING. Let me answer. No; it is not an office. An officer takes an oath of office; these men do not.

Mr. JAMES. Then this is a part of his duty as a Member of Congress, is it not?

Mr. STERLING. No.

Mr. JAMES. Then if it is not an office and is not a part of his duty as a Member of Congress, what is it?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I did not say that the Secretary of the Interior performed these duties. I said that the gentleman from Georgia answered the question to the effect that the Secretary of the Interior performed these duties. They are purely executive duties, performed by Members of this House on that committee. That is what they are. The gentleman asks me the question, and I reply that they are executive functions. The statute says what they shall do, and there is no pretense in the petition filed in court that they were doing anything else than considering these bids and granting awards. What is an executive duty? It is carrying out a law; it is the execution of a law; it is the performing of duties imposed by the law. It is an executive duty whether they were Members of Congress, whether they were private citizens, or whether some officer of the Government; it makes no difference. I repeat that the official character of the man who performs the act can not possibly change the character of the act.

Now, another thing that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] referred to that I do not think was a very happy illustration. He referred to the joint commission that was appointed by Congress to investigate the Interior Department and the Forest Service, and he asked the question, Suppose this commission would perform acts in a way that some person interested in that investigation did not approve of? Now, that commission is engaged in an investigation that involves the most valuable possession that a man can have. It involves the character of high officials of this Government. It involves the official life of men in high places. This resolution, as I remember it, provides that this commission has the power, and it is the duty of the commission, to bring witnesses before it. Suppose a man whose character was at stake in this investigation would request that this commission subpœna witnesses that knew facts to his interest, and this commission should arbitrarily refuse, what is the man's redress? To come to Congress? I say no. He can go into a court of justice and mandamus the commission to perform its duties under the law, and nowhere else. But suppose he would come here, what would we do? Would we arbitrarily say that the commission could do as it pleased, and thus violate our oaths to enforce the law? And this joint resolution is law.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to hold that under the resolution of this House creating the joint committee for investigating the Ballinger-Pinchot trouble the court can direct our committee who to summon?

Mr. KEIFER. It is not our committee.

Mr. STERLING. Is that all of the question?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. I say that a man that is refused his rights under that joint resolution, which is the law, could go into the court and mandamus the investigating committee to bring witnesses there.

Mr. JAMES. Now, then, if the court has the authority to mandamus us, to subpœna certain witnesses, has it not the authority to mandamus us to make a certain finding which it may find is warranted by the evidence?

Mr. STERLING. No.

Mr. JAMES. Have they not the power to supervise our findings, if they can tell us the kind of evidence to hear or the witnesses to subpœna?

Mr. STERLING. No; they have not, and it does not follow at all. The proposition is entirely untenable to say that because they are compelled by the court to do their duty under the law that the court has a right to indicate what findings the committee shall make.

Mr. JAMES. It is no more untenable than the gentleman's position.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STERLING. For a question; yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois to please develop what authority Congress has by resolution to direct the conduct of an executive officer.

Mr. STERLING. I think a resolution, amounting to a law, can prescribe the duties of an executive officer.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Would a resolution passed by this House alone amount to a law?

Mr. STERLING. No; it would not have the force of law. A joint resolution has the force of law.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is not the position of the gentleman from Illinois that of seeking here to direct by resolution of this House the conduct of an executive officer?

Mr. STERLING. In regard to the commission I am speaking of, no. The House and Senate directed the committee in the joint resolution, and laid down its manner of proceeding, in the joint resolution. It is a law. Now, suppose that a party is aggrieved; that he thinks that this commission is violating the law. What is his redress? If he comes into this forum, if he appeals to the House, what will the House do? Will it ignore the law that it passed for the government of this commission? If it does, we will violate our oaths of office in order to maintain the dignity of the House. No; it will not do that. There is not a man on the floor that would say that we should ignore the man's appeal and say that the commission could do as it pleases.

If we were to do anything, we would probably refer him to the courts. If we did not do that, we would take up the joint resolution and construe it for ourselves, and say for ourselves whether or not the commission was performing its duty under the law; and if we did that, we would again violate our oaths of office, because we would take to ourselves duties that belonged to the courts. We would not be supporting the laws of the land.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. If I understand the gentleman, he takes the position that one of these persons might go into court and compel us to subpœna certain witnesses——

Mr. STERLING. I say that if the resolution has that provision in it, and I understand that it has.

Mr. JAMES. Suppose he went into court and set up that we denied him the right of counsel to ask questions of witnesses, could he compel our committee, a committee created by Congress, to give him the right of counsel, as well as the right of certain witnesses to appear before us?

Mr. STERLING. If the law that directs the course of the gentleman's committee gives him that right, he could by mandamus compel that committee to do it or have them put in jail.

Mr. JAMES. Then the gentleman would give to the courts the right to direct how a committee of Congress may proceed?

Mr. STERLING. No; I would not give them the right. They have already got the right, if the committee is engaged in performing executive acts. They have got the right under the Constitution that provides that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress creates.

Mr. JAMES. Is that in directing legislation or in interpreting legislation?

Mr. STERLING. The gentleman's committee, I undertake to say, is not engaged in legislative acts.

Mr. JAMES. Then the gentleman takes the position that the courts have the right not only to interpret the law, but to direct the making of laws.

Mr. STERLING. By that act the court would have nothing whatever to do with directing the making of laws. We have already made the law and the court would act under it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The contract avoided in this case or the failure to avoid the contract complained of was an action on the part of the joint committee?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman know of any legislative functions possessed by the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know of any. I do not say they do not perform legislative functions. I said a while ago that I presumed that a joint resolution before the House and the Senate relating to printing would go to this joint committee, but I do not know. If it did, and they would consider it, then I think they would be engaged in legislative acts.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would call the attention of the gentleman to a rule of the House which seems to indicate that the House at the time of the adoption of the rule did not consider that perhaps that committee had legislative functions. In referring to the Joint Committee on Printing it says:

> In addition to the executive duties—
> Recognizing they have executive duties—
>
> In addition to the executive duties of the joint committee, the House branch exercises legislative functions in the recommending of bills—
> And so forth.

Mr. STERLING. Does the rule say that?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. I am obliged to the gentleman for referring me to that, because we must certainly recognize in that rule that this committee may engage in executive duties. That ought to settle the question forever as to whether or not they can perform executive duties.

Mr. HAMLIN. The point I want to emphasize is that while I would like to agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]—that is my natural inclination—it seems to me that he is entirely wrong when he says the executive is incidental and the legislative function is the primary purpose of this committee. It seems to me that it is the reverse; that the executive is the primary function and the legislative is the incidental.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if his position is correct—that the duties of this joint committee are purely executive in character—then what basis or reason is there for this House taking any action?

Mr. STERLING. As I stated to another gentleman who asked a similar question, so far as I can see, it is only this: I do think it was the duty of this committee to come to this House and ask the House to give them the privilege of absenting themselves from the House to look after this matter.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Still that is not the resolution that the majority of this committee bring in, recommending action to the House. They go further and instruct them what to do in the way of defense in the proceeding. It seems to me, if the position of the gentleman is correct, that here are Members of the House who are not performing duties at all pertaining to their duties as Members, but are simply members of an executive board, entirely distinct from their House duties, the House logically has nothing to do with what defense they shall or shall not make in their executive capacity.

Mr. STERLING. Now, in reply to that, I will say this report that this committee made simply does the thing that the original resolution directed us to do. That original resolution asked us to report what action the House should take and to particularly instruct the committee as to the course they should pursue. Now, we have done nothing beyond that except we have said in the resolution they are excused from attending the sessions of the House for that purpose.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. BRANTLEY. In regard to the question of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN], I want to suggest that regardless of the interest of these Members of the House who are sued as to the outcome of the litigation, the House has an interest in them in their presence here to make a quorum and to transact the business of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Well, I take it that the gentleman from Georgia will not insist that the purpose, the intent, and indeed the language of the resolution we are asked to adopt by the majority of the committee only looks to the matter of excusing those gentlemen from attendance upon the sessions of the House. It goes to the subject of their making defense as to the jurisdiction of the court over them, and further in such other manner as they may deem proper. Now it occurs to me if the position of the gentleman from Illinois is correct and these Members upon the joint committee are not performing legislative duties, but purely executive duties, it is a matter, if not of indifference, certainly not of the business of this House how they shall conduct their defense or whether they shall make any at all.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Except as the privileges of the House may be involved, and in order to save the question of privilege for whatever it may be worth, we propose to grant them this permission to absent themselves from the House.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I apprehend these members of the committee are not much disturbed about being excused from a few sessions of the House, and it is not the real gist of the subject we are considering.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the gentleman in regard to that, the committee reported simply on the proposition that was submitted to it by the original resolution and nothing else, and we felt it was our duty to do that.

Now, I desire to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Alabama talked about the dire calamities that would overtake this House if we recognized this precedent. If we gave way this time to an order of court served on some of our Members we would pass into innocuous decay and lose forever our usefulness. The gentleman draws on his imagination a great deal. I think this is a very serious problem from one view of the case. It is a serious problem if we pass the resolution offered by way of substitute to the resolution brought in by the Committee on the Judiciary. I say it will be a very serious proposition if we take that position at this time. "Why," he says, "to go home to our constituents and say that we had not stood for the dignity and independence of the House!" Better have your constituents say that—I would rather my constituents say that of me than to have them say that I stood for a proposition invading the prerogatives of a coordinate branch of the Government.

Better say that of me than to say that I stood for the monstrous proposition that a citizen of our country could not go to a court for redress of a wrong committed by a Member of Congress. It is just as much our duty, while we are so jealously guarding our own prerogatives and our own rights, to protect the prerogatives and rights of the other branches of the Government. What need we fear? Have we not got the ultimate power? Will we assume, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] intimated that we should assume, that this petitioner is in there not in good faith or that the court, simply in a spirit of arrogance, to show his superiority over this branch of the Government, issued this order? I will not assume that. I will assume that the petitioner is there in good faith and that he is demanding his rights which we gave him under this law, and I will assume that the court is acting in good faith, and that it is not intentionally trespassing upon the rights of Congress. It seems to me that is the better view to take.

We will not sustain our dignity, we will not add anything to it by undertaking to invade the province of another branch of the Government as I believe we would do in this substitute report. Throughout all the decisions, I think, the courts have always refused to review legislative acts. I know of not a single instance where the court assumed to pass upon legislative acts. This court will not do it. At least, let us give it credit for acting in good faith in the matter until it does transgress our rights, and then will be time enough for us to defend this dignity you talk about. Is it possible for courts to establish a line of precedents that would take away from us one iota of our power or our prerogatives? Do we not create them? As long as they act in good faith let us abide by them. If the time ever comes when we think a court willfully or arbitrarily assumes to review and direct the legislative acts of Congress, we will not be in jeopardy then. Can we not impeach the judge? We can abolish the court.

We have the ultimate power, and I appeal to you, gentlemen, let us exercise it in reason and common sense. Let us not stand on this false pride of the dignity and prerogatives of Congress. I fear from the tone of this debate that there is more spirit and disposition here to arrogate to ourselves powers that we do not have than there is in the courts of the land. I for one shall never deny to the humblest citizen his rights under the law on the pretext that it is to preserve the dignity and independence of Congress.

We made this law. Let us not be the first to violate it. We created this court. Let us not be the first to defy it. Let us maintain the real genuine dignity that goes with the office we hold by showing a proper respect for the laws which we made for the guidance of our fellow-citizens and for the courts we instituted to administer those laws. [Applause.]

Mr. STERLING. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] seems to have expired.

Mr. STERLING. Did I understand the Chair to say that my time was exhausted?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania arises for recognition as a member of the committee, and is entitled to preference in recognition.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will yield, at the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], twenty minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Thank you. Mr. Speaker, twenty minutes is not an adequate time to properly discuss as important a question as this. A little while ago I interrupted the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA] to dissent from what he said everybody agreed to, and the gentleman responded by saying that I was "exceptionally an exception." I can not return the compliment he perhaps deserves by saying that he exceptionally is trying to be on the popular side all the time, and I certainly am not. I was objecting to the theory that everybody agreed that the House of Representatives had the right to determine whenever it pleases the jurisdiction of a court when a Member was involved. That was so supremely absurd to my mind that I could not allow it to go without dissenting. I am not alone in this, even if I am exceptional. There is not a decision of a state or national court on that subject that does not affirm expressly what I said, namely, that the House has nothing to do with determining the question of the jurisdiction of a court when a member of a committee of the House is involved.

Does anybody dispute that? Have you any authority? Mr. Speaker, the Constitution does provide certain privileges and rights and immunities, and the courts all hold that that stands as the law to protect a Member of the Senate or the House of Representatives, the same as the law stands to protect a citizen that has a statute in his favor.

More than thirty years ago a witness, Hallett Kilbourn, brought suit in a court of this District to recover damages for being imprisoned under an order of this House through a committee of the House, the order being issued and signed by the Speaker of the House. The suit was brought against the Sergeant-at-Arms and against the Speaker, Mr. M. C. Kerr, who signed the order, and against all the members of the committee, naming them. The same question arose. That suit later went through the courts of the District of Columbia, and a judgment for damages was rendered against the Sergeant-at-Arms; not against the Speaker, because he was dead before the judgment; but against the other members of the committee, and they were claiming, by a proper plea, immunity because they were Members of the House of Representatives and, as such, members of a committee of the House, and could not be held responsible for damages in the case for false imprisonment.

They plead their immunity in vain before the court of this District. They also plead and claimed what some people claim here to-day—that they could not be sued at all, and that that was a matter for the House to determine. But the Supreme Court of the United States in deciding that case unanimously held that the House of Representatives had nothing to do with the question of the jurisdiction of the courts at all. They quoted a learned opinion of Judge Hoar, of Massachusetts, concurred in by Chief Justice Shaw, of Massachusetts, when a similar case came up in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the court unanimously approved that opinion, saying that the House had no right to determine questions of the jurisdiction of the court. If I had time I would read it. You will find an extract from the opinion of Judge Hoar, quoted with approval, on page 199 of One hundred and third United States Reports in the Supreme Court's opinion. Why? It is because we have to work our rights out through the courts. The Supreme Court sustained that opinion, and it reviewed in a very learned way the difficulties that had grown up, and why they grew up, about this very matter. There were precedents cited that arose in the Parliament of England, and there they said it grew out of the fact that there was at one time but one parliamentary body, and that body had always assumed to be the supreme judicature of England, and hence they could decide what courts inferior to them should do, and they could determine their jurisdiction.

And they also say in this same case, when it was claimed that after Parliament was divided into two bodies, the House of Lords and the House of Commons, it was attempted to claim the same jurisdiction for the separate bodies. Now let me read you a single paragraph. After having referred to this historical matter in proposition 3 of the syllabi, in Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S., 168):

Neither House of Congress was constituted a part of any court of general jurisdiction, nor has it any history under which the exercise of such power can be used. Its power must be sought alone in some express grant in the Constitution, or be found necessary to carry into effect such powers as are there granted.

That follows immediately after what they stated historically about the Parliament of England. Then in the opinion—if I am permitted I will put it in my speech, and I will quote from the opinion. Maybe I had better read a single paragraph. This case was decided in 1880. After the quotation in the opinion, the justice announcing it says:

In the statement of the law and in the principles laid down we fully concur.

This is quoted from Judge Hoar:

The House of Representatives is not the final judge of its own power and privileges in cases in which the rights and liberties of the subjects are concerned, but the legality of its action may be examined and determined by the court.

I wish I had time to read further on the same point from the opinion of the court.

Now, what happened? In the Kilbourn case judgment was rendered, as I have stated; the case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there, having passed on all these questions, some of which I have referred to, taking up the question as to the rights of the committee that had been sued and the judgment rendered against them, the court said the members of the committee had the right to plead their immunity, and the technical question arose there as to whether they could plead it because of reports they had made as distinguished from speech that was supposed only to be included in the immunity clause of the Constitution for remarks made in the committee; and the Supreme Court laid down the rule that the committee could not be held; not that the House had a right to decide, but that they could not be held for damages in a case like that, provided their action in reference to the alleged false imprisonment was confined exclusively to such things as they were doing and were called upon to report to the House about, nothing else.

In determining the limit of things to which a Member of the House could claim protection in doing, the court says:

In short, to things generally done in a session of the House by one of its Members in relation to the business before it (p. 204).

The language of the Constitution of the United States (par. 1, sec. 6, Art. II) which guarantees privileges and extends immunities to Members of the Senate and of this House reads:

They shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House they shall not be questioned in any other place.

They said if they had gone so far as to touch the witness when he was being imprisoned they would be liable for damages with the Sergeant-at-Arms. They held that the judgment was good against Mr. John G. Thompson, who was the Sergeant-at-Arms. In the final opinion of the Supreme Court they exonerated the committee, and would have exonerated the Speaker if he had been alive.

Now, that illustrates all I desire particularly to say. It illustrates that we go into the courts for our relief, the same as any other citizens. Somebody says you can not arrest a man while he is attending upon the sessions of Congress. You can arrest him. That has happened a number of times, and what is the remedy? To plead in the court immunity and get discharged. That is what happens whenever a man is arrested for something of which he is not guilty. He pleads his defense, and that is his only remedy. The Constitution gives him the right to relief, but he must work it out in the courts, and the House that is supposed to be assailed has no right to interfere there at all. We use the word "jurisdiction" wrongly when we talk about this question. It is not a question of jurisdiction of the courts. The court that issued this alternative writ of mandamus has jurisdiction of the subject of suits in mandamus. That is the jurisdiction, and the question is a matter of acquiring jurisdiction over the persons who are understood to be Members of the House. That is done by service upon them, and that gives the court jurisdiction. It is then a question of defense. As the Supreme Court says—

It is the duty of a Member to plead his defense—

And that being done, he goes to the court for his remedy, and nowhere else, and in no other way.

So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the question here is not a question of determining any jurisdiction or the right to exercise it. We have the right jealously to look on and see whether anything wrong is done, and if necessary to aid our Members in a defense that sets up whatever immunity the Constitution gives them when they are sued in these cases.

There is nothing in the Constitution anywhere that exempts a Member of Congress from a civil suit. There is provision that he shall not be put under arrest. My friend from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] tried to argue that a mandamus was something more than a civil action. If he had worked out his theory, he would have demonstrated that it was a criminal action, and if he had accomplished that, then it would have been perfectly clear that we have no right to interfere at all, because in every criminal case the courts have jurisdiction, and we have no right to interfere on any pretense whatever, for the Constitution of the United States does not protect any person in a criminal proceeding of any character. Let me read a paragraph from the syllabus of the case of Williamson v. United States (207 U. S., 426):

The words "treason, felony, and breach of the peace," as used by the framers of the Constitution in section 6 of Article I, should be construed in the same sense as those words were commonly used and understood in England as applied to the parliamentary privilege, and as excluding from the privilege all arrests and prosecutions for criminal offenses, and confining the privilege alone to arrests in civil cases.

So if we had a criminal case, according to the recent unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, we would have no right to interfere at all, for the Member is not entitled to any protection in any form of criminal action. All the immunity that is given is against arrests in civil suits such as commonly used to be issued for debt.

Even if I had the time I would not care to discuss whether or not this court has the right to go on the final judgment in this mandamus proceeding. That is for the court to determine, and if the court does not decide right the remedy is to appeal as other suitors do and take the case if necessary to the highest court in the United States and there settle the case and all parties' rights properly and finally. If we get into a controversy with the court by saying the Members will not answer, the court, having acquired jurisdiction by personal summons or notice, may go on to final judgment in the case, and then we will meet the same difficulties that you are proposing to meet now. It is not a question of whether there is to be an imprisonment in a mandamus case. That does not follow. If the court decides that this body of men, constituted by law as agents for the Government, violated the law in making a contract and did not let the contract to the proper party, the court may direct them to do what they should have done under the law in order to save the Government money. This form of suit is used in all the States, especially against boards of public charitable institutions.

And when courts issue orders, they are obeyed. If the Members do not want to obey the court's orders, they can appeal the case to the higher court for final determination, as other unfortunate litigants must do to secure protection and to correct errors.

Trust the tribunal. There is no invading of the powers of this House by prosecuting a suit in a proceeding of this kind, and there is no danger of conflict by sending Members to jail unless they are contumacious and refuse to obey the order of the court. We ought to be as good citizens when Members of the House of Representatives as if we were not. If we were not Members of this House, we would obey the order of the court or get relief by proceedings in a higher court.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield to the gentleman if I have the time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is very familiar with all parliamentary practice. I would like to ask him if it is not true that the House of Representatives from its earliest days, whenever the question has been presented, has held that Members of the House could not even attend as witnesses when summoned by the courts without the consent of the House, and if it has not been put on this ground—that he was not waiving his own privilege, but by attending without permission of the House he was waiving the privileges of the House which prevented Members from being haled into court?

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman states the question too broadly. It has been held that Members could not be taken from their duties in the House to answer as witnesses, and that is as far as they have gone. Of course, a Member can not waive privileges that belong to the House, but constantly Members of the House are subpœnaed to attend courts all over the country when we have a session and when we have not had a session, and they have responded to those subpœnas like good citizens. There may be cases where they could not be taken from the floor to attend as witnesses. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman further if fifty years ago there was not a case where the House brought a witness before a committee——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to say that I have no recollection of the instance the gentleman is about to inquire about.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this discussion has taken entirely too broad a range. I propose, in the very few minutes which I shall occupy, to confine my attention exclusively to the subject-matter before the House. We have before us a resolution reported by the majority members of the Judiciary Committee, in response to a resolution that was forwarded to them for advice. The purport of that resolution is—and in order that there be no mistake, as the various questions have been asked evidencing the fact that it is not understood, I shall read a few lines of the resolution. The resolution proposed by the majority members of this committee is that it hereby grants permission to these particular gentlemen to appear in court, to enter their appearance, and to take such further action and interpose such further defense as may to them seem proper, and in addition thereto excuses them from attendance on the House.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this resolution simply grants permission to these people to do these things; it does not direct or instruct them to do a thing.

Now, the resolution that is proposed as a substitute is of an entirely different character. The vital portion of that resolution is contained in these words: That in the opinion of the House of Representatives the issuing of the rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue is an unlawful invasion of the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of the House of Representatives and is without the jurisdiction, and that the Representatives are directed not to answer.

Now, that there shall be no misconception, you understand that in the one case the majority resolution gives these people the permission to do what they choose in the matter, and the other stands on the theory that the issuing of the rule to show cause is an invasion of the sovereign prerogatives of this House, and instructs the Representatives not to answer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this question has been discussed wholly upon this ground, which I propose to show is an absolutely mistaken one. The theory upon which it has been discussed and I believe the thought that prevails in the minds of the Members of the House is that this is an attempt to issue a writ to show cause against a committee of the House to coerce them into exercising their legislative duty. I propose to show that it does not issue a rule to show cause against a committee of this House, and that it does not have the most remote reference to legislative duty.

The Joint Committee on Printing is not a committee of this House. It never was, and by its constitution and composition it can not be a committee of this House. The standing committee of this House is the Committee on Printing, and by the sheerest accident in the world, by a pure incident or accident, that committee happens to be the House end of the Joint Committee on Printing. Now, I repeat the assertion that it is not a committee of this House, and I will explain further why it is not and will tell what it is. One of the provisions under which that joint committee exists under the statute is that when this House is not in session and does not have any Committee on Printing, when it has no committees, then the Senate end of it acts as the Committee on Printing. Bear that in mind. Of course, I think you will all agree that it is an inconceivable proposition that the Senate Committee on Printing can legislate for this House. Then, a further provision of the statute is that when the Senate is not here and when the House is not here that all the duties of this committee devolve upon and are exercised by the Secretary of the Interior. Now, no person would dare assert that the act confers upon the Secretary of the Interior legislative duties.

Therefore, I say, disabuse your minds of the fact that this is a rule to show cause why a committee of this House should not answer. It is not anything of the kind. It is a rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue against a statutory committee, a committee created by law, a committee of our own creation, and a committee that has not—and I now challenge contradiction, and it is the crux of this whole case—a committee that does not possess one single element of legislative power. It never did a legislative act in its history, and is utterly incapable of performing a legislative act. It is a statutory committee. Now, think for a moment of this unthinkable proposition: We have drifted too far away from the subject. The contention here is that that committee, created by an act of Congress, performs legislative duties. That is, in other words, that the Members of Congress derive their powers to legislate from an act of Congress; that an act of Congress can confer anything except executive duties. We derive our power to legislate from the Constitution of the United States, and no statute that we can pass can either enlarge or abridge it.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said this was a statutory committee.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Pure and simple.

Mr. PRINCE. If it is a statutory committee, will the gentleman state to the House whether it is possible—legally possible—for the members of the statutory committee to claim their privilege as Members of this House?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do not propose to go into that question. It is not necessary to decide it, and I do not propose to be misled from the legal proposition that is before me. A very serious question might arise as to the dual relations of Congressmen. We do not have to answer it in this proceeding, and I do not propose to answer it.

Mr. PRINCE. If this is a statutory committee, and they are officers, under the contention of the gentleman and the members of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary, have these Members of Congress any right to be officers and at the same time Members of Congress?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That question I shall decline to answer, except to state that there is a wide, wide divergence between acting under a statute and being officers in contemplation of the Constitution of the United States. They may have analogy and they may be as wide apart as is Washington and the North Pole. I do not propose to discuss it, because its discussion or solution are not necessary in the matter before us.

I say, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the rule to show cause why the writ should issue is not against a committee of this House, and not an attempt to coerce or control the exercise of any legislative power, because it is not a committee of the House and it has no legislative power.

Those two positions having been established, and there can be no doubt about it, let me restate the proposition as it ought to exist before this House. Has a court the right to issue the common-law writ of mandamus to a committee created by an act of Congress to regulate and supervise the exercise of its executive power? That proposition there can be no more doubt about than there is a doubt about the court in any other relation. It has absolute power by the common-law writ of mandamus to compel the performance of a plain ministerial duty.

Let me tell you what the law of mandamus is. It is perfectly clear that wherever there exists by statute a mandatory duty, a duty that is plain and clear and indubitable, a duty that is wholly ministerial in character, a writ of mandamus will lie. In no other case in the world will it lie.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Whether or not in the opinion of the gentleman a writ of mandamus would lie against Congress to compel it to do certain things.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. To ask that question answers it. I have told you that it must be a mandatory power that is imposed by the law, that is clear, indubitable, and ministerial. None of the acts of Congress are ministerial; they are all legislative. Of course not. The mere statement of that plain rule of law that defines the common-law writ of mandamus answers the question. I repeat; the duty imposed by the statutes must be mandatory, it must be purely and simply ministerial, and it must be clear and indubitable. Of course, therefore, a writ of mandamus can not issue against a committee in Congress to control the exercise of its legislative functions. It is unthinkable. That is not the question before this House at the present moment.

I repeat, and I want to restate the proposition, that it is a rule to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be executed against a statutory committee in the performance of statutory duties. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to this fact. I said a moment ago that it was the purest accident and incident that the members of the Joint Committee on Printing should be the members of the respective Committees of Printing in the two Houses. The statute does not require it. The statute says there shall be a Joint Committee on Printing that shall consist of three members of the Senate and three Members of the House; and, therefore, there is a committee provided with statutory duties and incidentally provided with a personnel that they shall be Members of Congress, not members of any committee; and our House, in its rule, has perhaps made a mistake for the purpose of convenience by saying: "Well, we will put three men on to perform these statutory duties, and we will indicate these three men, whenever there are legislative duties to be performed, to perform those duties on the part of the House, and will designate them as the House members of the Joint Committee on Printing." It never ought to have been done, and our confusion arises from that accidental and incidental condition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the persons to whom a writ of mandamus can issue, after one hundred and twenty years of adjudication in our courts, is no longer open to doubt. Marbury and Madison, on the very threshold of our judicial existence, in the great opinion of Chief Justice Marshall, which has been the landmark of the law ever since, laid down in clear, unmistakable language the prerogatives of a writ of mandamus, against whom it could issue, and how that fact was to be determined, and it has been followed by a line of cases one hundred and twenty years long and has never been broken. He said this:

> It is not the office of the person to whom the writ is directed, but the nature of the thing to be done, by which the propriety or impropriety, the legality or the illegality of the writ of mandamus is to be determined.

Now, let us see what that meant. Let us get an interpretation from our present statute. In a session of Congress this joint committee performed these legislative acts. When the Congress is not in session and the Senate is not here the Secretary of the Interior performs them. Nobody in this House or in Congress would ever doubt a writ of mandamus would issue against the Secretary of the Interior when he was performing these acts, but the contention here is that, while the joint committee of Congress is incidentally performing them, no writ will issue.

The application of the doctrine of Chief Justice Marshall makes it very clear. It is not in the office of the person to whom it is directed, but in the nature of the thing to be done that the legality or the illegality, the propriety or the impropriety of issuing a writ of mandamus is determined. Therefore, the thing sought here to be enforced in this writ of mandamus is a plain, palpable statutory duty imposed by our law upon this committee. Now, a great deal of time, Mr. Speaker, has already been consumed by the fact that we have discussed the merits of this case. We have nothing to do with that here.

There is not a man here who can state the imperfections of the petition filed in this case in language too strong for me to indorse. It does not state legal grounds for the issuance of the writ. It is plainly demurrable, and any lawyer in this House after reading it will declare that these people are out of court as soon as they are in it. It is fatal. It is fatal, because it seeks to supply by the common law the right of mandamus, the withdrawal of something already done. It is fatal, because it attempts to coerce a joint committee in their discretionary duties. That is not the question we are discussing. Let them go into court and plead it. When they go into court and demur to this writ they are of court as soon as they are in it, but I beg gentleman on the floor of this House not to confuse that question with the question we are discussing. All of these questions go to the power of the court. We are arguing only the question of the jurisdiction of the court.

Now, gentlemen, I have said nearly all I had intended to say. We have heard a great deal about the dignity of this House. I yield to no man on this floor in my appreciation and veneration for the dignity of the House. No man will go further than I to preserve it; but, gentlemen, is it conceivable that you imagine that the dignity of this House is impaired by responding to a ruling showing cause why a writ of mandamus should be issued?

The Secretary of State has been mandamused time after time. I never heard of the dignity of his great office being impaired by obeying the law. The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, every Cabinet officer of the United States has from time to time been the subject of this writ and has been compelled to obey it.

Mr. Speaker, I say if we are jealous of the dignities and prerogatives of this House, if we want to establish them before the country and before the world at large, the simplest way in the world that we can do it is to obey the law—to obey the law. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, being one of the three members of the Committee on the Judiciary who signed the minority views, it is perhaps appropriate that I should address a few remarks to the question at issue before the House. Laying aside all feelings of pride as to the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives and as to the powers of the courts, I wish to discuss the proposition involved purely from a constitutional and legal standpoint. Much has been said in regard to this House abandoning its functions as a representative body, and I shall not go into those questions on this occasion, but shall endeavor to proceed directly to the points at issue.

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen say that the court is simply construing a statute and is called upon to adjudicate rights accruing under the same. There could be no controversy about it if that were the only question. If the petitioner in the case before us had any rights that have accrued under a statute, the proceeding is not in a correct way to have those rights redressed. And if their rights have been denied, then there is another forum where they have an appropriate remedy in a suit for damages, and if there is no remedy in the courts of the country, then this body has the right to pass a statute or resolution allowing them to go to the Court of Claims.

Here is the question of discretion, pure and simple, that has been placed with the Joint Committee on Printing. When the Speaker appointed the committees of the House at the end of the last extraordinary session, he named a committee, along with the other regular committees, from the body of the Members of this House, to act in this capacity, and it was composed of the gentlemen whose names appear in the pleadings. The Senate appointed their Committee on Printing, and then, by reason of a certain statute laying down certain things that the Joint Committee on Printing should do, these two committees act together.

Suppose this body had failed to appoint a committee on printing and the Senate had failed to appoint one, then would there have been a joint committee on printing, which they say is "created by the statute" that was passed in 1895? Why, in the petition itself the gentlemen are named, and I want to call your attention to them. There are named in the petition, as the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY.

Now, what do they pray for in the petition? Have you thought of that? Let me show you what the prayer of the petition is and analyze it for a few moments. First, the prayer is that these gentlemen who are named in the petition "be required to appear" before that court. Then they proceed to pray further to "withdraw the award granted by the committee," "commanding them to award such contract or contracts to petitioner," that the court shall require these gentlemen to appear in the court in their personal and representative capacity, and then receive a command to award this contract or contracts.

Now, what is the writ? Let me show you how broad is this writ, as issued by Justice Wright. In response to that petition the writ is granted, and these gentlemen are required to appear and show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be issued, as prayed in said petition. The members of this committee are required to appear in that court, answer the petition and the prayer, and submit themselves to the jurisdiction of that court.

Gentlemen, suppose they fail to respond. Suppose they fail to conform to the orders of the court. Suppose the court orders them to appear, as it has, and then orders them to cancel certain awards, and after they are ordered to cancel those awards, to grant awards to other parties or this petitioner.

Mr. CARLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have but little time.

Mr. CARLIN. I desire to make a correction of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I should be glad to yield for a correction.

Mr. CARLIN. You stated that their appearance in answer to this rule subjected them to the jurisdiction of the court?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CARLIN. That is not true, because they could appear especially for the purpose of pleading the court had no jurisdiction.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am coming to that.

I take my position on this broad ground, that this joint committee is part of the machinery of this body, to carry out the rules, regulations, and orders of the House, and they are not the creatures of a statute. The House is the creator, and the committee is the creature of this body.

Suppose they failed to appear; suppose they failed to cancel these contracts, and refused to award them, as the court instructs them to do? Then what occurs? The court will issue process for them, summon them to appear and show cause why they should not be punished for contempt. They refuse to appear. They plant themselves upon that clause of the Constitution which exempts them from such process as this, and what is the result? The court has no power to enforce its writ. The Member refuses to appear and submit himself to the court's jurisdiction and to answer its process. Then the court is powerless to enforce its jurisdiction until this body has adjourned. And even then the Member of Congress has the right to proceed to his home and return to this body and be exempt from arrest and imprisonment, except for certain specific acts expressly stated in the Constitution. While the court can not command a Member of this House to be present and appear, even after we have adjourned, it has no power to do so under any circumstances as long as its Members are exercising a power of discretion.

Gentlemen, it is argued that the Committee on Printing is created by a statute, and therefore they are subject to the jurisdiction of the court. At first I thought it would be better for this committee to be instructed to appear and plead to the jurisdiction of the court; but after thinking of it, and after listening to arguments of able gentlemen, on the other side and on this side, I came to the conclusion that this committee, the mere creature of this House, was subject to our jurisdiction and should not surrender it to the courts. While gentlemen talk about respecting the judiciary of the country, let them not forget that in yielding that respect by this body they might yield some of the constitutional privileges of this House. [Applause.] For my part, I am not willing to yield our jurisdiction to an inferior judicial tribunal. I go as far as any gentleman in respect for the judicial tribunals of the United States. I say, when we yield the proposition that any court can take a Member of this body away from our midst and require him to answer in regard to a discretionary matter, we have forfeited one of the greatest prerogatives vested in us by the Constitution.

Mr. McCALL. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Just for a moment, for I have but a little time.

Mr. McCALL. I agree with the proposition which the gentleman has just stated. Would the gentleman propose, for instance, to have somebody represent the House—the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, perhaps—who should go to the court and state respectfully and courteously that the House declines to submit its committee to the jurisdiction of the court? Or what communication would the gentleman make to the court?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Why, perhaps we might do that in some official way; but I would never agree to surrender our jurisdiction to the court.

Mr. McCALL. Does not the gentleman think it would be well for the House, through some one of its Members, to go and courteously state to the court that we decline to submit to the contention which would make the committee answerable to the court?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That might be done; but when it comes to the last analysis, to the legal proposition, and to get at the real solution, I do not know but what it would be better for this great body to summon the judge here and ascertain why he has issued a writ to take Members of this House into his presence. [Loud applause.]

When an inferior judge undertakes to say that three Members of this body and three United States Senators shall appear in person in his court, he is belittling our constitutional rights and our prerogative; and perhaps instead of our answering at the bar of his court the proper place to determine whether his writ was improvidently issued is at the bar of the House of Representatives, and we are the ones to determine whether our rights have been infringed.

I would not arouse jealously in regard to the jurisdiction of the courts and the House, but I am so firmly convinced that the committee is a part of the machinery of this body that I think its acts are our acts, and should be so respected. I have often seen the chairman of the Committee on Printing rise in his place, day after day, week after week, month after month, and ask unanimous consent that certain orders be made and move that certain things be done. I have seen the living, breathing Committee on Printing here year after year in its performances on this floor, and I say that it is a part of the House and not a mere creature of the statute of 1895, as gentlemen say. [Applause.]

Whenever you authorize the court to summon three of the Members of this House and command them to cancel and award contracts to some one else, the court may summon 300 of us any day and break a quorum and absolutely stop the proceedings of this body. Why the necessity for such action as this? There are other remedies in the courts. Because, forsooth, this company failed to file a proper bond under the statute, then are we, as a coordinate branch of the Government to be required to appear in the courts and remedy that defect? There are other methods of getting at it; and, so far as I am concerned, I shall cast my vote to stand upon our rights as a coordinate and a sovereign branch of this Government. Without meaning to detract from the jurisdiction of any other branch, I shall stand here and protect the privileges and rights of this House in order that no one may say we have descended still lower than the press of the country has already reported us to have fallen. [Applause.]

I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to bring myself to agree with the report made by a majority of the committee. The contention is that the House should authorize these Members to make response to the order which has been issued. If the Members submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for any purpose, it follows that the court, in the exercise of its power, must have the right to pass upon the sufficiency of the plea put in by the Members of the House. If the court had that power, it might hold that the plea submitted by the Members was not sufficient, and might then proceed in the exercise of its power to issue the writ against them, and upon disobedience attempt to enforce the writ by appropriate process. The conclusion of the majority must, if logically followed up, be that the Members, once they have submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for any purpose, are liable to be proceeded against by the ultimate process that can be issued by the court.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Are not these gentlemen already amenable to the court by virtue of the summons served upon them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. I believe that raises the very question at issue here, and that is whether the House should consent to permit the Members to respond in any way to the process. It is stated by Jefferson, and his statement is cited in Judge Storey's work on the Constitution, without any additional comment, that all persons are compelled to take notice upon their peril of those who are Members of either House returned of record. This writ is directed to a joint committee of the Congress. Upon its face it appears to be directed against Members of Congress. I am not able to differentiate between the duties that are supposed to be devolved upon the Members, and to distinguish them as legislative or ministerial functions.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Suppose the writ was addressed to the Librarian of Congress; would the gentleman understand that a Member of Congress was involved?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I would not. But I suppose that even courts know that joint committees of Congress consist of Members of Congress, particularly so since the courts are presumed to know the law; and the statute creating this committee expressly states that this committee shall be composed of members of the Senate and Members of the House of Representatives.

This is not a question of individual right or of individual prerogative; it is a question as to whether the process of court will run against any Member of this House while the House is in session. Is the issuance itself of the process an invasion of the privileges of the House? Once make any concession, and, logically, it must be that the process of the court must run to its limit; and the court in the exercise of its powers, if the plea be insufficient, in its judgment, must provide a punishment which must follow on the insufficient return to the order to show cause, if no other answer be made, and if the writ to follow be not obeyed.

It can not be that men who are Members of the House of Representatives can so far have forgotten the history of the English-speaking people as not to know that every right and every privilege that Members of this legislative body enjoy have been wrested from the Crown and from arbitrary power only by centuries of cruel struggle. It has been considered of the utmost importance that in their representative capacity here Members should be free from any interference whatever by courts.

I should have much preferred if the Committee on the Judiciary had been able to have reported a resolution asserting that the issuance of this process was a violation of the privileges of the House, and then, in order to contribute to the harmony of the relations that should exist between the departments of the Government, have directed these Members to have submitted such a reply to the order which had been issued; but I do not believe that we should for one instant acknowledge the propriety of the process or permit the Members of this House, while in the exercise of their representative functions, to submit to the interference by any court. Never has anything like this been attempted in our history.

There is an instance cited in Hinds's Precedents in which, in the investigation of the Belknap charges in 1876, the members of the committee which conducted that investigation were summoned to appear by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and to bring all papers, documents, records, checks, and contracts in their possession, or in the possession of the Committee of the House of Representatives on Expenditures in the War Department, and so forth. There was considerable debate as to what should be done, and the House adopted a resolution that it was an invasion of the privileges of the House and directed the Members to pay no further attention to the process issued until further order of the House.

I can not differentiate these cases. Members may urge and contend and attempt to distinguish between the duties that devolve upon them because being upon some committee appointed by rule, or under the rule, or some committee the duties of which are fixed by the statute.

Whatever may be the question as to the right of Members of the House to exercise other duties or functions than those of legislators, the fact is that question can not be raised in any other forum except in this House itself. Nobody can enter any other forum to raise the question that by discharging the duties of, or accepting some other position, Members have stripped themselves of the right to membership in this House. The House alone is sole judge of the qualifications of its Members, and so long as the House does not raise the question whether the duties be or be not within the purview of what it is intended that Members of the House should perform it can not be raised elsewhere. The fact is that they are performing the duties for the House itself. What is the object of the Joint Committee on Printing? It is true, in the conduct of its business it regulates contracts for printing for some of the departments of the Government.

The very purpose of establishing the joint committee, however, was to regulate and control the printing for the two Houses of Congress. Will it be said that whenever the two Houses of Congress create a joint committee for the purpose of conducting or controlling some affairs which are important and essential to the two Houses in the discharge of their duties that thereby they become amenable to processes from the courts?

I would, Mr. Speaker, if it were possible, be pleased to vote for some resolution which might, perhaps, not be considered too much like an affront to the court, and yet there are times in history when it is necessary for such a body as this to do that which is essentially to maintain the rights and prerogatives of the body itself, no matter how much it may appear to be an affront to any other person or any other body. [Applause.] It seems to me, in the preservation of the privileges and prerogatives of the House itself, the House should adopt the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I regard it as particularly unfortunate that this matter should have reached the House at all. It never should have gotten beyond the court which issued the alternative writ in this case. As has been very forcefully and clearly stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] a while ago, the mere reading of this petition would have shown anyone who had read a law book that it was not a case for the issuing of the alternative writ at all. The writ of mandamus will issue only for the performance of a ministerial duty. When it appears from the petition that the thing in question has been done, the writ should not issue at all; and if the presiding judge in this case had read or had heard read the petition herein, I take it, the alternative writ would never have issued. Now, as I intimated before in the questions I put to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA] when he had the floor, there is one exception to such a case as that, and that exception is where fraud is charged; but here the petition on its face showed, first, that the defendants are Members of Congress.

The courts, therefore, knew that fact. It showed, second, that the thing in question had already been done, and finally it failed to show, which the court should also have noticed, that fraud was charged. Under these circumstances, I say, the alternative writ should never have issued. Now it has issued, and the question before us is, What should the House instruct its Members to do in this matter? If they pay no attention whatever to this writ, what is the result? They are not subject to contempt of court. They have merely failed to put in an appearance, and all the court could do would be to render judgment against them by default. What does that amount to? What would the judgment be if default was taken against them and the matter proceeded to hearing? The judgment could only be to order them to do something. To do what? To do the thing prayed for in the petition. To do a thing that already had been done—a most ridiculous judgment. The court could not and would not enter any such judgment, and as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] said, as soon as the matter came before the court and he listened to the reading of the petition, then it would be thrown out altogether, either on demurrer or in some other way.

The court, of his own motion, would act if he would ever listen to the reading of this petition. That is the condition we are in now, and if there is any question of doubt as to what should be done, it seems to me very clear that this House should resolve that doubt in favor of its own prerogatives [applause] in favor of the independence of the membership of the House in the performance of its official duty. These Members are in no danger whatever. It is not a question of damages against them. It is not a question of commitment for contempt of court, and perhaps the court has as much of that sort of thing on its hands as it cares to deal with just now. None of those questions are involved here. If the matter goes to default, I ask any lawyer here what judgment can the court enter when that default is made? There is only one judgment the court could make, and that would be to order the defendants to do the thing prayed for in the petition. Now, the petition in this case, a most ridiculous thing, too, prays to withdraw the awards already made. Just think of that! How did a court let such a thing pass it—asking a court in a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the withdrawal of the awards already made without charging that such awards were made fraudulently or in bad faith?

If the petition had charged that this committee acted in bad faith, or not in good faith, or fraudulently, or corruptly, if the petition had charged any of those things, then it would not be necessary for the petitioner to ask the withdrawal of the awards on these contracts, because the courts have always held, and always will hold, that what is done in fraud is not done at all. But they do not charge fraud here. They say the contract has been awarded, and now they ask the court to issue a writ of mandamus, to exercise one of its most drastic powers, and to exercise that power in the doing of a thing that has already been done; a most ridiculous situation.

Mr. Speaker, I am hardly qualified to discuss, and I shall not ask the House to listen to a discussion by myself of the other features of the case, as, for instance, what position the members of this committee are in if the gentlemen who advocate the majority report are right. Are they holding executive offices; and if so, have they ceased to be Members of this House? And a great many other questions that are raised by the report of the majority. Can they hold an executive office under the Federal Government and retain their seats in this House? There are many questions of that kind that can easily be laid quietly and silently in their graves by taking the action suggested in the substitute motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], thus putting this matter quietly to rest. Nobody will be injured, and the dignity and prerogatives of the House will be maintained. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN].

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the result of these two reports in this House to-day, or to-night, the American people are to be congratulated upon one fact, and that is that we have demonstrated that this House is gradually approaching the time when reasonable debate is to be permitted in this Chamber. I am a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, but was not present when this matter was considered, yet I concur in the report of the majority; but before addressing myself to the subject-matter in hand, I desire to reply to a statement made by the gentleman from Alabama, a member of the Judiciary Committee, when he undertook to gain the favor of this House by inveighing against that committee when he made the statement that we had reported a bill here only a short time ago to change the date of the inauguration of the President of the United States and hastened to grasp the opportunity to send it back to that committee for the purpose of burying it there.

That statement does not accord with the facts so far as I am informed as a member of that committee. It was recommitted for the purpose of perfecting the bill and is to-day under consideration by a subcommittee of that committee whose purpose, so far as I know and believe, is to report it back to this House in accordance with the views of the Members as expressed upon this floor.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLIN. I will; certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the gentleman think the committee will bring it back here and does the gentleman think the House will adopt it if it is brought back here?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not assume, as you, to speak for the House, nor do I assume to speak for the committee, but I believe the committee will report it back to the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt the gentleman further to state that the gentleman misstates my attitude. I was only replying to the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan who remarked and laid emphasis upon the fact that 14 members of the committee had made a certain report and I said that this question rose beyond the mere consideration of numbers, that it was to be debated upon a higher ground than that, and that is all I meant by my statement.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman did state, however, according to my recollection, exactly what I have said.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not think there is any great difference between the gentleman and myself. I think the purpose of the resolution going back to the committee was to wrap that resolution in the cerements and silence of the grave. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Inasmuch as I was the author of the resolution to change the inauguration date and agreed that it should be recommitted, I think I should state why that was. When my friend from Alabama to-day referred to the resolution being sent back to the Judiciary Committee with a view of burying it, I then thought that was the weakest point in his speech, and I still think so. I only agreed it should be recommitted in order to give some gentlemen some time to reflect, and I feel sure that the resolution will yet come out of the Committee on the Judiciary and that the date of inauguration will be changed to the last Thursday in April. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, may I interrupt——

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman must remember I have but a short time.

Mr. CLAYTON. I only desire to offer one remark, and that is to say that this committee had this bill to change the date of the inauguration before this House, debating it at length for a day or two, and failed to pass it here, and had to take it out of this House.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not agree with the gentleman in any particular——

Mr. CLAYTON. It was either that, or have it defeated; that is my opinion.

Mr. CARLIN. I think the purpose, as I understood your remarks in this House to-day, was to strengthen your attitude to-day by inveighing against that committee and its wisdom and judgment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can not lecture me on propriety and my attitude as a member of that committee, of which I have been a member for more than ten years, and I uphold its dignity and its importance, and have done so long before the gentleman made his advent on the scene, and the gentleman can not understand that in argument and in answering the gentleman from Michigan, who went out of his way to invoke the numerical majority in sustaining his argument, that I had the right to invoke, as I think, the superior intellectual strength of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] as an offset to the mere brutal majority of fourteen. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CARLIN. I hope the gentleman will not think that I am undertaking to lecture him. Such is not my purpose.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am glad the gentleman has disclaimed that, and I accept it in the same spirit that he makes it.

Mr. CARLIN. But I am undertaking to answer what I understood you to say, namely, that it had been sent back there for the purpose of burying it, and that we grasped the first opportunity to send it back there for that purpose.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman does not pretend to quote me accurately?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not; but that is my recollection.

Mr. CLAYTON. I can not be blamed for the fault of the gentleman's recollection. I have my own infirmities to bear, and I say reverently, God forbid that I should have to bear yours. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARLIN. I think the gentleman should invoke, if he has to do so, the Divinity to prevent him from having to bear any more infirmities than his own. I agree with him that they are ample and abundant for any one man to bear. [Laughter.] If I am misquoting the gentleman, it certainly is not my intention to do so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what has happened to provoke this discussion and to provoke these resolutions? A court of law in the District of Columbia has issued a rule against certain Members of this House to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued. Let us look at this matter as lawyers and see whether that court could have done anything else except what it did. I submit it to the legal judgment of any man within my hearing that it was not possible for that court to have refused to issue a rule. Now, what is the practice? When a petition is filed asking for a mandamus the court treating it, as it always does, as an ex parte proceeding, issues a rule to show cause. That is to get it in court not only to investigate the merits, if the court should think proper, but for the purpose, if it please, of determining the very jurisdiction of the court to issue the writ. The gentleman from New York has said that if we should respond to that writ by appearing we would subject ourselves to the jurisdiction of the court. That is not a fact, because a special appearance can be entered for the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction and determining the question of whether the court has jurisdiction or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the question of the court's jurisdiction is raised, it is not an invitation to the court to pass upon the sufficiency of the claim.

Mr. CARLIN. That is not an appearance and that is not a submission to the jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] has expired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman begs the question when he stated that any appearance gave the court jurisdiction of the parties. Such is not the case, and the parties are not affected any more on determination of that question by special appearance than if they had never appeared in court at all. Now, what is before this House? I have stated that the court of the District of Columbia could not have refused to issue the rule. It was compelled, in accordance with established rules of practice, to issue the rule to show cause. Now, why should not an appearance be entered and the fact pleaded that the court has no jurisdiction?

How is the dignity of the House invaded? How are the rights of a single Member imposed upon? It is only intruded upon, in my judgment, in the imaginative minds of gentlemen who know that this question can and will be settled in twenty minutes after an appearance is entered and the plea to the jurisdiction is made or motion to discharge the rule is made, which is the practice.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. My understanding of the majority resolution is that it provides specifically for a general appearance.

Mr. CARLIN. Only should the committee of the House desire to make a general appearance.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. That was my understanding. I think that is the scope of the majority resolution.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman has misunderstood the scope of the majority resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Suppose, as has been suggested——

Mr. CARLIN. Let us settle one question at a time.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Suppose the court required them to enter a general appearance after they enter a special appearance and upon failure to do so renders judgment? A pending amendment provides specifically that they shall enter only a special appearance.

Mr. CARLIN. If we are reduced to a case of supposition, why not suppose you and I are in Germany instead of America to-night? One is just as reasonable as the other. I am trying to have this House understand what will actually happen as a matter of legal procedure, and what the court had to do when this petition was filed. This court has not invaded the rights of this House. An ex parte petition was filed, and in accordance with every rule of practice there was nothing left for the court to do except to issue a rule to show cause, which practically means that you shall have permission to come into court and show why this should not be done. That is all. You are not compelled to answer this rule, and this House could by a motion to-night lay both of these reports upon the table, and the effect would be the same.

Now, suppose we adopt the majority report. The members of this committee appear, and they move to discharge the rule upon the ground that the court has no jurisdiction to proceed further. In other words, it can not enter a decree in this proceeding. Has any man here to-night an idea that there is any court in the land that does not agree with us that it has no jurisdiction? The majority and the minority are practically agreed upon that point. The only question is whether we shall undertake here to determine that we will ignore the court, whether we will authorize this committee to proceed in a regular manner, and to appear in court, and give the court an opportunity to determine if it has no jurisdiction. It is not a novel thing for a court to determine that it has no jurisdiction. It is an every-day occurrence; it is an hourly occurrence; but the question must be raised, and it ought to be regularly and decently raised.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that I shall ask the floor in my own right.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to add anything to the legal information that has been furnished to this body in the consideration of this question, and I would not have undertaken to say anything upon the question whatsoever, not being learned in the law, but would have sat entirely as a juryman in the case, listening to the arguments of those who are learned in the law, were it not for the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan, in the heated peroration to his argument this afternoon in support of the majority report, making reference to the action of certain gentlemen who are not Members of this House in a case that is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States.

This Government is not only a government of delegated powers, but it is also a government of reserved powers. The powers that are not delegated to the General or Federal Government are reserved in the various States and to the people.

There is no federal court that can have any greater power than the power conferred upon it by the Constitution. If it infringes upon rights not granted to it by the Constitution and interferes with those rights reserved to the various States and to the people, then it steps beyond its constitutional prerogatives; and when it does so and there is no other method of taking the case to a higher court except by violating its order, then I claim it is patriotism on the part of any citizen whose constitutional rights are infringed upon by a court, and he has no other means of maintaining them except by violating the order of that court, it is the highest patriotism to violate the order of the court in order to get to a higher court and get his case properly adjudicated. [Applause.]

In the case the gentleman has reference to, still pending before the Supreme Court, the courts of the District of Columbia undertook to restrain these men from exercising that which they believed to be a constitutional right. Undertook to restrain them from the exercise of the right of free speech and a free press, guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution. They believed that to be the case. They were enjoined from the exercise of these rights, a preliminary hearing was had, and the court made the injunction. There was no other method by which they could establish their rights in the case except by violating the order of this court which had granted a permanent injunction, and they violated it, and thereby got an opportunity to carry the case to a higher court than that which issued the order.

They did that, and their case is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States. I happen to have the honor of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Gompers, Mr. Morrison, and Mr. Mitchell, an intimate acquaintance, extending over a great many years, and I can say, from personal association with them, that there are no more patriotic, no more law-abiding citizens in the United States than are those three men. [Applause.] It was deemed necessary for the protection of the liberties of the people that the right of free speech and of a free press should be established as a fundamental law of our Government. A court stepped in and attempted to restrain citizens of this country from exercising that right. They refused to be restrained and took the only means available for them, to take their case to the higher court.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. Were not those gentlemen advised by men learned in the law that the ruling of the lower court was not the law, and yet the only way they could test it was by violating it?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not care to consume any more time if I have any left.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I feel like apologizing to the House for intruding any further remarks upon them on this subject, but, as a member of the committee who has tried to study it from all view points possible and who happens to be one of the "brutal majority" mentioned by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], I feel that I ought to express my views on the question, assigning reasons why the majority report should be adopted and the minority report rejected.

There have been a great many things said that have absolutely nothing to do with the question at issue. Members have discussed many irrelevant subjects to-night, from changing the date of inauguration down to what might have happened, but what did not happen.

In the first place, let me answer a few things said by my friend from Texas [Mr. HENRY] before I proceed to the main question, and I promise the House to be brief. My friend says the proper remedy of the Valley Paper Company was a suit for damages. Now, if he admits that the Valley Paper Company has a right to sue these men for damages, then he concedes the whole case, because if the court has jurisdiction of these individual members of this committee for the purpose of mulcting them in damages, then it has jurisdiction of them in this proceeding to serve a rule to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued. They are both civil writs, and the question for us to pass upon is, Has the supreme court of the District jurisdiction over the members of the Joint Committee on Printing?

My friend made the point that in the body of the pleading filed by the plaintiff the words "Joint Committee on Printing of Congress" are used. I want to inform my friend from Texas that there is no such committee in existence. There are only two Committees on Printing. One is the standing committee of this House—the Committee on Printing—which was appointed, like the Judiciary Committee, and is an arm and part of the House, and the other is the statutory committee, known as the "Joint Committee on Printing"—not the "Joint Committee on Printing of Congress," but the "Joint Committee on Printing." So the question my friend raises has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of the court.

The next statement I wish to notice is his assertion that this Joint Committee on Printing, members of which are now being cited to appear before Judge Wright to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued, is a creature of this body—that is, of the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. If you have read the statute, you have failed to see that it says "the Joint Committee on Congress," and you seem not to have heard the petition in this case read, and this alternative writ which describes these gentlemen as a committee of Congress. The words are used in the statute and in the papers.

Mr. WEBB. I do not care how the writ describes them; the designation in the writ does not control the statutory name of the committee. I read from the law itself. It says:

There shall be a Joint Committee on Printing.

Not a Joint Committee on Printing of the House or Senate or of Congress, but "there shall be a Joint Committee on Printing," simply.

Mr. CLAYTON. Of Congress.

Mr. WEBB. No; it does not say "of Congress;" and that is where the gentleman is mistaken. The words "of Congress" are not used.

Mr. CLAYTON. There can not be any other committee except the committee of Congress, and the writ recognizes it, and the petition says so.

Mr. WEBB. There can only be such committee as the law creates, and that is created by the statute of February 12, 1895 (28 Stat. L., 601).

Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt the gentleman one more time?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman will not maintain that this committee is composed of anybody except three Senators and three Members of the House.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman is now begging the question.

Mr. CLAYTON. Not at all; I think the gentleman himself is begging the question.

Mr. WEBB. That is for the House to determine, and not for my friend. The gentleman started out by saying that this was a Joint Committee on Printing of Congress; that that was the legal designation. I do not find any such expression in the statute. It says "Joint Committee on Printing," and no such committee as he mentions exists.

Mr. CLAYTON. Read the rules of the House, X and XI.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, I ask the gentleman to read Rules X and XI, one providing for the appointment of three Representatives, who compose the House end of this committee, and Rule XI, which defines the jurisdiction of that committee, and he will find the words "joint committee" used, I think.

Mr. WEBB. I presume what the gentleman refers to are the Cannon rules, which he fought so bitterly not long ago, but they do not use the term "Joint Committee of Congress." They mention the Committee on Printing, which is like any other ordinary House committee, and provide for the appointment of the Members to fill the "Joint Committee on Printing."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I may say that they are not Cannon rules, but they existed under Speaker Crisp, a Democrat, just as a great many rules in this Manual existed under Speaker Crisp, a Democrat.

Mr. WEBB. We are getting away from the real question again. Let us stick to the issue before the House, without any effort to appeal to individual official prejudice and "dignity of the House," as collective Members of this body. We may have the power to do a certain thing, yet it does not follow that it is wise to do that thing. We have the power to pass the defying substitute, but I assert that such action would be unwise and set a dangerous and unfortunate precedent. This writ is against ALLEN COOPER, GEORGE F. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY as individuals, and does not mention them as Members of the House or Members of Congress, and refers distinctly to the law under which the plaintiff is proceeding, and that it is the act of 1895, which created the Joint Committee on Printing, and not the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress.

Now, to come back to what I started to say awhile ago when my friend from Alabama interrupted me. My friend from Texas [Mr. HENRY] says that this Joint Committee on Printing is the creation of this House, one particular branch of the Sixty-first Congress, which I respectfully deny, and I appeal to every lawyer and every layman in this body to read this statute passed back in 1895, and when not 3 per cent of the Members of the present House were Members of the Congress which passed the law. The law was passed in 1895, and this particular branch and this particular session of the present Congress had nothing to do with its creation. The law under which the suit is brought was passed by Congress and signed by the President as any other law, and has the same sanctity and supremacy, no more and no less.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman has said several times that this committee was created by the statute. Suppose the House should fail and refuse to appoint a Committee on Printing, and suppose the Senate should do the same thing, where would you get your Joint Committee on Printing created by the statute that the statute refers to?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WEBB. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman's authority for imagining that the Congress that created the committee will decline to obey the law that it has itself made?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do no know that they would decline to obey it.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Then why assume that they would?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask, if the committee created by the statute is not filled by appointment by the Speaker of the House and the Vice-President, where would your Joint Committee on Printing be created?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, I refuse to be sidetracked by such a question. Suppose the President of the United States should fail or refuse to fill a statutory office or commission by making the appointment? But why suppose a case when we have a real one before us, where the Speaker has obeyed the law and the appointments have been made, and the appointees have been exercising the powers given them by law?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is not a sidetrack.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman from Texas stated that this committee was created by this particular session of Congress, and that I deny. This committee was created in 1895 by a supreme law of this land, because the Constitution says that treaties made under the Constitution and enactments of Congress, and the Constitution itself, shall be the supreme law of the land.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this committee was provided for by law long prior to the date the gentleman has suggested. It was provided for in 1846 by statute.

Mr. WEBB. That is true to a certain extent; but the law of 1846 did not create any such committee as was created by the law of 1895. The committee of 1846 had no power to let contracts; the power there was of the most limited sort—to supervise the work of the Public Printer and settle disputes between him and the superintendent. That law was amended in 1852, and gave the committee some additional powers and duties.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman is in error there, I think. In 1846 the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate were authorized to advertise for bids for printing paper, and so forth, and to open the award of bids under the supervision of the Speaker and the President of the Senate.

Mr. WEBB. And if the gentleman will read further in the same act he will find that three Members of the House and three Members of the Senate were appointed as a committee to supervise the difficulties between the Public Printer and the superintendent of printing, and in 1852 the law was amended and strengthened and gave more authority to the committee, and that law was carried down in the Revised Statutes in section 3756, and so forth. In 1895 the whole law of printing was revised, enlarged, and amended, and certain powers and limitations were placed upon the present Joint Committee on Printing. So it is a statutory committee, with clearly defined duties under said statute.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. While on that statute, suppose your Joint Committee on Printing fails and refuses to do a thing authorized by the law of 1895? They refuse to advertise for bids, they refuse to advertise in the cities named in the statute. There are certain cities named, and they fold their hands and refuse to perform a single function mentioned in the statute. What authority has jurisdiction to require them to perform their duties—the courts of the country, or the House that created the membership of the committee, the Senate and the House?

Mr. WEBB. Answering the last part of the gentleman's question first, I would say that this House can not make one of its Members obey a single law; but it might make its Members obey the rules of the House, but not the laws of the United States.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In reply to that——

Mr. WEBB. There is no power in this House to compel a man to execute the law. That is a function of the courts in proper cases.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I cite the gentleman to the Constitution, which expressly says that this body shall have the power to compel Members to perform their duties, and expel them.

Mr. WEBB. As Members, subject to the rules of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes, as Members. If they refuse to perform the services——

Mr. WEBB. But the gentleman does not find anywhere in the Constitution anything giving this House the power to physically force any Member to obey the rules of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Each House may punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a Member.

Mr. WEBB. Now, does the gentleman think he ought to interrupt me with such a question as that?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I certainly do, because I think it is pertinent.

Mr. WEBB. I do not think it is pertinent at all.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Let me ask the gentleman this question——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman further yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Does he believe that a Member shall have the right to refuse to accept membership on a commission when required to do so by a majority of this House?

Mr. WEBB. Well, Mr. Speaker, my friend is asking another irrelevant question. The Member has no right to refuse; but if he does, the House can not compel him to serve. It might punish his disobedience by expulsion. But why does not the gentleman stick to the main question—the jurisdiction of the court to construe and execute one of the laws of the United States, the statute in question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is a practical question.

Mr. WEBB. Here is the law, without wondering what might happen in certain cases. Now, getting back to the main question again, I say this, that this House has not one particle of authority to compel any man to obey the law of the United States. It can require Members to perform their duties, possibly, as Members of the House, or suffer expulsion; but duties prescribed by law are quite different, with which the House has nothing to do. My friend does not contend that the Members of this body get their power and authority to perform certain acts mentioned in the statute from the Speaker who appoints them, or from our particular branch of the present Congress, and that is the crux of this whole question. Where do these members of the Joint Committee on Printing get their power? Do they get it from the Speaker? No; they can not exercise a single power except that which is laid down in the act of February 12, 1895, just the same as if the President of the United States should appoint an individual to perform certain duties under a statute. The appointee would not get his power to act from the President, but from the law which he is supposed to execute after he is appointed; and after his appointment the President does not control his duties, but they are defined by statute.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman admitted that the House had a right to compel Members to perform their duties—Members of the House. Now, what are their duties? Are they confined to duties on the floor of the House or in the committees as well?

Mr. WEBB. Well, I should hate to have to tell this House what the duties of the Members are. I assume they know their duty. The Members do not serve on this Joint Committee on Printing as Members of the House, but as individuals subject to no control except the law under which they act.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman does not know, just let him say so, and I will excuse him.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose that my friend, who is full of theories and hypotheses, shall take up my time when he will not meet the main question. I know this: That the man who serves on this committee is not serving as a legislator, because he does not perform a single legislative act as such member of the committee—his duties are executive and ministerial—and because the moment he takes office or takes a commission under this law he is subservient to the law, for that is the source of every particle of his authority.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Let me get through with one sentence. He is no greater than the law under which he takes his commission and assumes his duties. I think the House would present a pretty spectacle should it put itself in the attitude of saying that every other man shall obey the law or go to jail, but when a Member of the House accepts an office or commission under the laws of the United States and should violate the law or refuse to obey, that the courts of the country have nothing to do with it, and have no right or power to compel the execution of the very law under which the commission is held. All men are amenable to the law—Congressmen like everyone else. No man is too high or too low to escape it.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I desire to ask the gentleman whether anyone else but a Member of this House can be appointed on this committee?

Mr. WEBB. No, he can not; and that is because the statute makes it so.

Mr. SABATH. And because he is a Member of this House.

Mr. WEBB. That is the statutory qualification for membership on that committee. The statute makes it so. After he accepts service on that committee, then he is subject to the law, and wherever the law says a man shall do a thing and he does not do it, the only power that can compel him to do it is the courts alone. Congress can not do so, for its duties are legislative alone.

Mr. SABATH. But he acts as a Member of this body.

Mr. WEBB. He does not act as a Representative. I am trying to get that idea clear in the mind of my friend. He is acting as a member of a statutory committee with only such authority as the statute vests in him as a member of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. SABATH. But would he act if he was not a Member of this House?

Mr. WEBB. He could not, because the statute says he could not.

Mr. SABATH. And he could not be appointed——

Mr. WEBB. Because the statute says so, and I am appealing to the statute, that that is the supreme law that shall be obeyed. My friend is willing to appeal to the provisions of the statute in one respect, but seems unwilling to accept it in another. He says you can not appoint anybody but a Member of Congress on this joint committee, which is correct, because the statute says so and not the House rules; but after he is appointed under that supreme law, shall it be said that he can set the whole law aside if he choose, and is not amenable to it at all?

I deny, Mr. Speaker, the statement of my friend from Texas and his argument that this committee is a creature of this branch of the present Congress or this House, or of the Sixty-first Congress, for that matter. It is a creature of the law. It is a statutory committee created by a solemn law of this land.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. WEBB. I will; but I want to make this argument as brief as I can, as the hour is late.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think I agree with the gentleman, in the main; but I want to make this suggestion: Have the members of the Joint Committee on Printing authority to award contracts?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; that is right.

Mr. HAMLIN. If they were to make a wrong award or refuse to make a certain award, has this House any power to compel them to make that certain award or refuse to make it?

Mr. WEBB. If you ask my opinion, I would say absolutely none, any more than this House has the power to make the violator of any other law obey the law. This House certainly could not control the Senate members of the joint committee; neither could it control the House members, for they all must obey the law of their creation as the common source of their powers.

Mr. HAMLIN. I agree with the gentleman there. Now, if the House has not authority to compel them to act in a certain way when they are performing that particular act, are they acting for the House or under the supervision or jurisdiction of the House?

Mr. WEBB. I see the point of the gentleman's question. They are not acting under the supervision of this House, but under the law that created the committee for and in the interest of the people of the United States in awarding contracts for paper for the use of the United States Government, including paper for the use of Congress.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has this House the power to make any committee pursue any particular kind of action or make any particular kind of report?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; because that is within the line of our legislative duty, and that is a committee created and filled entirely by this House alone.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is not my question. My question was: Has this House the right to make any of its committees make a particular kind of report on any particular matter before it?

Mr. WEBB. We did that to-day here. Of course they can, by a mere majority, and that is how the committee came to make the report. A majority of eight of the House so instructed its committee, and they obeyed the instruction. But that is purely a House committee, created by the House, with only the powers given it by the House.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. You can make a committee bring in a report, but can you make them report a particular way?

Mr. WEBB. We do not make the committee of the House do it, but they make the report as the House directs.

Mr. HAMLIN. The distinction is just here, I think. When the committee acts in a legislative capacity, their acts are subject to a review always by this House; but when they act in an executive capacity, as in the awarding of contracts, their action is not subject to a review by this House at all.

Mr. WEBB. Now, Mr. Speaker, my friend from Texas [Mr. HENRY] devoted a considerable portion of his time to discussing the merits of this case. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we are creating a mountain out of a mole hill. To-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, when these gentlemen of this joint committee file their pleas or answer, that will be the last of this proceeding. No court has issued a mandamus against anybody. Let Members understand this. No court has issued an order to these Members that they shall do or shall not do a certain thing. The court has simply politely requested these members of the joint committee to appear and say why a mandamus should not be issued. Now, if the position of my friend from Texas is correct, if it is a privileged matter, if either the privilege of the House or of Members is involved, if these gentlemen are surrounded by some peculiar power called "privilege," then let them go to the bar of the court and let them make that plea, and the court will dismiss the proceeding if their position is correct. The very argument against this majority resolution which we offer ought to satisfy the House that they should vote for the majority report. If involving the privilege of the House, as the gentlemen claim, then in common respect to the courts of this land, let this plea be set up, and have the case dismissed in an orderly way. These gentlemen ought at least to go down and tell the court what their plea is, and not defy it. That court is guilty of no contempt to this Congress. After it has shown its contempt to the Congress there is time plenty to act. But wait until our prerogatives or rights are invaded, wait until they are run over before we take any extreme action. Of course, Mr. Speaker, as to the merits of the case, the moment the judge in the morning discovers the word "best" used in this statute he will say: "Gentlemen, when the law says the contract shall be awarded to the 'best' as well as the lowest bidder, the word 'best' gives the committee the power to decide what is the 'best' contract, and for this reason I can not issue mandamus to enforce a discretionary power."

Mr. JAMES. Would not the court make the same finding in the morning provided the committee did not appear there when it came to issue the mandamus or to consider the propriety of issuing it?

Mr. WEBB. It would not. You would have treated the court with contempt, and I say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the courts of this land are entitled to as much respect as the Congress of the United States, because they are a coordinate branch of this Government. And I am opposed to this House flinging defiance at this court or any other court in this land. [Applause.] The only way to maintain the dignity of this Congress is to obey the law and respect the courts. [Applause.] It will not add anything to the dignity of this body to pass a resolution here defying the court and throwing contempt in its face, and I am sure this body will be guilty of no such thing. So we need not bother about the merits of the case, gentlemen. That has nothing to do with the question before us now, though the committee has other complete defenses to the merits.

Before proceeding further: My friend from Texas [Mr. HENRY] does not surely mean what he seriously suggests—that this House, in its offended dignity, in its mighty and supreme power and wrath, should send for this judge of the supreme court of this District and try him before the bar here. Would we not have a situation of bedlam and of anarchy and destroy the great trinity of powers upon which this Government rests, which is peculiar to the United States alone of all nations, in that the legislative, the executive, and the judicial departments of this great Government shall forever remain separate, distinct, and independent of each other?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I did not say that this House should do that; but I do say that if any district judge of the United States should infringe upon the privileges and prerogatives of this House and insulted it by his action, then we would have the right to bring that judge before the bar of the House and deal with him.

Mr. WEBB. My friend is making another hypothetical proposition. Of course, if any judge should be guilty of high crimes and misdemeanor, we would impeach him; but why suppose or infer that a judge is going to commit such a crime when you respectfully answer and plead to the processes of his court? We should rather assume that the judge will not commit crime or violate the privileges of the House or its Members.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is not hypothetical at all.

Mr. WEBB. My friend is assuming again that the judge may do so and so. Who is this judge, anyhow? One would think from the excitement of gentlemen that he is a reincarnation of the famous Jeffries.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think he is the judge that issued the writ against Gompers and others, is he not?

Mr. WEBB. I should judge from that question that the gentleman from Texas does not like the judge for his conduct in the Gompers case, and is probably actuated by prejudice. This should not control us here. Whether this judge was right or wrong in that case has nothing whatever to do with our duty and responsibility as to the question before us now.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Probably I got him mixed with Judge Gould, who issued the writ, and Wright wrote the opinion.

Mr. WEBB. I do not know about that, and I do not care. That has nothing to do with the question before the House at present.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WEBB. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman from North Carolina has said something about the offended dignity of this House. I do not think that question is involved here. I understood you to say that this was an executive committee, performing the executive functions. If it is, then it is precisely like a collector of internal revenue or any other executive officer. Now, why should Congress assume to direct what he shall do because he happens to be sued in that court? What has Congress to do with instructing him how he shall answer?

Mr. WEBB. My friend has got an erroneous idea in his head as to what the report contains. The report does not "instruct" anybody; but my friend knows that the rules of this House provide that a Member of Congress can not leave it without permission, and all in the world that the majority report does is to give these gentlemen permission to go to court and plead to its jurisdiction and make any other pleas that they see fit to make.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Then why did not the report say so?

Mr. WEBB. That is just what it does say, and nothing else.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But if a Member should be sued on a promissory note in his district, shall he come to Congress and ask what he shall do, and would we pass a resolution referring that to the Committee on the Judiciary for a report as to how he should proceed? One is as good an assumption as the other.

Mr. WEBB. The Committee on the Judiciary is not responsible for the resolution being referred to it. The House did it without any request from our committee, but upon the request of the three gentlemen named in the rule to show cause.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why did not the committee side step it, and say that it was a matter with which they had nothing to do?

Mr. WEBB. But we are the law committee of the House, and when the House sent the resolution to that committee and wanted our advice as to what these three Members should do, that committee, in pursuance of the mandate of the House, submitted its report, which is now under discussion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think my friend from Missouri wants anybody to side step a question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If the gentleman will permit me, I do not believe that Members should side step anything in defending the committee; but I do not understand any executive officer that happens to be sued in any court would have authority to come here and take the opinion of the House as to what he should do about it.

Mr. WEBB. I understood my friend to ask why our committee had not side stepped the question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I said that was a matter which this House had no concern in, and if this is done in an executive function, why not report it back to the House in that way?

Mr. WEBB. We have practically reported that it is a matter with which this House has no concern and give the individual Members permission to plead, and so forth.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I think that would be a correct report.

Mr. WEBB. But now just one more hypothetical speech I want to notice, and it is that of my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. He complained here that if these men should go down to court, and if they should plead, and if they did not obey, and if the court should overrule them, and if the court should put them in jail and if so and so should happen—all based upon what might take place. I do not think the gentleman from New York has any right to assume that the court will violate either the law or the privilege of the House or its Members, and if his idea is correct, as I said a moment ago, if these men are immune from suit and process, either because of the privilege of the House or as individual Members, then Judge Wright has sense enough to know it, and will say so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, suppose the court should determine that the Members are not immune to process and that they were not privileged. Do we not in that way permit the court to determine what the privileges of the Members are rather than reserve that right to ourselves?

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, we want these men to go down there in a dignified way and plead to the jurisdiction of this court, and make any other pleas they choose.

If we take the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, we would instruct them to defy the court, wait until the court sends its process after them, and then they will be compelled to plead their privilege or go to jail. Suppose a Member of this body during the session should be indicted for a misdemeanor, would it not be his duty to answer the indictment either by pleading his privilege or to the merits of the case?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; if the gentleman were familiar with the history of the Commons, he would know that the Commons would never permit any court to attempt to enforce its process against members, and the same rights and prerogatives belong to the Members of this House and are essential to its liberties.

Mr. WEBB. I want to suggest to the gentleman the danger of pursuing such a course. Then you would have the marshal of the District of Columbia in physical combat with the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, and then you would have anarchy and the "best man" would win. Why not pursue an orderly course and let these men go down there and plead; let the judge decide whether they are immune from process. To pursue the course suggested by the gentleman from New York would produce anarchy.

In every lawsuit where a man thought he ought not to be sued, he would just take a club and stand up and fight the thing out with the sheriff or anybody who came to serve papers on him, and finally in all things brute force would be the controlling power. We have courts to determine these things peaceably, decently, and orderly.

Now, one more suggestion. The gentleman from New York has suggested the great danger of usurpation of government by the judiciary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not say that.

Mr. WEBB. I thought the gentleman spoke of England's judicial usurpation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I did not use that expression.

Mr. WEBB. What did the gentleman say about the judicial usurpation of power?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said nothing about judicial usurpation. I said that the gentleman would invite the judiciary to determine what are the prerogatives and privileges of the House, rather than having the House reserve that right to itself, as it should.

Mr. WEBB. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that time was in the past, when the Parliament undertook to control the judiciary of the country, and that is the very reason why, when the fathers wrote our Constitution, they provided that the trinity of powers upon which this Government rests should always remain separate and distinct from each other—the judicial, the executive, and the legislative. The judiciary has no right to tell the legislative what laws they shall pass.

The executive has no right to coerce the judiciary and the legislative has no right to defy or coerce the judiciary. That wonderful instrument provides orderly ways in which to settle these very questions, and that is the suggestion that the majority of this committee makes, that this one should be settled as all other judicial questions are settled, by pleading to the jurisdiction and let the court pass upon it.

Now, I appeal for a moment to that Constitution of the United States, in order to show the sovereignty of every court in this land:

> This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby.

Therefore the act of 1895 is a supreme law of the land, and I say that no man should be permitted to escape carrying out that law when he undertakes to perform its functions.

Next I call the attention of the House to another section of the Constitution:

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and the treaties made under their authority.

The courts have always had the power to construe the laws that Congress enacts. You gentlemen here to-night are undertaking to say that the House shall construe this law of 1895 and take that function wholly away from the courts. I say that we have no right to do it. And if we did have the right, we ought not to exercise it in this defiant manner. We ought to show our respect for the law which this Congress created long ago. Congressmen ought to obey the law which Congressmen make. If we do not obey the law, how can we expect the humblest citizen of this land to obey it?

The material sections of the law under which this rule to show cause is issued are the following:

> Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be a Joint Committee on Printing, consisting of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, who shall have the powers hereinafter stated.

Sections 2, 3, and 4 prescribe certain duties, but the section involved in this controversy is section 5, as follows:

> SEC. 5. The sealed proposals to furnish paper shall be opened in the presence of the Joint Committee on Printing, and the contracts shall be awarded by them to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government; but they shall not consider any proposal which is not accompanied by a bond, approved by the judge or clerk of a court of record, in the penalty of $5,000; that the bidder or bidders, if his or their proposals is accepted, shall enter into a contract to furnish the articles proposed for and by satisfactory evidence that the person making it is a manufacturer of or dealer in the description of paper which he proposes to furnish.

Now, I repeat the statement that the law of 1895 is a supreme enactment, and it says several times that these men on the joint committee "shall" do certain things, not that they may or ought to; they are not directed to do anything, but the very strongest language known to the law is used in the statute, and it is mandatory. It says that these members of this committee "shall" on a certain day let the contract to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the United States.

There is no escape from the word "shall." It says that they "shall" not consider any bid unless it is accompanied by a bond, and so forth. There are two positive duties enjoined upon the committee by law. One is that they shall do something, and the other is that they shall not do something else. I tell you, gentlemen, whenever the supreme law of this land requires any man to do a particular act, and the legal duty is clear, nobody on earth has the power to make him obey that law except the courts of this land. [Applause.]

These gentlemen have no duties or powers given them by this House on the joint committee, and hence, receiving their power and authority from the law, they are amenable to that law and not to the House. Therefore, in this notice to show cause, the privileges of the House as a body are not invaded. Suppose the law should have required the Speaker to appoint private citizens on this committee, does anyone suppose that the court could not require them to obey the law? Therefore the mere appointment by the Speaker does not raise the House privilege for the members of the committee. Suppose the law had provided that the President should appoint six Members of Congress on this committee, could it be said that just because the appointees were Congressmen that they could avoid, escape, or nullify the law and the courts would have no power to interfere and enforce the law's provisions? Shall the courts be permitted to exercise jurisdiction in construing this law as they do in cases where other laws of the United States are involved?

This Joint Committee on Printing reports to neither the House nor to the Senate nor to Congress and is responsible to neither. They act while Congress is not in session as well as when it is in session.

Then, who can, if not the courts, compel obedience to this law? It is either a law or it is not a law. No one denies it being a law and the law. Surely it was not passed with the idea that no one should be required to obey it! If so, it stands alone among all legislative enactments in all history. The plaintiff alleges that this law has been disobeyed by the joint committee, and whether this allegation be true or false, no one but the court can try the issue, and hence it has jurisdiction for this purpose.

It is the law that determines the question of jurisdiction and not the persons who are required to execute or obey it.

Suppose one of the successful bidders should fail or refuse to carry out his contract to furnish paper and heavy damage to the United States should result, where and by whom would suit be brought to recover the damages? Would it be brought in the name of the House or the Senate or both? Most certainly not, for neither could possibly be construed as a party to such suit, for neither would be entitled to recover the damages. Would the action when brought be tried by the House or by the Senate or both? Certainly not, for neither can try such actions, for their functions are purely legislative except in impeachment proceedings.

Then, of course, the suit would have to be brought in a United States court in the name of the United States, or the Joint Committee on Printing, or both, as plaintiff. The courts would certainly have jurisdiction under the law of the defendant and subject-matter in such case. Then, pray tell me why, when the parties are reversed, the court would not still have jurisdiction? It can not be maintained that courts may have jurisdiction of one half of the contract and of one of the parties to it and not of the other half and of the other party.

There is a question, however, of personal privilege involved in this proceeding, which these gentlemen may raise before the court by suggesting that Congress is now holding its sessions and that they can not be detained in courts at such times. The judge would promptly agree to continue the case until Congress adjourns, just as if they were sued on a note or arrest and bail proceedings. Their personal privilege could be pleaded; but it would always be their duty to appear in court and set up this plea as any other defense should be pleaded.

I close by saying again as strongly as I know how that if the House wants to preserve its dignity, the best way to do it is to show its respect for the law and obedience to the just mandate of the courts of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I arise to submit a very few remarks in conclusion of this debate. I am persuaded from some of the things that have been said on the floor by speech and by question that there has been a great confusion of mind as to the real and only issue that is before the House.

We are not dealing with questions of defense or with questions of procedure. We are confronted with the situation that these three members of the printing committee, whether they should have done so or not, came to the House and asked for instructions as to their action in the premises in connection with this suit, and the House, in its wisdom, submitted their request to the Judiciary Committee, instructing that committee to advise as to what action, if any, the House and particularly these three Members should take in the matter.

Now, we are confronted with three propositions as to the action that should be taken, one that these Members be granted the permission of the House to appear in the court and to plead to the jurisdiction and to make any other defense that, in their judgment, seems proper. There is nothing in that proposition that suggests direction or compulsion, it is a mere permission to these three Members of the House to appear.

The second proposition is that submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], that they be granted permission to appear and be instructed to appear only for the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction, and if that be determined against them, to appeal and take the case up.

The third proposition is that of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], that this House hurl defiance at the court for issuing the writ.

Now, the sole and only question that we are to deal with is, Shall the House hurl this defiance or shall it grant permission to these Members in an orderly way to plead to the jurisdiction and to plead the privileges of the House, if they see proper so to do.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia and to the House that as a member of the Printing Committee and as chairman of that committee, when this writ was served upon me and the other Members, mindful of our duties as Members of this body, we felt it our duty to go to the House and inform the House of what was transpiring. We did not feel that we would be justified in going into court and conducting litigation without advising the House and asking for its opinion and instructions as to what we ought to do. We did not come to the House asking for immunity or to invoke the privileges of the House against going into court, but for the purpose of submitting the question to the House and obtaining instructions of the House as to what, in its judgment, we should do. Let me say further that we have a perfectly good defense to the action here. We have no hesitancy whatever in going into court and trying the issue if it be thought proper to do so, and for that reason we merely came here for the purpose of informing the House and getting the advice and consent of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. BRANTLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, if I can have the attention of the House, that I can state the reasons that influenced and controlled the majority of this committee so clearly that no Member of the House will have any hesitancy in reaching a conclusion on one side or the other of the proposition.

I apprehend, in the first place, that we are all in accord on this proposition—that the acts of this joint committee here are either legislative or executive. I take it that no one will question the soundness of the proposition that these acts are one thing or the other—either they are legislative or they are executive. I think we can all agree still further that, if the acts of this committee are legislative, the court has no jurisdiction to control them, and I think we can all agree further that, if the acts are executive, the court can control them.

Mr. Speaker, are these acts legislative or executive? This afternoon I called the attention of the House to the rules of this body, which, notwithstanding what some gentlemen have stated, nowhere create a Joint Committee on Printing. The rules of the House, while providing for the appointment of a House committee of three on printing, recognize the existence of a Joint Committee on Printing. When we come to investigate how this Joint Committee on Printing exists, we find that it exists under law. Now, your committee did not want to determine in advance of a judicial hearing the status of the members of this committee, but we wanted to go sufficiently far to show that there was at least such question as to the acts of this committee being legislative or executive as authorized the courts to pass upon the question. It is true, and it can not be gainsaid, that this committee exists by a law.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to what I stated this afternoon——

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I presume I will have to yield to the chairman of my committee.

Mr. PARKER. Only a moment. I desire to ask the gentleman if the rules do not provide in the following words:

> Also the following joint standing committees, viz:
> On the Library, to consist of five members.
> On Printing, to consist of three members.

Mr. BRANTLEY. What rule is that?

Mr. PARKER. Rule X.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will answer my distinguished friend by an authority that this House, since I have been a Member of it, has recognized without dissent. I have before me the publication that this House authorized to be prepared for its guidance in parliamentary law. I have the compilation as prepared by the parliamentarian of this House, Mr. Hinds, and in answer to my friend from New Jersey, who construes the rules and the law for himself, I quote Mr. Hinds's construction of the proposition that is before the House. He says, in black type, on page 845 of volume 4 of Hinds's Precedents of the House of Representatives, this:

> The Joint Committee on Printing, while recognized by the rules, was created by the statutes.

He also says, in answer to the question as to whether the duties of this committee are legislative or executive, and this is in black type:

> The Joint Committee on Printing has executive duties conferred by statute.

When we come to read the history of this committee we find that it was first created by a law in 1846. Then there was a law in 1852 that provided for the election by each House of a Public Printer, and continued the Joint Committee on Public Printing. Mr. Hinds says:

The Joint Committee on Printing is therefore created by law instead of by any joint rule of the two Houses, although its existence is recognized in the rule of the House defining its jurisdiction.

When we come to the language pointing out the duties of this committee, we find it stated that they are given—

* * * general supervision of the printing; the procuring of paper of suitable standards and approval of contracts therefor, and for other supplies; control of the arrangement, style, bulk, and indexing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—appointment of a person to edit the documents and reports accompanying the annual message of the President; the prescribing of limitations and conditions for printing and illustrating for the Patent Office.

Mr. Speaker, with this authority, so long recognized by this House, that the duties of this joint committee are executive, why should we to-day solemnly resolve, in our efforts to humiliate a coordinate branch of the Government, that these duties are legislative, and that the courts can not interfere? Why so resolve, when our own precedents and our own publications to control our actions state that these duties are executive?

Some gentlemen have been confused in this way: They seem to think that because the law creating this committee says that the qualification for membership on it shall be membership in the House or in the Senate, that therefore the acts of these members as performed are the acts of the House and of the Senate, and are legislative. Such gentlemen claim a privilege and exemption for this committee by reason of a qualification that admits to membership on the committee. The situation is just the same as if the law had prescribed as the requisite qualification that no man should be a member of the committee unless he was 30 years old.

This fact of age would be of no value in determining the character of the acts and conduct of the man after he became a member of the committee. The law now under consideration says that in order to be a member of this committee a man must be a Member of Congress. That requirement goes only to the qualification to hold the office. We are not to measure subsequent acts and conduct in office by reason of this requisite of qualification to hold the office. The proposition that seems to disturb some gentlemen was settled by John Marshall more than one hundred years ago. In Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch) he said:

It is not by the office of the person to whom the writ is directed, but the nature of the thing to be done, that the propriety or impropriety of issuing a mandamus is to be determined.

The hole that we run into when we undertake here to declare defiance to the courts and to assert that these duties are legislative is this: Whether these duties are legislative or executive is a matter that can be determined in only one way, and that is by the law that prescribes the duties. There is no other standard. The meaning of this law must be determined by the judiciary, for the Constitution that we have sworn to support tells us that the judicial power of this Government shall extend to all cases in law or in equity that arise under the laws of the United States. Now, here is a law of the United States that fixes the qualifications and prescribes the duties of the members of this committee, and there is but one forum in this Government that can authoritatively declare whether those duties are legislative or executive, and that forum is the judiciary. [Applause.]

So we may hurl our thunderbolts, and while condemning the judiciary, become guilty ourselves of attempting to assume judicial power by trying to construe a statute; but when we are through, whether we defy the court or whether we do not defy it, the court will nevertheless go on, and will determine whether those duties are legislative or executive, and we as law-abiding citizens will be bound by that determination.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I would prefer not to do so.

Mr. Speaker, if we had the time I could cite many precedents that seem to have some bearing on this case. In the case of Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S., 220), where Members of Congress were sued for what they claimed were legislative acts, did they appeal to Congress to exempt them from the suit and to protect them? Not so. Their appeal was to the Supreme Court of the United States, which declared the privilege that they claimed. We have in our books the case, from Massachusetts, of Benjamin F. Butler, Forty-first Congress, who was sued for his acts that he claimed were performed by him as a Member of Congress. Did he appeal to the Congress to save him from the suit and declare him exempt from it? Not so. He was haled into court and then came to Congress, not to exempt him from the suit, but to furnish funds with which to defray the expenses of the litigation. Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable to me how any gentleman can believe that this House has any power to save any man from the mandate, under the Constitution, of the judicial power. Gentlemen have surmised and speculated as to what the court might do or could do or would do. I suggest that it is beneath the dignity of this House to assume that any judge is going to violate the Constitution and his oath of office. [Applause.] We can not afford to base our action upon any such assumption.

There seems to be a disposition among some to get the motive and incentive for their duty in this particular by reason of what some gentleman elsewhere have thought ought to be done. In my judgment, if we would maintain the dignity of this House, we should determine this question upon our responsibility and not upon the responsibility of anyone else. [Applause.] We have the power and the jurisdiction and the duty, and we should shirk none of these things. [Applause.]

I want to say one thing more, and I measure my words when I do. There is no protection to-day for life, liberty, or property in this country except through and by the duly constituted courts of the country. The one thing to-day that stands between us and anarchy is the judiciary. We talk about the legislative and the executive and the judicial departments of this Government, but we must realize that great as is our power, and that although we may pile statute upon statute until they tower mountain high, those statutes are meaningless, worthless, and useless unless the courts of this country enforce obedience to them. [Applause.] It seems to me that we can not afford to lose sight of the tremendous part that the judiciary plays in the development and the maintenance and the preservation of the liberty that we enjoy. We surely should not go out of our way to denounce a court or to put into the hands of the lawless, of the anarchists, and of those who habitually defy the law the powerful weapon of being able to assert that the Congress has denounced the courts of the country as usurpers of power and destroyers of liberty. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, when a case is instituted and every word and letter of the procedure shows that it is predicated upon a law passed by Congress, and the court does no more than to issue a rule to show cause, by reason of an alleged violation of such law, the due and orderly thing to do, it seems to me, is to respond to the writ of the court and before the court make the defense of privilege, or whatever defense it may be right and proper to make. [Applause.]

Some gentlemen seem to question the wisdom or propriety of this Congress granting permission to its Members to make answer. Your Committee on the Judiciary were mindful of their duty when they suggested the resolution that is now before you. We have precedents. There is one cited in the third volume of Hinds's Precedents, to the effect that Members having informed the House, as these Members did, as a matter of privilege, that they had been summoned before the grand jury of the District, and summoned by an order of court, the House, by resolution, without division, granted them permission to obey the summons of the court.

What more do we want as precedent than that? Without any precedent, however, what is the objection to this, the highest legislative body in the land, showing a proper respect to its great coordinate department, the judiciary, by permitting its Members to respond to a lawful summons?

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the majority resolution ought to be adopted, and I move the previous question on this resolution and all amendments thereto to its final passage. [Great applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] moves the previous question on the resolution and all amendments to final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey first in order, or the substitute?

The SPEAKER. This seems to be an amendment to perfect the original resolution before taking a vote on the substitute.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the resolution read as it will read when amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution as it would read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the supreme court of the District of Columbia, at the instance of the Valley Paper Company (Incorporated) as plaintiff, has caused to be served on ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY, Members of this House, a rule to show cause why writ of mandamus should not issue against them as members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress by reason of their alleged action as members of such committee in rejecting certain proposals of the said Valley Paper Company (Incorporated) to furnish certain paper for public printing and binding: Now therefore

Resolved by the House of Representatives, that the said ALLEN F. COOPER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, and DAVID E. FINLEY be, and they are hereby, granted permission to enter an appearance in response to said rule for the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction of the court, and if necessary to prosecute an appeal or writ of error from any judgment therein, and for such purpose they are hereby authorized and permitted to absent themselves from the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the substitute, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert:

"That Justice Wright, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in granting and issuing the following rule to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not be issued, to wit:

"In the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The Valley Paper Company (Incorporated), plaintiff, v. The Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, composed of REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, respondents. At law, No. —.

"'RULE TO SHOW CAUSE.

"'Upon consideration of the petition of the Valley Paper Company filed herein this 2d day of February, 1910, it is by the court this 2d day of February, 1910, ordered that the respondents, the said REED SMOOT, JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, show cause, if any they may have, on or before the 11th day of February, 1910, at 10 o'clock a. m., why a writ of mandamus should not be issued as prayed in said petition; provided a copy of said petition and this rule be served upon said respondents, members of the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, on or before the 7th day of February, 1910.

"'WRIGHT, Justice.

"'A true copy.

"'Test:

"'L. B. YOUNG, Clerk.

"'By H. BINGHAM, Assistant Clerk.'

"against three Members of this body named in said rule, to wit, Representatives GEORGE C. STURGISS, ALLEN F. COOPER, and DAVID E. FINLEY, and in causing the said rule to be served upon them, in the opinion of the House of Representatives, thereby unlawfully invaded the constitutional privileges and prerogatives of the House of Representatives and of said Representatives, and was without jurisdiction to grant said rule; and said Representatives are directed to make no appearance in response thereto."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, upon that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Upon this demand the ayes are 35, noes 157. The yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] will take their places as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 141.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 56, nays 173, answered "present" 13, not voting 145, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 11, 1910.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18282) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the year 1910, and for other purposes, further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 4, 9, 36, 38, 46, and 47, agrees to the amendment of the Senate No. 39 with an amendment in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. MALBY, and Mr. BOWERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the following bills:

S. 5522. An act to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River near Paroquet, Ark.;

S. 5523. An act to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the St. Francis River near Parkin, Ark.; and

S. 5524. An act to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the White River at Augusta, Ark.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the action of the House on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18282) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the year 1910, and for other purposes, insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 4, 9, 36, 38, 46, and 47, and agreeing to amendment No. 39 with an amendment, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments still in disagreement and agree to the further conference asked by the House, the conferees to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. DEPEW. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what was done with reference to the compensation of the judges of the customs court?

Mr. HALE. This is only formal action, and when it is taken I shall present the report of the conference covering that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. CLAY the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

Mr. HALE. As the conference committee has spent the morning on this subject, I present its report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18282) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the year 1910, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4 and 38, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following: "Furnishing new post-office, custom-house, and court-house, Cleveland, Ohio: For furniture equipment for the new post-office, custom-house, and court-house building at Cleveland, Ohio, one hundred and sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "United States court of customs appeals: The salaries of the judges, officers, and employees of the United States court of customs appeals, authorized by the act approved August fifth, nineteen hundred and nine, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' shall hereafter be at the rates per annum as follows: For the presiding judge and four associate judges, seven thousand dollars each; marshal, three thousand dollars; clerk, three thousand five hundred dollars; assistant clerk, two thousand dollars; five stenographic clerks, one thousand six hundred dollars each; stenographic reporter, two thousand five hundred dollars; messenger, eight hundred and forty dollars; and for the payment of the said compensation for the balance of the fiscal year nineteen hundred and ten, at the rates herein fixed, there is appropriated the sum of twenty-seven thousand four hundred and forty dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "The allotment for printing and binding for Congress is hereby made available for the printing, under provisions of existing law and the rules of the Senate and House of Representatives relating to public printing, as public documents of such of the publications of the National Monetary Commission as the commission may designate. And the superintendent of documents is hereby authorized to order reprinted, from time to time, such public documents of the National Monetary Commission as may be required for sale;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,
J. H. GALLINGER,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES A. TAWNEY,
GEO. R. MALBY,
E. J. BOWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. DEPEW. In reference to the clause in the conference report relating to the salaries of the judges of the customs court, the customs court was created and the compensation of its officers was fixed in what is known as the tariff act. Under this conference report it is proposed in this appropriation bill to amend the tariff act. I think that it comes clearly within the prohibition of general legislation on an appropriation bill. I do not think it is in the province of the Senate, under the rule, to amend a general law by general legislation in an appropriation bill, and I raise the point of order.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate, unlike the House, no point of order can be made on a conference report; it must be accepted or recommitted or rejected.

I will say to the Senator from New York that the conference committee considered this subject, and found that the whole question of salaries for the present and the future is involved in the conference; and neither the House nor the Senate conferees had any doubt as to the power to insert the provision, it having already been before both Houses.

But, Mr. President, in addition to that, I want to say to the Senator from New York, who has had some of the same experience, as both he and I tried to carry out the provision of the tariff law providing for the judges of the customs court at a considerably higher rate than the circuit judges throughout the United States, that neither he nor I was able to convince the Senate of the propriety of such legislation. I did the best I could, as he did, and the Senate by a very large vote declined to make any appropriation in conformity to the provisions of the tariff law, and the whole subject went over.

I recognize, as I think the Senator from New York, my colleague, and other Senators do, that there was something not quite proper, certainly not acceptable to the Senate, in fixing the salaries of the judges of this new court higher than those of the circuit judges. There were a good many Senators who did not believe in the court at all, but after fighting it out for a whole day I was beaten and the Senator from New York was beaten, and the Senate, by more than 2 to 1, declined to make any appropriation; and the whole subject went over.

I will say to the Senator, further (and I think that will be the relief), it is understood—the House conferees understand it and the House understands it—that as this applies only to the appropriaton until July, when the salaries of judges are considered, the effort will be made to put these salaries on the same footing, but at an advanced rate. Whether as much as $10,000 can be established for all, and if for one it ought to be for all, I do not know. Perhaps the salary can be established at $8,000 or $9,000, and that I hope, when the time comes, will satisfy the Senator. The conferees have done the best that they could. They agreed to everything in the bill with the exception of the immigration provision, where the Senate has insisted and the House has insisted, and that matter goes back to the House for action.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I recognize the conscientious and able work which has been done by the conference committee, and I also recognize the obligation the Senate and the country are under to the Senator from Maine for the skill, experience, ability, and devotion which he brings to these questions.

I have been endeavoring for some years, with very little success, except in a modest way a year ago, and then with the assistance of the Senator from Maine, to secure better compensation for the district and circuit judges of the United States. The situation as it exists in my own State, of course, impressed me more than the same situation would in other States. The judges of the supreme court of the State in the city of New York receive $17,500 a year, when the district judges receive $6,000 and the circuit judges, I think, $7,000.

When this court was created by the tariff act the salary of the judges was fixed at $10,000. The bill became a law after debate in both Houses with that salary fixed.

The objection which we who want an increase of salaries for the federal judges always found was that while the salaries of the federal judges was grossly inadequate and wholly insufficient in some parts of the country, in other parts of the country, owing to social conditions, it was amply sufficient and all that the judge or the bar or the representatives of those particular sections thought was necessary.

But the conditions with the customs court are entirely different. These judges are compelled to leave their homes and to settle in Washington. In order to secure for that court, which has such tremendous responsibilities and such difficult questions before it, the very highest talent, the President desires to secure members of the bar or to take from the bench members of the judiciary who could not afford to leave their present positions and break up their homes and establish themselves and their families permanently in Washington at the reduced salary. Therefore it was that at his suggestion, I think, the salary was fixed at $10,000, and it passed into the law at that rate. This agreement in the conference report repeals that law and fixes the salary at $7,000, with the possibility that the President will not be able to organize the court upon the standard and with the ability which he regards as necessary, and which everybody knows is required in this initial experiment of having these mighty questions submitted to a permanent tribunal.

Therefore, Mr. President, much as I dislike to differ in any way with the Senator from Maine, I hope that that part of the conference report will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendment numbered 39 to the bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and that it disagree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of Central Labor Union, American Federation of Labor, of Rockford, Ill., remonstrating against the repeal of the corporation-tax law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Local Union, Cigarmakers' International Union, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called "eight-hour bill," which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Albion, Connersville, and Hamburg, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURNHAM presented a memorial of the Graffort Club, of Portsmouth, N. H., remonstrating against the water supply in the Hetch Hetchy Valley being used by the city of San Francisco, Cal., which was referred to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Concord, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States or with the United States for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CURTIS. I present resolutions adopted by Preston B. Plumb Post, No. 55, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a regular meeting of Preston B. Plumb Post, No. 55, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, held January 28, 1910, the following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas an attempt is being made to secure a permanent place in the Temple of Fame in our National Capitol for a statue of Robert E. Lee, and without act of Congress authorizing the same, we are informed that said statue has already been placed there by the State of Virginia; and

Whereas while admitting his scholarly attainments and gentlemanly qualities we fail to recognize any valuable service as a statesman, scholar, or philanthropist, rendered to his country as a civilian, that would entitle him to this great honor; and

Whereas it is not because of his such services that he is sought to be thus honored, but because of his position as commander in chief of the armies bent upon the dissolution of the Union, the overthrow of the General Government, and the capture and destruction of the capital of his country by the armies he led and the forces under his command; and

Whereas in thus seeking to destroy this Government he sought to establish another, the base and cornerstone of which would have been the recognition of the institution of human slavery and the unrestricted right to traffic in human flesh and blood; and

Whereas the fitness and ability of the said Robert E. Lee to become a military leader, and commander of the armies in insurrection was procured and obtained, at the expense and through means provided by the Government he sought to destroy, and to which, as an officer wearing its uniform, he had solemnly sworn he would remain loyal and faithful in his allegiance thereto; and

Whereas it is because of the position he occupied as leader of the rebel army, and by this alone, that his name will be known and remembered, that his friends whose hearts and sympathies were with him in his efforts to destroy the Union would place his statue in the Hall of Fame, grasping his sword and clad in the uniform of the so-called "confederate army," and it is against this effort to compel the Government he sought to destroy to thus honor, approve, and tacitly indorse his act that we most strenuously object; and

Whereas we further object and protest, because he would thus be exalted above those distinguished Virginians whose service to the Nation contributed to its independence and subsequent existence; whose fame is world-wide, and whose names are treasured and revered in every State, section, and locality of these United States; and

Whereas such an act would place a premium upon disloyalty, destroy the reverence with which our children have been led to regard the country's flag, and tend to nullify the patriotism existing in the hearts of those upon whom our country's future necessarily depends, by according equal honor to Robert E. Lee with that conferred upon Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and surpassing even that awarded to others of our brave defenders, renowned and loyal statesman: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Preston B. Plumb Post, No. 55, Grand Army of the Republic, of Emporia, Kans., by virtue and in remembrance of the cost and fearful sacrifice entailed by the late war and inflicted by the armies commanded by Robert E. Lee, in his efforts to destroy the Government founded by Washington, assisted by countless Virginians whose loyalty and patriotism are a common heritage to all Americans, do hereby enter our protest against a preference so marked, a principle so vicious, an act so unpatriotic and disloyal: Therefore be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be entered upon our records, another forwarded to the department commander, Department of Kansas, advising him of our action, and a copy also to our Representative in Congress and to each of our honorable Senators, and ask that they take such action as will, in their judgment, carry out and accomplish the desires herein set forth, to wit:

That the statue of Robert E. Lee, as commander in chief of the armies directed against and aiming to overthrow this Government, be not set up or permitted to remain in the Hall of Fame in form, manner, and dress, as herein set forth.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. GILCHRIST, Commander.
T. B. POWERS, Adjutant.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Concord, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Groveton, N. H., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the South Washington Citizens' Association, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the removal and elimination of grade crossings of railway tracks to the navy-yard in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of the Juvenile Commission, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called "children's bureau bill," which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the American Association of State Geologists, praying for the enactemnt of legislation to establish a bureau of mines in the Interior Department, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legisaltion to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Rock Springs, Wyo., and a memorial of the Trades and Labor Council, American Federation of Labor, of Sweetwater, Wyo., remonstrating against any increase of the rate of postage on second-class mail matter, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Coal Exchange of Boston, Mass., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Point Judith Harbor of Refuge in that State, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on the Census, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18364) to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved July 2, 1909, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 217) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER:

A bill (S. 6287) to codify, revise, and amend the postal laws of the United States; to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment providing for the survey of the Sammammish River, Washington, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $155,000 for continuing improvement and maintenance of Puget Sound and its tributary waters, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,873,154 for improving the harbor of Neah Bay, Washington, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $90,000 for continuing improvement of Columbia River and tributaries, etc., and $15,000 for continuing improvement and maintenance of Snake River between Riparia, Wash., and Pittsburg Landing, Oreg., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

ARCHITECT OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

On motion of Mr. CARTER, it was Ordered, That 1,000 copies of Senate Document No. 461, Sixtieth Congress, first session, "A memorial in behalf of the architect of our Federal Constitution," be printed for the use of the Senate.

JOHN T. EATON.

Mr. CARTER. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 179) was read, as follows:

Senate resolution 179.

Resolved, That the claim of John T. Eaton (S. 5778) now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Tucker Act;" and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TILLMAN. The custom has been to have all those things gathered up in a bunch and sent through by one resolution. If we are going to begin the picking out of special claims, I have one or two that I should like to have sent down. I just want to know what the Senate is going to do about it. I have no objection to the resolution, but I just want to know what our policy will be. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Claims will indicate it.

Mr. CARTER. The resolution here presented is similar to one passed on the 13th of January, and also to one passed on the 31st day of January. A bill has heretofore passed referring this claim to the Court of Claims. The purpose of this resolution is to correct a previous reference of the same claim now pending in the Court of Claims.

Under a decision of the Court of Claims rendered since the former reference, the former bill which was referred to the court is not in such form as to clearly give the court jurisdiction to consider the claim and make a finding under the Tucker Act of March 3, 1887. The present bill corrects that error, and this resolution, if agreed to, will enable the claimant to try his case at an early date. The papers on file in the Senate are to be transferred to the court in which the case is pending.

Mr. KEAN. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. Is the resolution reported from the Committee on Claims?

Mr. BURNHAM. I wish to say that it does not come from the Committee on Claims, but I understand that the same matter is pending in the Court of Claims.

Mr. KEAN. It is proposed to refer papers we have here, I understand, to the Court of Claims, as the case is still there. These are some additional papers, I understand.

Mr. BURNHAM. I so understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to have an explanation from the chairman of the Committee on Claims as to what will be the policy of that committee in similar cases. If we are going to begin and take up this claim and that claim and the other claim and send them down, I just want to know it. If we are going to have an omnibus resolution, then I am willing to conform to that, but I want to know which course will be followed.

Mr. BURNHAM. Replying to the Senator from South Carolina, I desire to say that the matter now before the Senate is already pending before the Court of Claims. As to the policy of the committee, so far as I am able to state it for the committee, the only matters that will be sent to the Court of Claims will be embodied in an omnibus resolution, which course, by a rule of the committee, has already been agreed upon.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I understand the Senator, this case is already before the Court of Claims, and it is merely sending some additional papers there.

Mr. BURNHAM. It is sending papers there.

Mr. TILLMAN. I just wanted to get at the inwardness of it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15816) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, before I make any objection, and I do not think I will, I want to understand why, in the clause forbidding the importation of certain people afflicted with mental and physical diseases, another class or several classes are exempted from that provision. If tuberculosis is dangerous in a workingman, a farmer, or any other person who comes here, it is equally dangerous in ministers of the gospel, professors in colleges, domestic servants, and those people who are enumerated as exempt from this forbidding clause. I should like to have the Senator from Vermont in charge of the bill explain why this was done, and if the same objections do not obtain to one man with tuberculosis as well as another.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator from Mississippi that this bill, which has been sent to us from the House, contains the second section of the "immigration act," so called, just as it exists in the statute to-day, with one simple clause inserted. The clause inserted is "persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution," and that is the only proposed change in the existing law. The question the Senator propounds as to the reason why different classes are created is one that was fully discussed at the time the law was enacted by Congress. The changes that were then made have stood since that time, and are not proposed to be interfered with by the passage of this bill.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, it should be interfered with. If there is on the statute book to-day the provision just read in the bill it ought to be repealed. I can not see the common sense of excluding a lot of people on account of the existence of tuberculosis, not to mention the other things, and allowing another class, and many classes, to come in affected in the same way. The whole provision is a police business. It is intended to prevent contagious and other diseases from afflicting our people, and there is no common sense in allowing it to come in at one place and forbidding it at another, allowing it to come in the person of one man because he preaches or teaches or is a domestic servant or some other thing enumerated there, and forbidding another man to come in who occupies a different position or follows another calling. Certainly if it is to be a remedial measure it should extend to everyone who comes in without any exception whatever. I do not understand how it ever got into the law, but as attention is now directed by this new bill to it, it certainly ought to go out. If anybody can give me any reason why it should be there, I will withdraw my objection. But I should be glad—not being familiar with this bill at all, never having seen it before—if the honorable chairman would give us some reason why the provision ought to remain there. We are now considering the whole measure, and we had just as well correct that much of it as any other part of it. We are now making it better by adding to it and we can also very much improve it by taking something out of it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is not an attempt to amend or to improve the general immigration act except on one single subject.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. This bill deals exclusively with the white-slave traffic; that is the only intention; and it was thought wisest, both in the other House and here, not now to open up any other question, but to dispose of that first. The other question which the Senator from Mississippi raises opens up another series of questions which ought to be dealt with, if at all, in a separate bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And concerning which, Mr. President, a full report will be made to Congress later of the investigations which have been made touching the admission of that class of persons.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not want to stand for a moment in the way of the proposed legislation. I think it is so very important concerning the moral life and health of this country that I shall be glad to see it passed without any obstruction in the way; but, nevertheless, the attention of the committee is now called to this point—that under the law as it exists to-day, as I understand the fact, there is a provision which permits quite a number of classes of people afflicted with those contagious diseases, from which we are trying by legislation to protect the people of the United States, to enter this country. It is evident that the State of New York, or the State of Massachusetts, or any other State where the immigrants come in great numbers, can prevent all this by their police regulations. We can only prevent it by the commerce-regulation clause; but certainly the State of New York, into which two-thirds of these immigrants come, can provide against the admittance—notwithstanding the power of the United States to regulate commerce—of any persons afflicted with contagious or moral disease. They have a right to do that; it has been affirmed by the court several times, and it is not necessary to discuss it; but as we are legislating as to a matter under the regulation of commerce, I think it is proper that the attention of the committee should be called to this phase of it, and if no steps are taken to-day to correct it, I shall introduce a resolution asking that the committee be instructed to consider this point in the law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15816) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, page 4, after line 22, to strike out:

Jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of such a felony shall be in either the district to or into which the alien was first brought or in any district in which a violation of any of the provisions of this section occurred.

And to insert:

Jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of the felonies hereinbefore set forth shall be in any district to or into which said alien is brought in pursuance of said importation by the person or persons accused, or in any district in which a violation of any of the foregoing provisions of this section occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 5, line 18, after the word "act," to strike out:

Any person who procures, or causes to be procured, or pays for, directly or indirectly, any ticket or other evidence or right of transportation whereby any person is enabled or assisted to go from one State, Territory, or district into another State, Territory, or district for the purpose of therein engaging in the practice of prostitution, or for any other lewd or lascivious purpose, shall in every such case be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned not more than ten years and pay a fine of not more than $5,000. Jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of such a felony shall be in either the district in which such person resided or to which such person was assisted to go or in which the person procuring such ticket or other evidence or right of transportation resides, or where such ticket or other evidence or right of transportation was procured.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION OVER CORPORATIONS.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5899) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall not object to unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill, but will make the suggestion that after this bill has been disposed of I shall ask for the regular order. Our calendar is getting pretty large and we ought to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes by adding thereto the following:

But when the alleged offender is a corporation, association, joint-stock company, or other artificial person residing and having its principal place of business without the district wherein the offense is cognizable, and wherein an indictment has been found, or information filed, a judge of the court of the United States in which such indictment has been found, or in which such information has been filed, shall, on motion, direct a summons, signed by the clerk of said court, with seal attached, to be served upon the offender, which summons shall set out a copy of the indictment or information and the order of the court, and shall specify the time, place, and nature of the hearing, and before what court or judge the hearing shall take place. Such notice shall be directed to the marshal of any district of the United States in which service may be made, and shall be served upon such offender agreeably to the methods prescribed by law for the service of civil process upon artificial persons in the district in which such service is made, and not less than twenty days before the time of such hearing. The return of service shall be made by the United States marshal directed by the judge issuing the same as aforesaid, and upon and after the date mentioned in such notice, when the same has been served as above prescribed, the alleged offender shall be assumed to be arrested and present in court at the place designated in said summons, and may be proceeded against, and all orders and judgments against it may be enforced with the same force and effect as if such offender had appeared personally or by attorney.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] whether or not this is in conformity with the provision known as "due process of law." I think a little explanation from the Senator from Iowa would be proper. I have read the bill hastily, and I am impressed with the idea that it provides that the court may have jurisdiction upon constructive service to the same purpose and effect as upon actual service against an individual not residing within the jurisdiction of the court. The hasty reading—I followed the clerk—impels me to ask that question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall be glad to make a brief statement of the bill.

As every Senator knows, a crime against the laws of the United States is indictable in the district in which the crime is committed. There is already ample provision in the law for the removal of the offender—the defendant in the criminal action—to the district in which the indictment is pending for trial, no matter where the natural person may be found; but unfortunately there is no provision in our law for the removal of a corporation into the district in which it may be indicted if its office or principal place of business or organization is in another district or State. This is to supply an omission, which, I think, is obvious to anyone who examines the law, with the decisions upon the law.

The particular reason which moves me to ask for the present consideration of the bill is this: As is well known, crimes against the postal laws of the United States are committed either in the district in which the letter or other mailable matter is deposited or in the district in which it is delivered from the post-office. There are certain corporations doing business in the city of Chicago—I take that as an illustration, and I assume it is true elsewhere—which mail offensive matter, non-mailable matter, in the office at Chicago, directed to persons in Iowa, I will assume. These corporations have been indicted in the State of Iowa—and what I say of Iowa will be true of any other State—but although properly indictable and punishable in the Commonwealth of Iowa, there is no way in the law by which the court can acquire that jurisdiction of the corporation which will enable the court to proceed with the trial. The case is even worse than I have put it. There are certain corporations in Chicago which, desiring to mail matter which is prohibited by law and which it is a crime to use the mails for transmission, take their mail matter, we will say, to Hammond, Ind., and deposit it in the office in Hammond, Ind. That process gives them adsolute immunity against prosecution, for the offense is punishable only in Indiana or in the State to which the mail matter is addressed. The corporation has its principal office and it is organized in the State of Illinois, and there is no way in which that offense, which is of very frequent occurrence, can be punished. We have indictments in my State now pending in which the district attorney has failed, although using every effort that he could use under the law, to secure that jurisdiction simply because there is no way in our statute provided for the removal for trial of a corporation from one district to another.

This bill is applicable only to the case I have put; only to corporations; it is not applicable at all to individuals, because the statute is already ample in that respect. It is easy for a federal court in any State to send for a man who has committed a crime in the State in which the indictment is found and place him upon his trial. But in these days we have made it possible for corporations as well as natural persons to commit criminal offenses; and we ought, as it seems to me, to provide some way in which the offense already provided for, with an indictment already provided for, can be punished in a jurisdiction which the statute declares is the proper jurisdiction for punishment. In the case I have put, with mail deposited in Indiana destined to Iowa, and the corporation in the city of Chicago, in Illinois, it would be impossible to punish the offense anywhere. An indictment would not lie in the courts of Illinois.

The draft of this bill was prepared by a rather eminent district judge of the United States, or at least it received his approval; it was approved at the last session by the Attorney-General of the United States, but the Committee on the Judiciary were not able to reach it. It was again introduced at this session, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and unanimously reported for passage. I believe there can be no valid objection to it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of the bill. Unquestionably I think we should provide for securing the attendance of corporations when indictments are found against them in districts other than those in which they have their home. There is, however, it seems to me, an omission in this bill that we ought to think about. To put corporations charged with an offense upon the same basis as private persons there would be necessary a requirement that the process, or the demand to call them from the district in which they live under their act of incorporation or their charter to another district, should be submitted to a judge or a court in the district in which the corporation resides. I think that there ought to be some provision of that kind in this bill; otherwise abuses might well result and oppression be practiced upon corporations, because there would be no opportunity for them to do what a private person can now do—that is, to be heard and say if there is any reason why he should not be taken to the other jurisdiction.

I observe that the terms of the bill appear to be mandatory upon the court in the place where the indictment is found. The provision is:

> But when the alleged offender is a corporation, association, joint-stock company, or other artificial person residing and having its principal place of business without the district wherein the offense is cognizable, and wherein an indictment has been found, or information filed, a judge of the court of the United States in which such indictment has been found, or in which such information has been filed, shall, on motion, direct a summons, signed by the clerk of said court, with seal attached, to be served upon the offender.

And thereupon, upon that service of a summons, the issue of which is commanded, the corporation or joint-stock association in a distant part of the country is deemed to be in court in the place where the indictment was found or the information filed. The result would be that anyone of the numerous district attorneys of the United States by obtaining an indictment, or, in that large part of the country where indictment is not necessary, by filing an information, could bring from the farthest part of the country into his own district a corporation and subject it to the expense and inconvenience and annoyance of a prosecution at a great distance from its home without it having had an opportunity to say anything to the contrary.

We have never undertaken to do that regarding private persons. Our law requires, and always has required, that the papers upon which the private person is to be taken to another jurisdiction should be submitted to a judge—if I remember correctly, the judge of the district in which that person resides—and his order is required. Upon an application for that order, the person who is to be taken to the other and distant jurisdiction has an opportunity to give reasons, if any there be, why he should not be taken to that other jurisdiction. It seems to me that a similar provision ought to be included in this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is an essential difference between the process for the removal of a natural person and a corporation. It is true that section 1014 of the Revised Statutes provides:

> And where any offender or witness is committed in any district other than that where the offense is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of the district where such offender or witness is imprisoned seasonably to issue, and of the marshal to execute, a warrant for his removal to the district where the trial is to be had.

In such a case, however, the process is one of arrest. It is somewhat similar to the process of extradition; that is to say, the accused is not to be taken bodily and personally from the State in which he is residing to another State or to another district without the order of a judge of the district court in the State in which he is imprisoned. But this process is a mere notice; it does not arrest anyone. The body of a corporation, of course, can not be removed, nor is the body of any officer or employee of the corporation to be removed. It is attempted to give jurisdiction to the court in which the indictment is pending by the service of a notice. As it seems to me, very full protection is given to the corporation by first requiring that the judge of the district court in which the indictment is pending or in which the information has been filed shall consider the matter and order the issuance of the summons. It can not be issued and served, as I understand, at the mere instance of the district attorney. It is subject to judicial inspection and approval before it is issued, and when it is served, in the manner which we all understand, upon the officer of the corporation and properly returned the court has jurisdiction to proceed with the trial.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator desire to ask me a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; perhaps it will save time by suggesting questions as the Senator proceeds. The first thing that attracted my attention here was the substitution of the word "summons" for the usual term in criminal proceedings. It not only speaks of the process as a summons, but it says:

> Such notice shall be directed to the marshal of any district of the United States in which service may be made, and shall be served upon such offender agreeably to the methods prescribed by law for the service of civil process.

Of course that is most unusual language in a criminal statute. I will just pause there so far as that is concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is very necessary because a criminal process takes the person into custody. A corporation can not be taken into custody, nor is it desired to take any officer of the corporation into custody, because the officer of the corporation is not the criminal; he is not the offender, and, therefore, necessarily there must be substitued a summons having great similarity to a summons in a civil proceeding.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, can the Senator recall any other instance in criminal procedure where what we may term the judgment of a grand jury is executed by a summons?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is practically so when a corporation is brought into court if it resides in the district in which the indictment is found. In such a case there is no criminal process executed against any individual.

Mr. HEYBURN. Ordinarily the process must be on the criminal side of the court, and it must be in the nature of a warrant. It is a warrant for the apprehension of an individual or a warrant commanding a corporation to come into court.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it matters not to me what the process is called. It is not a process for the forcible removal of a person, as is the ordinary criminal process.

Mr. HEYBURN. I appreciate that distinction.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I should think it would be somewhat unusual and somewhat illogical to call the process a warrant. I understand that we are providing for a case that has not hitherto been provided for. It is not usual in our criminal law that corporations are made subject to criminal prosecution.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like it to be clearly understood that I am not only not opposing this legislation, but that I am heartily in sympathy with it, and have been dealing with it in another committee of this body for a long time. This legislation will be as applicable to offenses against the law by industrial corporations as it will by those who send an objectionable class of matter through the mails.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have been considering it in a committee of Congress for a long time and have been trying to meet these objections, and whatever is done now with regard to this bill will necessarily be considered by our committee in the revision of the laws and the adaptation of the law to the general system.

While there can be no graver offense than that of sending the class of objectionable matter through the mails of the United States, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa, yet this law will be just as applicable to a vast number of instances where that particular kind of an offense is not involved at all; and that has made our committee very careful in the formation of this legislation as it is before us, and it would be a grave mistake to legislate with only that one class of violations of the law in our mind when it might be so far-reaching as to reach all of the corporate business of the United States.

Mr. ROOT. May I suggest it is equally applicable to almost all the newspapers published in the United States? A very large proportion of them are published by corporations. The papers are sold all over the country, and the effect of this law would be that the publishing corporation of a newspaper published in the city of Washington or Baltimore or Philadelphia and sold in every district of the United States could be indicted for libel in every district of the United States; and this law, if a district attorney files an information or secures an indictment, makes it apparently mandatory upon the court to issue a summons which shall bring that newspaper corporation into the distant district and subject it to the jurisdiction of the court there without its having had any opportunity at all to give any reason why that should not be done.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from New York a question before he sits down?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is libel a crime against the laws of the United States?

Mr. ROOT. It may be.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not remember any statute of the United States making the publication of a libel a crime. There may be such a statute, but I do not recall it. I never knew, at least, of an indictment for libel under the laws of the United States; and if there is no such crime this statute, of course, could not relate to it and would not authorize one State or one district to send for the publisher of a newspaper in another district. But if our law makes a certain act a crime in a certain district, then there ought to be some way in which to secure the presence of the men or the corporation that committed the crime in the jurisdiction in which it was committed. It is a farce—it is worse than a farce—to declare an act a crime and then deny to the courts the opportunity to secure jurisdiction over the person or corporation that committed the crime.

Mr. ROOT. I spent several weeks some years ago in showing reasons to a district court of the United States why an honored and beloved editor of a newspaper in the city of New York should not be brought to the city of Washington and tried for the crime of libel; and if such a law as that now proposed had been applicable to his case, he would have been brought here without any opportunity to give the reasons why he should not be brought—reasons which prevailed in the court before which the subject had to come under the existing law.

The same situation is true of many other parts of the country in which the federal authority is a general authority. It is true of the District of Columbia. It is true of the Territories. It is true of every reservation and fort. It is true of every place where the Government of the United States has general jurisdiction. It may be made true in every part of the United States.

There can be no question of the competence of Congress to declare under proper circumstances a libel an offense against the United States. It seems to me we ought to put into this bill such a provision to prevent the abuse of the process, the issue of which we authorize, as proved to be necessary and effective in regard to the transfer of individuals from one district to another.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. The very act suggested by the Senator, a violation of the postal laws of the United States, is within the jurisdiction of the United States courts; and I could name a great many others. For instance, a violation of the provisions of the interstate-commerce act; of the pure-food laws; and a great many others of which the United States courts have jurisdiction and under which just such conditions as are suggested by this bill might arise and would of necessity arise where there was a violation of the law.

It was in connection with the consideration of that larger class of questions that we have spent the time and had difficulty in framing such a law as would be satisfactory.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume whether there be one case or a hundred in which a corporation has offended criminally against the laws of the United States, the corporation should be made subject to the jurisdiction of some court. There seems to be great fear manifested lest the corporation shall be brought to trial in the district in which the offense was committed. I do not feel any such apprehension. There are other instances in which a corporation can commit a criminal offense against the laws of the United States than the misuse of the mails, but there are not many—there are very few—in which the corporation is criminally liable. But whether there be few or many, when the offense is committed, when the law declares that an indictment may be found in one State and the corporation that commits the offense is domiciled in another State, there should be some way of removing that defendant to the proper court for trial.

The Senator from New York admits that proposition, and the only thing he suggests is that before the court in which the indictment is found can acquire jurisdiction some court in the jurisdiction of the domicile ought to be permitted to pass upon—what? I do not know; upon, possibly, the validity of the indictment; possibly upon the regularity of the procedure. And yet it seems to me it is not imposing an undue hardship upon a corporation, when regularly served, to require it to submit its case, whatever it may be, to the court in which the indictment is pending.

There is little danger that any innocent corporation will be adjudged guilty; there is little danger that any such court will insist upon a jurisdiction which under the law it ought not to have; and therefore I have brought forward this bill, which seems to meet an omission of the law and to fill it with proper legislation. If the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, when it shall have reached this title in its work, sees fit to revise this section as amended, I have no doubt it will be well done. But that is no reason why during the period before the Committee on the Revision of the Laws shall have finished its work and before Congress shall have adopted its work we should be unable to pursue these people or these corporations who have now for many years continuously violated the law with absolute impunity.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if it were not for the very far-reaching importance of this measure, I would not feel justified in longer detaining the Senate. But when we come to look back upon the record accompanying the enactment of this law, it is very important that that record should disclose the fact that we gave it such thorough consideration as that we could not be charged with having intended to do something we do not do.

This is really an extradition provision. It provides in effect for extraditing an artificial person from one jurisdiction to another; and to enact a law which will be held by the courts not valid or operative would be a waste of time. My purpose is to see if we can not perfect this law so as to remove objections that might be encountered in a court hereafter. This is the best place to remove them, and it is our duty to remove them if they are possible of occurrence.

I want to call attention, merely to submit it to the judgment of Senators, to this provision, and to inquire whether or not in their judgment it will be sustained by the court.

On page 2 of the bill it is provided that the notice which has been referred to by the Senator from New York shall be directed to the marshal of any district in the United States in which service may be made. That is, this court of the United States is going to direct its process to the executive officer of another court of the United States. Then it goes on to say, referring to the writ:

> And shall be served upon such offender agreeably to the methods prescribed by law for the service of civil process upon artificial persons in the district in which service is made.

The courts will have some difficulty with the question of power involved in that provision, because the judge of the United States court in whose district the defendant resides is normally the custodian of the law in that district, and when another court reaches into that district for the purpose of enforcing the law, under every circumstance that I can remember or conceive of to-day, that judge has supervisory power. This is going to be an exception to that rule, and it behooves us to consider well whether or not we can incorporate an exception of that kind into a rule so general and so well established.

Ordinarily when papers come from one jurisdiction to another for the purpose of taking a person, whether it be artificial or real, into the jurisdiction in which the indictment is found, there is first the submission of those papers to somebody within the district where the person is found. In the case of the extradition of an individual, they must be submitted to the governor of the State and passed upon as to their sufficiency, measured in the light of the duty of that officer. Here you are going to extradite that which in law has the same status as a natural person—the corporation—and you are going to compel it to come out of its home on an order not issued out of the court of the district under whose jurisdiction it lives, but issued out of another jurisdiction, and no provision is made for the jurisdiction in which the defendant lives ever even knowing of it. Normally that jurisdiction attaches to everything pertaining to the property or the person residing within it. This is a very wide departure from the general rule.

Then let us see about the return of the writ. There is another provision that is new. This provides that the officer—not of the court issuing the writ—shall make the return, but that the return shall be made by an officer having no connection whatever with that court, but residing in and being an officer of another jurisdiction; and whether or not that can be done under the powers vested in the courts is a serious question. It is not possible to-day under any condition of circumstances. It is new legislation, based upon a principle not now known to the practice in the courts.

Then again, service being made and a return being made to the court out of which the writ originally issued, what follows? It says:

> When the same has been served as above prescribed the alleged offender shall be assumed to be arrested and present in the court.

He shall be assumed to be arrested and present. The words "to be" should be inserted before the word "present," so as to read "and to be present in court." That is a question of power, and I assume that the Judiciary Committee considered these questions. But it is none the less our duty to consider them here in order that should a principle be overlooked or the measure be subject properly to amendment which would make it effective where otherwise it would not be, it may be adopted.

It is a very serious question whether this will effectuate the purposes which the Senator has, with which I am in entire sympathy and against which I am urging no criticism except for the purpose of perfecting this measure so that it will be effective to accomplish the purposes for which it is designed.

The bill says after he is assumed to be arrested and assumed to be present in court at the place designated in the summons, he may be proceeded against. Of course only in the matter of damages. It is not supposed that any other judgment could be rendered except one in damages. You have him there. The question will be, when they recover damages and a judgment for damages is entered, whether it can be collected.

> And all orders and judgments against it—

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume when you speak of a judgment of damages you mean a fine.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; that is all. The fine is what I refer to. There is no provision for any damages. I used that word where probably I had better said fine. But the words are interchangeable under the circumstances.

A statute provides that a corporation violating a certain law shall be subject to a fine of $10,000. The only judgment that can be entered against this corporation, which is assumed to be present, would be one that the defendant should pay a fine of $10,000. The question of the jurisdiction of the court can be raised at any time when the enforcement of that fine is before a court.

I do not mean to be understood as saying that this may not be reached by legislation; it must be reached; it would be intolerable to believe it could not be reached; but I have grave doubts as to the validity of a judgment or a fine rendered under this class of service.

This might be termed a statute of convenience. Of course, the corporation can always be sued at its residence. The Indiana case cited would not prevent it because the statute reads, if they shall do or cause to be done this act; and, if they initiate the act in Chicago, and have it completed in Indiana, they are indictable in Chicago, where they reside. There can be no question about it, under the language of any act which says that any corporation or person which shall do or cause to be done a thing shall be liable to prosecution and punishment. Of course, the act is finally perfected in Iowa, because the goods arrive there, but none the less under the statutes applying to this class of questions the offense is complete at either end of the line. The question of jurisdiction is suspended while the act is in transit, so to speak.

Mr. President, I have called attention to these matters to the end that they may be considered now and be a part of the record. I shall not offer amendments. I shall leave it to the committee and to the Senator having charge of the bill upon the floor to give these suggestions such consideration, in view of the possible future consideration of these questions, as may seem to him wise.

Mr. ROOT. I offer an amendment. On page 2, line 8, after the words "made, and," insert the words "when indorsed by the judge of such district."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CUMMINS. I could not hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 8, after the words "made, and," insert "when indorsed by the judge of such district," so that if amended it will read:

> Such notice shall be directed to the marshal of any district of the United States in which service shall be made, and when indorsed by the judge of such district shall be served upon such offender agreeably to the methods prescribed by law for the service of civil process upon artificial persons in the district in which service is made.

Mr. CUMMINS. While I do not regard the amendment as at all necessary or essential to safeguard the interests of any defendant, yet, so far as I can do it I am quite willing to accept it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think this a most vicious amendment. It would enable a judge in another district to put a veto upon such cases without requiring him to make any investigation whatsoever. If, of his own volition and will, he simply declined to approve the writ, it could not be served. It would be a most monstrous doctrine. If a corporation in the State of New York were indicted in one of the Western States for an offense committed there, where it was doing business, a judge in the State of New York could simply say, "I will not recognize this warrant," and put an absolute veto upon the proceedings in the court where the indictment had been found. It is a most vicious amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from New York. Does the Senator design by this amendment to make it analogous to a case of extradition?

Mr. ROOT. The design is to make it analogous to the provision of the section to which this is an amendment regarding a natural person.

Mr. BACON. What is the provision with reference to a natural person that the Senator has in view? Does it not relate to extradition?

Mr. ROOT. Yes; to what we may call extradition; to removal from one district to another.

Mr. BACON. That is, in the case of districts inside a State?

Mr. ROOT. No; in the United States. This is a bill to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BACON. I understand, and indictment in a federal court.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; indictment in a federal court. Under section 1014 it is provided that where there is an indictment found in one district against a person residing in another district process may issue, and it shall be the duty of the judge of the district where the offender or the witness is imprisoned to issue an order or warrant for removal. This amendment is designed to make the provision for the removal of a corporation from one district to another substantially the same as the provision for the removal of a private person, so that there will be some opportunity for the person who is to be removed, whether it be a corporation or a natural person, to be heard as to whether he ought to be taken into the other jurisdiction. Manifestly there is no opportunity in the other jurisdiction for him to be heard upon that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes have it.

Mr. NELSON. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, will you please state the question? I have been out of the Chamber temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 8, before the word "shall," insert "when indorsed by the judge of said district," so that if amended it will read:

> Such notice shall be directed to the marshal of any district of the United States in which service may be made, and when indorsed by the judge of said district shall be served upon such offender—

And so forth.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to reach corporations who are created by the laws of a given State and are indicted for offenses committed in another State. If a natural person is indicted in one district for offenses committed there and is in another district, he can be reached, under existing law, by a warrant, and brought into the court in which the indictment is found. But if a corporation of the State of New York is indicted for an offense committed in the State of South Carolina, there is no law by which that corporation can be brought into the courts of South Carolina, even after an indictment is found.

The object of the bill is to provide that the court in which the indictment has been found may issue a summons and have it directed to the marshal of the district in which the corporation is located and has its legal residence, and serve it upon that corporation, directing it to appear in court and answer to the indictment. That is the only way in which it is possible to get a jurisdiction in such cases.

The amendment of the Senator from New York amounts to this, that after a corporation has been indicted, for instance, in the State of South Carolina for an offense committed in that State and the court issues a summons upon the corporation, the offending corporation being a corporation of the State of New York, the court of South Carolina requiring the New York corporation to appear and answer to that indictment, that notice can not be served except by the approval of a judge in the State of New York. That would enable the judge of a court in which the indictment is not pending, or where the trial is not to take place, to have an absolute veto upon the case, and practically prevent the prosecution of it. That is why I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does that mean a federal or a state judge?

Mr. NELSON. It means a federal court. This relates to proceedings in federal courts wholly, not to proceedings in state courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a second to the demand for the yeas and nays?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Briggs	Burnham	Clark, Wyo.
Borah	Bristow	Burton	Crane
Bourne	Brown	Carter	Cullom
Brandegee	Burkett	Chamberlain	Cummins
Dick	Heyburn	Nelson	Stephenson
Dillingham	Hughes	Newlands	Sutherland
du Pont	Johnston	Overman	Taylor
Flint	Jones	Owen	Tillman
Frye	Kean	Purcell	Warner
Gallinger	Lodge	Rayner
Gordon	McEnery	Root
Guggenheim	Money	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. HALE, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. CLAY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF ALASKA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of the order of business. I ask the Senator from Montana whether he expects to take up the postal savings bill to-morrow?

Mr. CARTER. The consideration of the postal savings bill is dependent upon the action of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who desires to address the Senate at some length on the bill, and I am advised that he will not be able to proceed to-morrow. In consequence the bill can not with effect be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Is there any Senator present who knows what is likely to be done with the unfinished business to-morrow, if there is a session of the Senate?

Mr. NELSON. The chairman of the Committee on Territories, who has the bill in charge, is not present, but as far as I know I am inclined to think that he will not be ready to proceed to-morrow with the unfinished business; that is, the Alaska bill.

Mr. HALE. As to-morrow is the anniversary of Mr. Lincoln's birth, and many Senators desire that there shall be no session of the Senate, and as apparently nothing in the way of general business will be before the body, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION OVER CORPORATIONS.

Mr. NELSON. My understanding is that Senat bill 5899 has gone back to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. NELSON. I suppose the proper business will be to take up the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. Do I understand the Chair to say that the bill has been laid aside?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill went to the calendar at the expiration of the morning hour.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, under Rule VIII.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first bill on the calendar will be stated.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over, without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, without prejudice, on the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

The bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKETT. The bill had better go over, I think. It will lead to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The bill (S. 1425) to incorporate the Descendants of the Signers was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go to Rule IX, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will go to the calendar under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 3360) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 13, 1900, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BORAH. That is a very important bill. When it was called up the other day a great many Senators were not familiar with it. I ask that it go over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go to the calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

The bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is the unfinished business, and it will go over.

The bill (S. 1035) authorizing and directing the Secretary of State to examine and settle the claim of the Wales Island Packing Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKETT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

PROHIBITION OF INTOXICATING DRINKS TO INDIANS.

The bill (S. 1981) to amend section 1 of an act approved January 30, 1897, entitled "An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks to Indians, providing penalties therefor, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have the bill acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill as to the purpose of making the act applicable only to such persons as may allot land subsequent to 1906. It seems to me that the act should apply, if at all, to all Indian allottees, without reference to a date in 1906. The limitation was probably fixed for some purpose, and therefore I ask the question.

Mr. OWEN. The act of 1906 was an act which provided for an amendment of the Dawes allotment act of 1887, under which an Indian became a citizen of the United States when he received his allotment. In the case of Albert Heff, the United States Supreme Court held that it was not an offense against the laws of the United States to sell liquor to an Indian who had become a citizen of the United States; that he was no longer an Indian within the meaning of the law. The act of 1906 changed the allotment act so that thereafter the mere act of selecting his allotment or having his allotment made to him should not, under the law, confer a grant of citizenship until the trust period expired. The law was changed in that respect.

Mr. CARTER. Is it the understanding of the Senator that it is not now in the power of Congress to make this act applicable to allottees who received allotments prior to the passage of the act referred to?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it is my understanding of the interpretation by the Supreme Court of the United States that an Indian who has become a citizen of the United States can not be subjected to the law regulating the sale of liquor to Indians.

Mr. CARTER. Then the state of the law, as understood by the Senator, is that an Indian to whom an allotment was made prior to the passage of the act of 1906, having become a citizen of the United States, may purchase intoxicating liquor wheresoever he pleases, with no more restraint than is applied to any other citizen.

Mr. OWEN. No; I do not so understand it, because there are other reservations of the law, where certain territory is particularly under the jurisdiction of the United States, in so far as the sale of liquor is concerned, and on that territory the act may be forbidden.

Mr. CARTER. That would apply to territorial jurisdiction rather than jurisdiction over the person of the allottee.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; that is the case.

Mr. CARTER. The courts decided that Congress can not determine the course of conduct of an individual selling liquors to Indians who received allotments prior to 1906.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 8, before the word "That," to insert "Section 1;" on page 2, line 4, after the word "intoxication," to strike out "to any Indian to whom an allotment of land has been made since May 8, 1906, while the title to such allotment shall be held in trust by the Government, or;" in line 12, after the word "introduce," to insert "into the Indian country, or shall have in his possession, sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, or barter;" in line 15, after the word "liquor," to strike out "of any kind whatsoever into" and insert "including beer, ale, and wine, or any ardent or intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever, or any essence, extract, bitters, preparation, compound, composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label, or brand, which produces intoxication, within;" in line 24, after the word "introduce," to insert "or have in his possession, sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, or barter;" on page 3, line 3, after the word "whatsoever," to insert "or any essence, extract, bitters, preparation, compound, composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label, or brand, which produces intoxication;" and in line 15, after the word "paid," to strike out "But it shall be a lawful defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce liquor into the Indian country, or in or upon any Indian reservation, or within that portion of any Territory of the United States which lies within 25 miles of any Indian reservation or Indian settlement, that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority from the War Department or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the War Department" and insert "But it shall be a lawful defense to any charge of violation of the provisions of this law that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority from the Interior Department or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the Interior Department," so as to make the section read:

That section 1 of an act approved January 30, 1897, entitled "An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks to Indians, providing penalties therefor, and for other purposes," be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. That any person who shall sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, or barter any malt, fermented, spirituous, or vinous liquor, including beer, ale, and wine, or any ardent or other intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever, or any essence, extract, bitters, preparation, compound, composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label, or brand, which produces intoxication, to any Indian a ward of the Government under charge of any Indian superintendent or agent, or any Indian, including mixed bloods, over whom the Government, through its departments, exercises guardianship, and any person who shall introduce or attempt to introduce into the Indian country, or shall have in his possession, sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, or barter any malt, fermented, spirituous, or vinous liquor, including beer, ale, and wine, or any ardent or intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever, or any essence, extract, bitters, preparation, compound, composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label, or brand, which produces intoxication, within the Indian country, which term shall include any Indian allotment while the title to the same shall be held in trust by the Government, or while the same shall remain inalienable by the allottee, without the consent of the United States, or who shall introduce or attempt to introduce or have in his possession, sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, or barter any malt, fermented, spirituous, or vinous liquor, including beer, ale, and wine, or any ardent or intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever, or any essence, extract, bitters, preparation, compound, composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label, or brand, which produces intoxication, in or upon an Indian reservation, or Indian settlement within any Territory of the United States, or within that portion of any Territory of the United States which lies within 25 miles of any Indian reservation or Indian settlement, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than sixty days and by a fine of not less than $100 for the first offense and not less than $200 for each offense thereafter: Provided, however, That the person convicted shall be committed until fine and costs are paid. But it shall be a lawful defense to any charge of violation of the provisions of this law that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority from the Interior Department or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the Interior Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 2, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. If any person in the service of the United States or any Indian has reason to suspect, or is informed that any person is about to introduce, or has introduced, any of the intoxicating drinks enumerated in this act into any of the places mentioned herein, in violation of law, or has in his possession any such intoxicating drink within any of such places, it shall be the duty of such person or such Indian to take and destroy any of the aforesaid articles found in any such place or places, except such as may be introduced therein by and under authority of the Interior Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 12, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 3. Provided, That this act shall not apply to the filling of a prescription of a reputable physician by a druggist in good faith: Pro- vided, That no prescription shall be filled more than once, and a record shall be kept of such prescriptions, which record shall be open to inspection at all reasonable times.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that the words "Section 3" be stricken out, and that the words that follow, which have just been read, be made simply a proviso to section 2.

Mr. OWEN. I agree to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed that the proviso follow the words "Interior Department," at the end of line 12, page 4, in section 2.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the word "further" be inserted after the word "Provided," where it occurs the second time in the section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed, after the word "Provided," in line 15, to insert the word "further."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if the word "preparations," in section 2, line 10, on page 4, is a happy term? I apprehend that that alludes to various compounds, and I am not sure that it would cover the intoxicating drinks which are enumerated.

Mr. OWEN. I think the word "articles" would be proper.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so. I think it would be a much better word.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the word "articles" be inserted in lieu of the word "preparations" at that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 4, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the word "preparations" and to insert the word "articles."

Mr. GALLINGER. That is better.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 4, after line 18, to insert as a new section:

SEC. 3. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PIPE LINES IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. FLINT. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to make a favorable report from the Committee on Public Lands. I do so for the reason that I am engaged on a committee hearing. I desire to call the attention of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the bill, which is reported with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I submit a written report (No. 218) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from California, and the title of the bill reported favorably by him will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3544) to grant right of way over the public domain in the State of Arkansas for oil or gas pipe lines.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is a very important matter to the oil fields of Oklahoma to get access to tide water.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think we had better have the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will go to the calendar. The next bill will be stated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will withdraw my objection, as the Senator from Oklahoma says the bill is very important and that 2,200 men are tied up. If it is so important as that, I will withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is withdrawn. The substitute reported by the committee will be read to the Senate for its information.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That a right of way through the public lands of the United States in the State of Arkansas is hereby granted for pipe-line purposes to any citizen of the United States or any company or corporation authorized by its charter to transport oil, crude or refined, or natural gas which shall have filed or may hereafter file with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proof of organization under the same, to the extent of the ground occupied by the said pipe line and 10 feet on each side of the center line of same.

SEC. 2. That any citizen of the United States, company, or corporation desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall within twelve months after the location of 10 miles of the public line, if the same be upon surveyed land, and if the same be upon unsurveyed lands within twelve months after the survey thereof by the United States, file with the register of the land office for the district where such land is located a map of its lines, and upon the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, the same shall be noted upon the plats in said office, and thereafter all such land over which such line shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such right of way.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall authorize the use of such right of way, except for the pipe line, and then only so far as may be necessary for its construction, maintenance, and care.

SEC. 4. That if any section of said pipe line shall not be completed within one year after the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of said section, or if such pipe line or any section thereof shall be abandoned, or shall not be used for the transportation of oil, or natural gas, for a period of two years, the rights herein granted shall be forfeited and shall revert to the United States without further action or declaration, or any proceedings or judgment of any court, and the reservation of such land for the purposes of said right of way shall cease and become null and void without further action.

SEC. 5. That if any person, or association of persons, availing themselves of the benefits of this act, or any company or corporation, availing itself of the benefits of this act, shall violate the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" (commonly known as the Sherman antitrust act), or any amendment thereof, all rights herein granted shall be forfeited and shall revert to the United States without further action or declaration on the part of the Government, and the reservation of such land for the purposes of said right of way shall cease and become null and void without further action on the part of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire whether the Senators from Arkansas approve of the bill? Neither one of them is here.

Mr. OWEN. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] approved of it, but the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] did not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment, which has just been read, reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the fact that the expression "or any proceedings or judgment of any court" is omitted in the second instance, doubtless through an oversight.

Mr. OWEN. It was an oversight.

Mr. HEYBURN. The language was intended to be the same in both cases.

Mr. OWEN. I move the insertion of those words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho to the committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, line 10, after the word "Government," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting "or any proceedings or judgment of any court," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That if any person, or association of persons, availing themselves of the benefits of this act, or any company or corporation, availing itself of the benefits of this act, shall violate the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" (commonly known as the Sherman antitrust act), or any amendment thereof, all rights herein granted shall be forfeited and shall revert to the United States without further action or declaration on the part of the Government or any proceedings or judgment of any court, and the reservation of such land for the purposes of said right of way shall cease and become null and void without further action on the part of the Government.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma to postpone the consideration of this bill until the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] comes in. It does not seem exactly right, in his absence, to take up a bill when he is opposed to it. It does not seem to me that it is treating him with proper courtesy. I have no interest in the bill, but I notice that both Senators from Arkansas are absent.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, in answer to that statement I will say that the matter has been pending for many weeks; that this line has already been in process of construction; that the company which is constructing this line has built 120 miles of it. The company is now confronted by the proposition of crossing some half a dozen or more 40-acre tracts belonging to the United States in Arkansas. They have received permission from the secretary of state of the State of Arkansas to do business in that State. They have paid $5,000 license. There is no reason that I know of, and no reason has been given that is at all satisfactory to my mind, why the bill should not now be passed. I understand that the action of the Committee on Public Lands was unanimous with regard to the matter, except the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

I do not think that a great oil field such as this in Oklahoma should be kept in that condition; and we need very much to get an outlet for our oil. The pipe line will carry 20,000 barrels a day. I do not feel called upon to withhold action upon this matter. We did delay it in committee on numerous occasions in order to afford an opportunity to the Senator from Arkansas to be present and express his opposition to it. I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, on any theory of mere courtesy to neglect my duty to my State. I therefore think it entirely within the bounds of propriety that we should take up this bill when it is reached in this way.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the calendar is the postal savings bill.

Mr. CARTER. Let that bill be passed over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

APPEALS IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5836) to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled "An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court," and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has heretofore been read. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, before the word "writ," it is proposed to insert the article "a;" and in line 7, after the word "such," to insert "suit or," so as to read:

That any citizen of the United States entitled to commence any suit or action in any court of the United States may commence and prosecute to conclusion any such suit or action or a writ of error, or an appeal to the circuit court of appeals in such suit or action, including all appellate proceedings, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "proceedings," to insert "unless the trial court shall certify in writing that in the opinion of the court such appeal or writ of error is not taken in good faith."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendments which I send to the desk. The amendments which I offer will obviate the necessity of agreeing to the amendment which has just been stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, after the word "may," it is proposed to insert "upon a showing being made to the court and an order of the court allowing the same."

Mr. OVERMAN. I see no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment offered by Mr. HEYBURN was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "prosecute," to strike out the words "to conclusion."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendments just adopted make it unnecessary to insert the words proposed by the committee as an amendment beginning after the word "proceedings," on page 1, line 7. The committee amendment, therefore, should be rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee amendment should be disagreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Having adopted the other amendments of the Senator from Idaho, it is necessary to disagree to the last amendment of the committee. There is no occasion for those words to be inserted now in view of the amendments just adopted.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say that the amendments I offered were in lieu of those words. However, it may have been written on the memorandum I sent up; that was the intention.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; if the amendments come in the proper place as the Senator offered them, then it becomes necessary to strike out the words which constitute the committee amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. It becomes necessary to strike those words out, the other amendment having been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee on page 1, line 7, which has been heretofore stated.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to hear the bill read as amended. I did not quite catch the force of the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any citizen of the United States entitled to commence any suit or action in any court of the United States may, upon a showing being made to the court and an order of the court allowing the same, commence and prosecute any such suit or action or a writ of error, or an appeal to the circuit court of appeals in such suit or action, including all appellate proceedings, without being required to prepay fees or costs or give security therefor before or after bringing suit or action upon filing in said court a statement under oath, in writing, that because of his poverty he is unable to pay the costs of said suit, or action which is about to commence or to give security for the same, and that he believes that he is entitled to the redress he seeks by such suit or action, and setting forth briefly the nature of his alleged cause of action.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF WILLIAM W. MILLER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of the legal representatives of William H. Miller, deceased, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the name "William," to strike out the initial "H." and insert the initial "W.," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of William W. Miller, deceased, the sum of $3,920, being the amount of salary and allowances for two years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee also propose an amendment to the preamble, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to amend the preamble, on page 1, line 1, after the name "William," by striking out the initial "H." and inserting the initial "W.," so as to read:

Whereas William W. Miller, late an assistant surgeon and a commissioned officer in the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, contracted typhoid fever while performing his duty as assistant surgeon in the special work of investigating the causes of typhoid fever in the District of Columbia, and in which special work he had been exclusively engaged for several months and in which he was engaged when he contracted the disease of typhoid fever, of which he died, in Providence Hospital, in the city of Washington, on the 24th day of November, 1908: Therefore, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of William W. Miller, deceased."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 14, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 11, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.
Prayer by Rev. A. W. Wright, of Minneapolis, Minn.
The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct the RECORD and the Journal, as far as my vote is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his correction.

Mr. OLCOTT. On page 1722 of the RECORD it appears that I am recorded as not voting upon the motion to concur in the amendments on immigration on the urgent deficiency appropriation. I was present, I voted "no," and I was not paired with anybody.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Journal and RECORD will be corrected, and if there be no objection, the Journal as corrected will stand approved.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, on page 1752 of the RECORD, where the pairs are given on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama to the resolution reported from the Judiciary Committee, the RECORD shows that I am paired with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and that I am paired "in favor of" and the gentleman from Kansas "against." I have the original written pair in my hand. I was paired with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] as being in favor of the majority report of the Judiciary Committee, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] as being against the majority report, and it was expected that the vote would come up on that question; but the yea-and-nay vote was taken on the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], so that the situation was reversed, and a yea vote was in favor of the substitute and a nay vote was in opposition to the substitute and in favor of the majority report. Therefore the words "in favor of" and "against" relate to a vote which was the reverse of the one which was actually taken. There are a number of other Members paired in the same way, and I am satisfied that the same state of facts applies to each case. The RECORD ought to show where it says "in favor of," that it was in favor of the majority report. I was opposed to the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and in favor of the majority report, and would therefore have voted "nay" upon the roll call to adopt the substitute.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. A similar error appears in the statement of my pair with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House these corrections could be made without being called to the attention of the House; but in the case of these pairs, the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska will enable any other gentlemen who are not correctly paired in the RECORD to correct it themselves, and, without objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BOWERS. I desire to call attention to the fact that exactly the same situation as that reported by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] relates to the pair between myself and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY]. Not knowing the exact way in which the vote would come up, we wrote a pair, "Mr. BOWERS in favor of the majority report and Mr. HARDY against the majority report;" but as the vote came up in the reverse way, on a motion to adopt the minority report, the statement "in favor of" and "against" should be reversed.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD, without objection, will be corrected.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I desire to call attention to an error in the RECORD of day before yesterday. Would it be in order for me to do so at this time?

The SPEAKER. If it is a correction of words in a speech, the gentleman could have it corrected without bringing it to the attention of the House. If it concerns another Member, it would be better to submit the question in the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does not concern a speech. It concerns an amendment which I offered to strike out the $500 salary to the members of the proposed fine-art commission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the Chair will bear with me, I will first read from a preceding page of the RECORD, page 1668, where I said:

> I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.
> Mr. MCCALL. Yes.
> Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A question suggested by what the gentleman from Illinois just said. Would not the gentleman from Massachusetts be willing to accept this amendment, to strike out, beginning with the word "at," in line 21, all down to and including "and," in the next line, so that it will read:
> "and the members of the commission shall each be paid actual expenses—"
> Leaving out the $500 a year?
> We get splendid men for Regents of the Smithsonian, and I believe we can get the very best talent in the United States on this commission without paying its members $500 a year each.
> Mr. MCCALL. I have no objection whatever to striking that out.

On the same page the following occurred:

> Mr. MCCALL. I will be content if the gentleman will offer that as an amendment.
> Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will offer it as an amendment.

When the opportunity came, I said:

> I offer the following amendment.

The Chairman said—

> One moment. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to offer an amendment to the section?

I said, no. The RECORD then reads:

> The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.
> Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move to strike out his amendment and insert this.

Mr. Speaker, I said nothing of the kind. I do not know who did say that, unless possibly it was the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON], who shortly after offered another amendment. I said nothing of that sort, because I had nothing to offer there. Then the following appears:

> Mr. SHERLEY. I make the point of order that that is an amendment in the third degree.
> The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is an independent amendment, which will be in order after the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts shall have been voted upon.

My amendment was next in order after that of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but the RECORD a little later recites that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] offered my amendment, as follows:

> Mr. MCCALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. Speaker, it is within the knowledge of gentlemen present here now that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] turned to me and said, "Now your amendment is in order," and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] himself turned to me across the aisle and said, "Now your amendment is in order." I then arose, and the Chairman presented that amendment to the House and it was voted on. It was not presented by Mr. MCCALL.

This is not a matter of any great importance, except that I want the RECORD to show that I did not offer an amendment in the third degree, when, as a matter of fact, I offered an independent amendment, and the Chair had so ruled—an amendment which was adopted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the matter to rest upon his statement or does he desire the RECORD of the day before yesterday corrected?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to have the RECORD show on page 1674 that I offered the amendment in question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has made his statement, and without objection the RECORD will be corrected as he states.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire in any way to interfere with the proceedings, but the diplomatic bill has been hanging on now for more than a week, and we are all very anxious to finish it to-day. If the House is willing to sit here until it is finished, I do not think it will require a very late session. I should very much regret, however, if we were obliged to go over until Monday to dispose of this bill. I think if the House is willing to extend the session a little beyond the hour of 5 o'clock we can dispose of the bill to-day.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman that as far as I am concerned I will stay by him until we finish the bill to-day.

Mr. PERKINS. Very well. I hope we may finish it by 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

CHEYENNE RIVER AND STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The Speaker laid before the House the bill (H. R. 12438) to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriations and provisions to carry the same into effect," with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question? This amendment is in reference to intoxicating liquors. Will it forbid the introduction of intoxicating liquors into the land after it is opened?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the amendment relating to prohibition of intoxicating liquors in the Indian country will prohibit the sale of liquor or the introduction of liquor into that country for twenty-five years; that is, the land affected by the bill, namely, the portion of the so-called "Standing Rock Indian Reservation," in South Dakota, authorized to be disposed of under the law that this bill proposes to amend.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this amendment of the Senate a new provision in this character of legislation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I would say in answer to that inquiry that it is not; that this is a provision which has been in a number of bills that have passed the House or become a law recently upon the subject of the disposition of Indian lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to hold that in the opening of all Indian reservation lands there has been such a provision restricting the sale of liquor for twenty-five years?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not in all cases; no, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the special reason why there should be this limitation in this instance?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I stated that this provision had been in a number of bills that have passed in recent years dealing with the disposition of Indian lands. I have in mind the Yankton Reservation, in South Dakota, which was opened to settlement in 1892 or 1895; and in that legislation there is a provision prohibiting the sale of liquor for all time in the country that was affected by the legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask where the lands are, in what States, that will be covered by this limitation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In South Dakota.

Mr. STAFFORD. In South Dakota there is no constitutional inhibition forbidding the sale of liquor, while in North Dakota there is, and whereas it might be pertinent in the case of the reservation at Yankton, it might not be pertinent in land in South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that this provision has been in several bills, I think in one or two in Montana, and if I am not mistaken one in Washington.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the purpose of the amendment to seek to determine the internal policy, as far as the prohibition question is concerned, on land that is to be opened up to settlement?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to dissent strongly from such a position. I think the internal policy of the local government should not be determined by Congress on the liquor question, but it should be reserved for the State; that so far as land open to settlement in a State where they have constitutional prohibition is concerned there might be some reason for the exception and limitation. But in States where they do not have a constitutional prohibition, for us to limit in the grant of settlement for twenty-five years, or for any period of time, that the occupants shall be restricted in the use of intoxicating liquors seems to me to be a departure from the proper province of legislation by Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement in response to the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin. It has always been the policy of the Government to prohibit the introduction of liquor into the Indian country.

In the tract affected by this legislation the Indians have taken allotments, and one-third, perhaps, if not more, of the tract has been allotted to the Indians. The allotments run for twenty-five years, and it is the theory of the committees having jurisdiction of Indian legislation that during the trust period, at least, and while these Indians will be in that country holding allotments, the laws relative to the introduction of liquor into the Indian country shall be extended into that country. That is the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask whether, as to all of the Indian reservations open to settlement, there were not allotments made to the Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There were.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are there not many instances where there has been no limitation, so far as the prohibition of the sale of liquor is concerned?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is absolutely true, and because there was no legislation such as I have named is the principal reason for undertaking to legislate now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose instances might be cited without number of lands in the earlier history of the country that have been opened to settlement and where the Indians have taken allotments where the Government has not undertaken to determine the internal policy of the country, but has left it to the State to determine what was the best policy. Take the Yankton Indian Reservation case instanced by the gentleman. A limitation for all time was inserted in the grant when South Dakota had a constitutional prohibition law. Since then the constitution has been amended, so there is to-day license under local option. Yet in the reservation land that policy of local self-government does not prevail because of the restrictive clause that may have become out of date with present conditions. There is no reason why there should be, in the first instance, a limitation forbidding the sale of liquor. I, for one, believe that we are establishing a bad precedent in this instance in undertaking to determine the policy of a State in advance—to determine for twenty-five years the policy of that State, so that the people of the State can not pass upon the question and adopt that policy best suited to local conditions.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. SABATH. Has such limitation been made heretofore on lands open to settlement?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; and I have already so stated.

Mr. SABATH. When?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As early as 1892, I think it was, a bill passed opening that portion of the country in South Dakota then known as the "Yankton Indian Reservation."

There was a provision similar to this one and it was for all time.

Mr. SABATH. That was only to the reservation of the land reserved for the Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was to the country affected by the legislation, the land to be opened for settlement.

Mr. SABATH. All of the land?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. All of the land.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman from South Dakota must admit that there was some special reason for making such a limitation in that case because South Dakota at that time had a constitutional provision forbidding the sale of liquor in the entire State, and for that reason the policy of the Government was to permit the state policy to control.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This identical provision has been incorporated in several bills that have passed this House disposing of lands belonging to the Indians and without regard to whether or not the reservation was in a State which had constitutional prohibition or not. And there is pending at the present time an amendment to legislation that was passed in a recent Congress relating to a reservation in the State of Washington, the Yakima Reservation, reported to-day by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to put in that law this very section and brought to the attention of the committee by one of the Senators and one of the Representatives from the State of Washington, they believing that in the interest of the Indians, as well as in the interest of the white population of that State, this provision relating to the introduction and sale of liquor ought to be enacted and made a part of the law authorizing a sale of the surplus lands in that reservation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Did we not put something of the sort in the enabling act for the admission of Oklahoma into the Union, so far as the Indian lands were concerned or the territory embraced in the former Indian lands?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We did.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding is that we did.

Mr. MANN. That was a very formal action even in admitting a State into the Union in limiting its power to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. STAFFORD. But that part referring to the Indian Territory was mainly occupied by Indians. There is no one who desires to force liquor upon the Indians, but the internal policy should be determined by the State.

Mr. STEENERSON. This is not a new provision, but a very old one. I understand the committee now provides for doing what we did in the treaty of 1855, under which Minnesota obtained her Indian lands, and the Interior Department is now enforcing the provisions of the treaty of 1855 as to all of northern Minnesota, which has not been Indian lands for over fifty years.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is true. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

PUBLICATION RELATING TO WINCHESTER, KY.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three or four minutes regarding a publication that appeared recently in the press of the country relating to Winchester, Ky., in my district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for three or four minutes in reference to a publication that affects his district. Is there objection?

Mr. PERKINS. Might I ask, Mr. Speaker, how long a time the gentleman wishes to address the House?

Mr. LANGLEY. Not exceeding five minutes. I will try to finish in that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Will it cause somebody else to talk?

Mr. LANGLEY. I sincerely hope not, although I have no objection to the fullest discussion of the matter, but I do not think any will be necessary after I make my statement. Mr. Speaker, some days ago there appeared in the local papers of Lexington, Ky., and thereafter in the press of the city of Washington and throughout the country, a statement to the effect that citizens of Winchester, Ky., in my district, had gone to the city of Lexington, Ky., and had made an attack upon the offices occupied there by the Burley Tobacco Society, smashing in the windows and doing other very serious damage to the property. The report was so absurd, it seemed to me, upon its face that I did not suppose anyone would believe it here. But there have been so many uncontradicted fake stories in the yellow journals about imaginary conditions in Kentucky that I understand some gentlemen have given credence to this latest report. Investigation shows that there was no foundation whatever for the report, so far as the people of Winchester, Ky., were concerned. In fact, I am informed that the only foundation there was for it was that a resident of Lexington, Ky., was passing by the headquarters of the society and, being in a somewhat hilarious condition, staggered against the side of the building and slightly fractured one of the window panes, but with what damage to himself I have not been advised. [Laughter.]

Mr. JAMES. And then the newspapers, if the gentleman will permit me, immediately flashed it to the world that a great night-rider attack had been made upon the Burley Tobacco Society by reason of that fact. Is not that true?

Mr. LANGLEY. Exactly; and I was just coming to that, but my friend from Kentucky has made it unnecessary for me to make that statement. I have been requested by the good people of Winchester, than whom there are none more enterprising, cultured, and law-abiding in any city of the land, to make this public refutation of the story in the hope that, if possible, the same publicity may be given to its falsity as was given to the report itself. Besides, I am asking for an additional appropriation for the public building to be located there, and I shall probably ask still other favors for that locality, and I want all of you gentlemen to know that the city of Winchester and its people are entitled to the highest consideration at your hands.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman refer to an article which appeared in the Washington Times?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; not to the article that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] answered the other day, but I think the article to which I am referring was also published in the Washington Times; in fact, most all the papers published it.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Does the gentleman think that this one gentleman who broke the window pane was a law-abiding, refined, and cultured citizen of his State? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I am speaking now only for my district. The city of Lexington is in the district of one of my colleagues [Mr. CANTRILL], and I shall leave him to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILSON]. I see that the gentleman from the seventh district [Mr. CANTRILL] is absent from the Chamber. I will therefore say to my friend from Illinois that I do not think there is any more of this kind of hilarity in Kentucky than there is in Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. From my information and observation I am inclined to doubt that statement. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will permit, the fact that one man in a community gets drunk ought not to subject to censure all the rest of the people who reside there.

Mr. LANGLEY. That goes without saying. I see a look of apprehension upon the faces of several of my colleagues, as if they fear that I am going to launch into a lurid declamation regarding the wrongs of Kentucky, and to undertake to defend her, but I beg them to banish their fears, because such is not my purpose. Kentucky needs no defense. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] recently informed the House that never in the history of that State was there more prosperity, peace, and plenty than to-day, and that, too, under the Payne bill, and I am willing to conclude my remarks with an approval of that statement. [Applause on the Republican side.]

CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. By direction of the Committee on the Census, I submit the following privileged report (No. 434).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 330.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives whether enumerators of the census are permitted to do extra work not a part of their duties as enumerators, but demanded of them as a condition of their appointment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask also that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the report be read. It will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Census, to whom was referred House resolution 330, reports that resolution back to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report, and that the resolution do lie on the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar now in order may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CIVIL WAR PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

OTHER THAN CIVIL WAR PENSIONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20490) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Pierce J. Reynolds, late of Hospital Corps, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Emil Clafer, late of United States Marine Corps, United States Navy, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Jacob F. Roberts, late of Company E, Mounted Battalion Texas Volunteers, Texas and New Mexico Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19255, the diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19255, the diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the attention of the House to an unfortunate condition existing in connection with our diplomatic and consular service. I do so in no spirit of partisanship or sectionalism, but in the interest of American business and trade in foreign countries. I allude to the present failure of the Government to give the cotton-growing States any representation or recognition in the appointment of diplomatic and consular officials to stations in the cotton-purchasing countries of the world. To-day every progressive business nation is not only supplying its local wants, but is reaching out and extending its trade to every locality wherein it can secure foothold. Sharp business rivalry and keen competition is strikingly noticeable in all international trade centers; besides, all available new territory is being rapidly invaded by representatives of commercial and manufacturing concerns from many countries. Our diplomatic and consular service deals with our foreign business, our exporting and importing interests. If we would extend and increase our trade with other countries we must have live, efficient consular officers who are thoroughly alive to our business interests and are familiar with every phase of the business our citizens transact in the countries where our consuls are respectively stationed. The service can never become filled by men of this type if party service and political influence control their selection. Prospective applicants for these positions are deterred from the large work of qualifying themselves while they see no assurance of recognition upon merit. There are at present many persons employed in this service who have little or no knowledge of the nature and prices of those commodities which we sell in largest quantities to the countries in which these same consuls are stationed. The result is a falling off of our trade, if our exporter is even lucky enough not to be driven out by his foreign rivals, aided by their efficient and alert consuls.

Mr. Chairman, our foreign-trade showing is not satisfactory. The trade report for the last calendar year just issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor shows a marked decrease in export of the staple products of this country and an equally marked increase in the importation of luxuries. The year ending December 31, 1909, only showed a balance of trade in our favor of $252,000,000. Our total imports for 1909 were only $52,000,000 greater than for the year 1907, while our exports for 1909 were $195,000,000 less than for the year 1907. If the present rate continues the balance of trade will be against the United States at the end of this year, and our people will be buying from other nations more than they sell. The United States has only been enabled to secure and thus far maintain a trade balance in its favor by the sale of cotton—this country's greatest and most valuable export. In 1909 our imports were $1,728,000,000 and our exports amounted to $1,475,000,000. Of this sum the exports of cotton and its commercial by-products approached, if they did not exceed, $500,000,000; in 1907 they amounted to $541,000,000. For more than twenty years our cotton exports have uniformly held the balance of trade in favor of this country in amounts ranging from $192,000,000 and upward. Furthermore, it maintains our gold supply by bringing annually from foreign nations hundreds of millions in gold in return for our cotton.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a bulletin recently issued by the Census Bureau, containing some interesting facts showing the importance of our cotton, which I read, as follows:

COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL IMPORTANCE OF AMERICAN COTTON.

The advantages for the production of cotton found in southern United States are superior to those of any other country. The soil and the climate are well suited to its cultivation, and, with intelligent farm management and suitable labor, better transportation facilities, and the general use of machinery, the production of cotton has become more profitable there than in any other locality. Not only is two-thirds of the world's supply of cotton produced in the United States, but the character of the fiber grown there is superior for general manufacturing purposes.

The relative importance of the cotton industry in this country may be seen from the following figures: The aggregate value of the cereal crops produced in the United States in 1907 was estimated by the Department of Agriculture at $2,378,000,000; the value of the cotton crop of that year as computed by the Census Bureau was $701,000,000. The value of all manufactured products returned at the census of 1905 was nearly $15,000,000,000. Of this amount, textiles constituted $1,200,000,000 and cotton goods, $450,000,000. Only about one-third of the cotton grown in the country is manufactured at home; and if the entire production had been manufactured here the total value of cotton goods would have been about $1,350,000,000. As two-thirds of our raw material is utilized by European manufacturers in the production of goods which are generally of a finer quality than that of the goods made here, the value of the manufactures made from the average American cotton crop is estimated at not less than $2,000,000,000.

As an illustration of the industrial importance of American cotton, not less than 9,000,000 persons are employed in its production, handling, and manufacture. Of this number, about 6,000,000 are farmers and farm laborers; about 1,000,000 are otherwise engaged, to some extent, with the raw material in the United States; while at least 2,000,000 are concerned with it in foreign countries.

The comparative importance of cotton in the textile industry is brought out in the following statistics and discussion of textile fibers. Table 18 shows, by countries, the approximate quantities of the leading textile fibers produced in 1908.

World's production of the leading textile fibers, 1908.

[In the preparation of this table a number of sources of information have been utilized, but it has been found impracticable to secure in all instances satisfactory data for the year indicated, and only an approximation to the facts is claimed for the statistics.]

The relative importance of the fibers shown in this table has been reversed during the past century. Flax fiber, which was used to a larger extent than any other fiber in 1800, now ranks fourth, and the quantity produced is only about three times what it was at that time. During the same period the production of wool has increased from about 500,000,000 pounds to about 2,500,000,000 pounds, or fourfold, and cotton from about 300,000,000 pounds to about 10,000,000,000 pounds, or over thirtyfold.

Mr. Chairman, this staple product is raised in commercial quantities in 12 States, and two-thirds of its annual yield is shipped and sold abroad. Hence it is of vital importance that our diplomats and consuls stationed in the countries that buy American cotton should have a thorough knowledge of the nature, production, and price of this product, as well as the numerous uses to which it is applied. In no other way can we expect satisfactorily to extend and develop our foreign trade and commercial interests. Yet, Mr. Chairman, this Government has long refused, and now refuses, to appoint citizens of our cotton-growing States to diplomatic and consular posts in the cotton-purchasing countries. I dare say that those now in the service could not distinguish growing cotton from many other plant growths. They know nothing of its real worth and manifold uses. Why should these States and this great industry be thus handicapped? Why thus curb and injure the American cotton grower? Of our 49 ministers and ambassadors, not one, I believe, is from a cotton State or knows anything about cotton. New York has 18 positions in the diplomatic service, commanding an aggregate annual salary of $145,000, while the 12 cotton-growing States combined have only 9 insignificant subordinate positions in this branch of our foreign service, commanding an aggregate annual salary of $19,250. Maryland has 11 positions in this service, with an annual salary of $51,000, while the 8 cotton States of Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Texas, and Oklahoma have no representation in any capacity. Also, Massachusetts has 14 of these positions, with salaries aggregating $50,000. Even the salaries of 6 appointees from the little State of New Jersey, that is smaller than many counties in Texas, amount to $30,250 per annum.

We have about 57 consuls-general, and none are selected from cotton States to positions in countries that buy American cotton. Only 3—1 from Virginia and 2 from Missouri—are from the cotton section, and they are appointed in the lower classes of the service and to minor and unimportant stations outside of the cotton-purchasing countries.

This Government has 241 consuls stationed in the various foreign countries. They are divided into 9 classes, according to salary and importance of station to which appointed. From this entire number of consuls only 5 stations in European countries are filled by appointments from cotton States, and, with one or two exceptions, these stations are of trifling commercial importance, viz: Amsterdam, Holland; Breslau, Prussia; Lyons, France; Aix la Chapelle, Prussia; Patras, Greece. Besides, they are placed in the lowest classes of the service, their average salaries being between classes 8 and 9.

I find the following facts to exist relative to appointments in this service, calculating back to 1906:

	Appointments due by 1900 census.	Appointments now credited.	Maximum salary.	Average salary.	Appointments since 1906.
Texas	12	2	$3,000	$2,500	2
Oklahoma	3	1	2,500	2,500	1
Arkansas	5
Louisiana	5	2	5,000	4,500	1
Mississippi	6	1	2,000	2,000	1
Alabama	7	1	2,000	2,000	1
Georgia	9	3	3,000	2,000	3
Florida	2	4	3,000	2,500	2
South Carolina	5	3	2,500	2,250	3
North Carolina	7	5	5,000	3,200	4
Tennessee	8	5	3,000	2,500	5
Total	69	27	2,888	2,300	23

Mr. Chairman, 225 appointments were made since 1906. Only 23 of these went to the 11 cotton-growing States and only 5 of them to small stations in cotton-buying countries. Two and nine one-hundredths are the average number of appointments made from each of these States since 1906. Five and seven-tenths are the average number of appointments made from each of the other States of the Union for the same period. This includes such States as Utah, Nevada, Idaho, and so forth, which virtually have no export interests in comparison with these 11 States.

In this connection I desire to read a portion of an article written one year ago by Mr. R. H. Watkins, a noted writer and statistician, though I have not had a chance to verify each statement he makes. It is as follows:

Early in Mr. Roosevelt's administration, when he was reminded of the meager share the South had in the representation of the United States abroad in the diplomatic and consular services, he declared that he would look into the question and see that the South had fair play. He has done nothing of the kind. He has taken away much of the little that the South had. The few small posts abroad held by men from Southern States were obtained by them either through original appointment by President Cleveland or through examinations prescribed in the State Department's own civil-service regulations.

When Congress, at Mr. Roosevelt's instance, enacted a law classifying the consular service and embracing those already in office under its protection, he had filled nearly every desirable place with persons of his own choice and party.

FEW SOUTHERN MEN.

As it is, the South has less representation in the State Department, at home and abroad, than it has had at any time in the history of the Government. The South now has as little proportionate share in the relations of this Government with foreign countries as have our dusky wards on the Indian reservations or the slaves of the Sultan of the Sulu Archipelago.

There are 12 Southern States—Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia—whose cotton exports alone enable the United States to maintain a comfortable balance of trade with the world. But for the gold southern cotton brings from Europe to the United States the balance of trade would be heavily against us.

In all the great cotton-buying countries of Europe there is not in any diplomatic or consular position of importance and respectability a single man from a cotton-growing State representing the United States Government.

NONE IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Great Britain buys 40 per cent of the cotton we export, yet nowhere in all the vast domain of the British Empire, weaving our cotton into fabrics for the hundreds of millions of the inhabitants of her possessions, there is not one consul from a Southern State representing the United States.

The latest State Department register shows there are 34 important consular posts in British territory, all of which are held by men from States in which no cotton is grown.

The 13 important consulships of the German Empire are distributed to men from north of Mason and Dixon's line.

The 6 important consularships in France are given to Ohio, the District of Columbia, Rhode Island, and New York.

Five in Italy are filled by men from Pennsylvania, Vermont, Maine, the District of Columbia, and Connecticut.

Belgium's best have consuls from the District of Columbia and Pennsylvania.

Vienna and Budapest, in Austria-Hungary, have consuls from Wisconsin and New York.

In Spain the consuls are from Minnesota, Massachusetts, Maryland, and Michigan.

In China, where we have great hopes for development of our cotton trade, the 8 consuls are from New York, Massachusetts, California, Minnesota, Indiana, and Ohio.

Mexico, next door to the cotton States, has 7 good consulates filled by men from Illinois, Nebraska, Kentucky, Iowa, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Indiana.

There are 333 Americans in the consular service, and of these 31 are from Southern States. The aggregate of salaries paid these 333 is $1,008,500, of which the aggregate paid to consuls from the Southern States, including Kentucky, is $97,800. Ohio alone has consuls whose aggregate pay is $114,800; the pay of consular officers from New York aggregate $101,000; that from the District of Columbia, $66,500.

In the diplomatic service in positions of responsibility the number employed is 108, of which there are 13 from the Southern States. The aggregate compensation is $455,250, of which the Southerners get $31,000.

Here in Washington the State Department has on its pay rolls 168 employees, 11 of whom are from Southern States, in places obtained by civil-service examination. The aggregate pay is $219,700, of which the southern employees receive $16,800.

The population of the Southern States is 27 per cent of that of the United States. The South last year contributed 35 per cent of the total exports of the United States. The proportion of Southerners in the diplomatic and consular service of the United States is 9 per cent, and the compensation they receive is 7 per cent of the total.

Mr. Chairman, it may be remarked that the great Empire of Japan, as much as it consumes, never purchased any material quantity of cotton from the United States until 1898, when a traveling representative of American agriculture visited the buyers there and familiarized them with our cotton-trade conditions. Yet Japan used a great deal of American cotton, but it was purchased from the English dealers in London. The United Kingdom, France, and Germany purchased three-fourths of our cotton exports. Still our people who raise and sell it are, and for years have been, denied the great advantage of intelligent and efficient representation in those countries through our consular service.

During last spring I offered a resolution in this House calling on the Secretary of State for all available information relative to the abuses in the diplomatic and consular service I have pointed out; and also inquiring what steps, if any, are being taken to remedy existing conditions. I hope the House will pass the resolution and at least manifest some interest in behalf of the Nation's second largest export product.

Mr. Chairman, there is to-day being waged a great battle for commercial supremacy among the nations of the world. This country needs well-equipped consuls of sound business qualifications and judgment in every commercial and industrial center. They should know precisely what our country has to sell, the prices, uses, and quantity; likewise he should know in detail just what foreign countries prefer to buy; he should, in fact, possess such knowledge and business tact as is required of a drummer or commercial man by the firm or manufactory he represents. Yet, Mr. Chairman, if our present consuls and consuls-general were representing a firm or firms in the sale of American products and the extension of American markets abroad, they would virtually all be discharged within a month for incompetency and general inefficiency.

Where our various exports formerly had a monopoly of the world's markets, they now meet keen competition. This is especially true of wheat and the products of cotton, wool, iron, and so forth. Hence my appeal in behalf of the great cotton section of the United States, which is without representation in the foreign service where it sells cotton, and likewise virtually without consular representation everywhere. Our resources, enterprise, and productiveness entitle us to ready and easy access to all the world's markets for our surplus products, and I earnestly urge that early steps be taken to supply every material business section of this country with a well-equipped, up-to-date diplomatic and consular service appointed to stations in other countries where they can and will render the most efficient service in guarding American commercial interests and extending American commerce.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, a few days since the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], in a very excellent speech on the income tax, took occasion to refer, in passing, to the governor of the State which I represent in part. There was nothing out of order in the remarks made by the gentleman from Tennessee, and allowing for the exaggeration to which we are all prone, more or less, in remarks which we, at least, hope will be read by our constituents, there was nothing at which anyone could take offense. In the course of his remarks, however, the gentleman from Tennessee made one or two observations which it seems to me called for some slight notice on the part of some Representative from the State of New York. I shall not attempt to put into the RECORD in detail again the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee. The two sets of remarks, if I may so call them, to which I allude are, first, those in which he indicated what he believed evidently to be the subserviency of the governor of the State of New York to the moneyed interests, which, in the minds of so many gentlemen, not only here but elsewhere, have their local habitation in the State, and particularly the city, of New York.

The other reference was to the governor's action in sending a message to the legislature at the time that he transmitted for their action the income-tax amendment sent to the various States by the Congress. The gentleman characterized that particular act on the part of our governor as meddling, and the governor in that regard as an intermeddler. I hold in my hand the constitution of the State of New York, in which it is particularly prescribed as a duty of the governor to acquaint the legislature, by message, with matters which he thinks ought to be brought to their attention. Perhaps in that connection I can best indicate what those particular matters were that the governor deemed to be essential to have in the recollection of the legislature when it was acting on this particular subject.

Our State is unquestionably one of great wealth, but from the beginning we have not hesitated to mortgage the future, in the hope, usually accurate, of even greater prosperity, progress, and success. We are following that particular method at present. We are borrowers, perhaps, of the citizens of every State in the Union, including our own; and although I am unable to obtain exact statistics, I have no doubt that the aggregate state and municipal indebtedness of our State is about a billion dollars. Our state indebtedness is $41,000,000, against which we have a sinking fund of $23,000,000. Our indebtedness in the city of New York is something over $700,000,000.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if that indebtedness is not largely accounted for by the fact that the assessed valuation of property subject to taxation is only about 52 per cent of its real value and that the ad valorem assessment upon personal property is less than 12 per cent on its real value.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Of course, that does not affect the amount of the indebtedness in the slightest degree. But so far as the city and county of New York are concerned, the figure of 52 per cent for real estate is very much out of the way. I have no doubt at all that the average real estate in the county of New York is assessed at above 90 per cent of its value, practically full assessment.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman has stated the municipal, county, and town indebtedness to be how much?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have just stated that while I was unable from any source to obtain accurate statistics, I had no doubt that the county, city, and state indebtedness, added to what we know of the indebtedness of the city and county of New York, made our aggregate municipal indebtedness within the State of New York about a billion dollars.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, is it not a fact that on account of the combined indebtedness—State, city, county, and town—that every dollar of taxation that can be raised is needed to pay the interest on that indebtedness, and that is an argument why an income tax of the National Government should not be levied upon any property in the State of New York?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I prefer to develop that along the lines of the governor's own argument. I just state the fact as to the condition in the State of New York in relation to indebtedness, which was within the view of the governor at the time he wrote that message.

Mr. FINLEY. That is the real reason, is it not?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I prefer to take that up in my own way.

Mr. FINLEY. I am only asking a question.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Just in that connection, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I have a bulletin recently issued by the Bureau of the Census, in which the total indebtedness of all the States, counties, and municipalities in the United States is shown to amount to only $1,864,000,000. Would the gentleman undertake to say in view of that that in New York the indebtedness amounts to over a billion dollars?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I undertake to state that. I do not know of what date those census figures are. I am giving the gentleman figures which are accessible to anyone. I have written to the comptroller of our own State, and he is unable to furnish me with any more accurate information.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask if the gentleman from New York agrees with the governor of New York in his conclusions and contentions.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That, also, I will deal with as I proceed.

Mr. FINLEY. I am obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Now, with our State owing a billion dollars in round figures, it is evident that the honest people within that State owe a duty, first, to the people who hold our securities to see that nothing is done to impair the present value; second, that we owe a duty to ourselves as continuing borrowers to see, if it can be done properly and creditably, that nothing be done to impair our future market for bonds.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman seriously believe that the imposition of a federal income tax will destroy the credit of our State?

Mr. BENNET of New York. That, also, I will take up in my own way and in my own time. I think I will decline interruptions for a few moments until I have developed this line.

Our governor having these facts in mind, sent a special message to the legislature in which he gave his ideas and views on an income tax. He favored the income tax, and he favored the income tax without any restriction as to apportionment by population or assessed valuation. In his judgment, however, no State ought to assent to an income tax which enabled the National Government to tax the securities of the State, because, as he pointed out, the right to tax is the right to destroy, and if that amendment, that particular amendment, was adopted, the Federal Government would have in its power the bond issues of the several and various States. That is the governor's position on the matter. It is due to him that it be frankly and fairly stated in the forum where his action has been alluded to.

Now, as to the governor's attitude in relation to wealth and moneyed interests and matters of that kind, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] really picked out rather an unhappy side, because we never have had a governor, we never had a public official in our State, or in any other State, who has been less subservient to the material interests than has Governor Hughes, of New York, during his term in office. He has been in public life about five years. My first notice of him in any public capacity was when he appeared, still a practicing lawyer, before the bar association of the State of New York and read a paper, in favor of whom? Of the wealthy? No; of the poor. We have a law on the statute books and have it still, not the best law in the world, under which orders of arrest can be issued, and in our county of New York that law had been abused until Governor Hughes, at that time a practicing lawyer, and Hon. Mitchell L. Erlanger, a Democratic sheriff of the county, out of the goodness of their hearts, without hope of compensation, without hope hardly of notice, had taken up the case of these poor people, sometimes imprisoned as long as three months for a debt of three or four dollars, and this lawyer dropped his business and appeared before the state bar association and fought against this particular wrong, against the abuse of the statute, and he and the sheriff were successful. It is rather to their credit, although each has since run successfully for public office, that never a word in reference to that particular and extremely meritorious action on their part has been uttered in order to get the votes of the people, in splitting the ears of groundlings, or boasting of their successful efforts for the poor people.

What was it that brought Governor Hughes into prominence? It was the gas investigation, the result of which was to decrease the price of gas in New York from $1 to 80 cents, and the law that the governor drafted has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and gas is at 80 cents a thousand in New York City to-day.

During last summer the gas company of New York, under the operation of that statute, paid back to the people of New York City over $9,000,000—to the storekeeper, to the rent payer, to the poor people as well as to the rich.

Then came the insurance investigation. Surely that was not a service to men of wealth. There never has been a man in our history that went so relentlessly through the ranks of men high in office, of social position, men of wealth, and men of reputed wealth, as did Governor Hughes in the insurance investigation. The investigation broke up syndicates, financial manipulations, resulted in stringent laws, enforced publicity, and economy, and as a result of it a law was passed prohibiting political contributions by corporations.

The next was a public-service commission law, a law which I believe was a great improvement on the Hepburn law passed by the Fifty-ninth Congress. To get that law through the governor went out on the stump appealing directly to the people. He has secured an honest administration in the interest of the public. It prevents stock watering in the future in capitalization of franchises. For three years he has been recommending that telephone and telegraph companies shall be brought under public regulation. I have no question but that this year he will be successful.

At the same time, in respect to the race tracks of our State, the constitution of the State was being evaded by trickery and device. The governor of the State took up that question, and certainly in taking that up there was no subserviency to great wealth or vested interests. He finally secured, by the vote of a State senator who, because of that meritorious vote, was promoted to this body, by one majority in our state senate, a law prohibiting all betting of record on the race tracks of the State of New York.

Next, take our banking system. We had had a good banking system, above the average, but there was one blot upon the system, and that was the expensive receiverships such as still exist in other States, I am informed. Now, under the legislation advocated by the governor, we have wiped out every last vestige of expensive receiverships in connection with banks in New York State, and the last state bank that failed in New York was settled up at an expense of only two or three hundred dollars, possibly less, for the stockholders and depositors of the bank.

He recommended an investigation of Wall Street, got the best men in the city to volunteer, and carried on the investigation and made recommendations to the legislature based upon those investigations.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. Was that the Knickerbocker Trust Company, the last bank settled up?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It was not. The last bank, as I recall it, was the Home Bank in Brooklyn. The Knickerbocker Trust Company came before the salutary laws that the governor recommended and the adoption of which he secured.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Admitting the truth of the high tribute which the gentleman pays to the chief executive of our great Commonwealth, what is the gentleman's judgment as to the measures he has recommended? Does the gentleman not think that in many cases he has been too radical and has displayed too little conservatism in his recommendations which he has made to the legislature of the State?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I imagine that my colleague and I would thoroughly disagree about the insurance legislation.

Mr. GOULDEN. Quite so; because I am familiar with that and believe that he was not only extreme in his recommendations in that respect, but bordering on injustice to that great interest in which the people are vitally concerned.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The people of our State have approved of it.

Mr. FORNES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. FORNES. The governor should be commended for many good measures, but does the gentleman believe that the investigation of Wall Street has benefited the banks and the financial institutions of the city of New York or the State of New York?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have every belief that when the recommendations of that commission are adopted, both by the stock exchange and the legislature of our State, they will be of benefit to business generally throughout not only New York State, but the country.

Mr. FORNES. Is the gentleman not aware that the stock exchange was opposed to his measures?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The mere fact that the stock exchange is opposed to some of the measures of Governor Hughes scarcely proves the point of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] that he has been subservient to great wealth.

Mr. GOULDEN. Would the gentleman enlighten the committee as to his views upon the governor's contentions in the matter of proposed primary laws, about which the politicians of the State are deeply concerned?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I possibly will before I close. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has nine and one-half minutes remaining.

Mr. GOULDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon for interrupting him. That is a very important matter, and I am rather inclined to agree with the recommendations that the governor has made on this subject. He at least believes such a law to be necessary in the State.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I can not discuss the matter in nine and one-half minutes. He next took up reform in the insurance department, put in a superintendent who has the confidence of the entire people, and whose action has resulted in increasing—because the people have always had confidence in our insurance department—the confidence of the people of the State in the insurance department.

Mr. FORNES. The governor urged the adoption of life-insurance laws which prohibited the large life-insurance companies from writing above a certain amount, which means that in proportion to their capital they are not permitted to do the amount of business which the smaller companies are allowed to do. Does the gentleman believe that the governor in that respect has acted fairly and for the good of the people?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I unquestionably believe that the governor has acted fairly and for the good of the people in that instance, as in almost every other instance that can be adduced during the three years of his administration. The limitation, I am informed, is $150,000,000 a year, a rather substantial amount of business.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to say that I indorse the gentleman's position as to maximum amount of new business annually, and believe that the governor was right and that my colleague from New York [Mr. FORNES] is wrong in his contention?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I thank the gentleman. The governor next secured the appointment of a commission in relation to employers' liability, responsible in character, to discuss employers' liability and compensation, thus bringing himself abreast and bringing our State abreast of the best thought of the generation on these important subjects.

We talk a good deal here about conservation. Our state legislature first, and afterwards our governor, acted in the State of New York on the question of conservation. While outside our borders people are appealing for federal aid, the State of New York has gone ahead out of its own treasury to conserve its own resources; and in line with that, the governor has taken the first step, as I am informed, that has been taken by the executive of any State to establish the precedent of payments to the State for water power within the State, that step having been taken in 1907. He has stood for the development of water power under public control, while at the same time recognizing every advantageous and wise step that has been taken by the legislature during a series of years to adopt a policy in relation to conservation within our State.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would kindly put into the RECORD the particular requirements that the governor has advocated, and so on. I think that is very important.

Mr. BENNET of New York. In what regard?

Mr. FINLEY. In regard to the water power and the State controlling it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. By unanimous consent I will do that.

They are as follows:

EXTRACT FROM THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE OF 1907.

WATER-SUPPLY COMMISSION.

By the act creating the water-supply commission it is provided that no municipal or public corporation or public board or any private person or waterworks company engaged in supplying any municipal corporation with water should acquire lands or additional sources of water supply save as the commission determines, among other things, whether the plans proposed are justified by public necessity and are equitable in their relation to other divisions of the State. It also has important powers with reference to river improvement. It remains to be considered whether it is not advisable to provide a more comprehensive plan, embracing in a clearly defined way the matter of water storage and the use of water courses for purposes of power. The entire question of the relation of the State to its waters demands more careful attention than it has hitherto received in order that there may be an adequate scheme of just regulation for the public benefit.

EXTRACT FROM THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE OF 1909.

WATER POWERS.

In my first message to the legislature I recommended the consideration of the great value of our undeveloped water powers and the necessity of preserving them for the benefit of all the people of the State. At the session of 1907 the legislature authorized the state water-supply commission to collect information relating to the water powers of the State and to devise plans for their development. With competent engineering assistance they have made valuable studies, and their report to the legislature last year, with that about to be made, deserves the most careful consideration. Of the horsepower developed by water in the United States for manufacturing purposes, it appears that 27½ per cent, or 446,134 horsepower, is used in the State of New York. Facility in the transmission of electrical power has increased to an extraordinary degree the importance of water power for its development and the relation of our water powers to the industrial energies of the State. It has been estimated by the water-supply commissioners that, excluding Niagara and the St. Lawrence, the rivers of the State, with the proper storage of their flood waters, are capable of furnishing at least 1,000,000 horsepower for industrial purposes; and it is deemed clear that 550,000 horsepower of energy is annually allowed to run to waste because no well-devised and comprehensive plan for the general and systematic development of water powers has been undertaken by the State. And the incidental advantages which would accrue from the regulation of our streams and the prevention of drought and flood are sufficiently obvious.

We now have within our grasp an opportunity which for the sake of the industrial freedom and prosperity of the future we should not permit to be wasted. These great natural sources of power should not only be developed in a manner which the State alone can make possible, but should be held for the benefit of the people under conditions which will insure the protection of the common right and fair return for privileges granted.

The commissioners will submit to your honorable body special studies of particular water-power development, which it appears may be made with reasonable assurance of direct pecuniary profit to the State, apart from the general benefits derivable from the policy of state control. It is believed that these studies have been made with skill and precision, and the immense importance of the proposals will at once be recognized. They should be most carefully considered, and if we are to undertake the development of these projects and the prosecution of comprehensive plans, the necessary steps to secure the advantages which they promise should promptly be taken.

EXTRACT FROM THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE OF 1910.

WATER POWERS.

The water-supply commission is about to make a most important report of the result of its investigations under the act of 1907 relating to the development of the water powers of the State. An exhaustive examination, with the assistance of competent engineers, has been made of the Hudson, Genesee, and Racquette river watersheds. Four great reservoir projects have been examined so as to furnish full detail with regard to location and design of dams and power plants, lands involved, cost, and probable revenue and benefits. Additional studies have been made of other rivers which have importance as sources of power. Facts with regard to existing powers, the relative importance of different streams and the probable results of additional development and the market for increased power, have been carefully ascertained.

It is estimated, for example, that complete regulation of the Hudson River with the storage required for that purpose would raise the present minimum flow of the river in a dry year from 900 cubic feet a second to a minimum of 4,600 cubic feet at Spiers Falls, and that with this increased flow and with full advantage of all power possibilities the present development could be increased by 246,000 horsepower. It is said that a low rate for the increased power would not only provide an adequate carrying charge for a complete system, but a considerable additional revenue to the State. One of the projects relating to the Hudson development is that upon the Sacandaga, the cost of which in the first stage, which can be dealt with separately, is estimated at $4,650,000. Its effect would be to add 1,900 cubic feet per second regulated flow to the river and an estimated increase of power upon a conservative basis of 85,500 horsepower. At $5 per horsepower this would provide a sum sufficient to give a considerable revenue in addition to the annual charge for interest, sinking fund, and maintenance. This apparently would not involve the use of the present forest preserve property of the State.

It is impossible here to state with any degree of fullness the interesting results of these important studies with respect to the practicability of these proposed developments in connection with the rivers of the State and their advantage to the State. Some of the projects involve the use of a portion of the land within the forest preserve. But it is said that in all only 43,000 acres of land now owned by the State, including 10,000 acres of land under water (out of about 1,500,000 acres owned by the State), would be involved by the construction of all the reservoirs which it would be practicable to construct in the Adirondacks; and this includes many possible reservoirs which it would not be necessary or economical to build. Excluding the land under water, the greater part of the remainder of these 43,000 acres is described as low, swampy, and valueless, and only about 8,000 acres is said to be really timber land.

The investigation has proceeded far enough to raise the question as to the action which should be taken by the State, and I commend this subject to your most careful consideration. The following principles should, I believe, be accepted:

1. That the flow of water in our rivers should be regulated and our water powers developed to the fullest extent that may be practicable.

This is essential to prevent unnecessary damage from floods and to insure our industrial progress and the future prosperity of our people.

2. That with respect to streams having their headwaters within the boundaries of the forest parks, all plans of regulation or power development should be executed only by the State, and all reservoirs and their appurtenances and the impounded waters should be the property of the State and under exclusive state control, and not be permitted to pass into private hands.

Any such plan should embrace all necessary safeguards to insure the proper protection of the forests.

3. That with respect to any other streams flowing through any other public park or reservation of the State, such plans should likewise be executed by the State, and it should retain exclusive ownership and control in order adequately to safeguard the State's interests.

4. That, further, as it is of great public importance that the water powers of the State should be developed in a comprehensive manner and that these natural sources of industrial energy should not become the subject of an injurious private control, such development should be undertaken by the State whenever such action appears to be feasible and for the general interest.

5. That in any case of state development of water power provision should be made for the granting of such rights as may be proper to use the power so developed upon equitable terms and conditions.

6. That the State should not undertake any plan of regulation or water-power development save upon a basis which would make its investment a fair and reasonable one from the public standpoint by virtue of practicable measures for insuring such a return upon the State's outlay as would be equitable in the particular circumstances.

7. That any amendment of the Constitution at this time for the purpose of permitting any portion of the forest preserve to be used for any such purpose should, by its terms or by appropriate reference, suitably define the property within the preserve which is to be used and the manner of its use. No amendment and no plan of development should meet with any favor which, after the most rigid scrutiny, does not afford absolute assurance that in no way will the public interest in the forests be parted with or jeopardized.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Then, I decline interruption for the remaining five minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question——

Mr. BENNET of New York. I decline to be interrupted. Mr. Chairman, there need be no fear that the act of the legislature of the State of New York, whatever it may be in relation to the income-tax amendment, will be founded upon anything except the highest regard for the best good of the Union as a whole. Our glorious history as a State prevents any other conclusion or criticism. From the beginning, in the times of the colonies, in the times of the Revolution, when the fields and hillsides of our State were a bloody arena from one end to the other, through the civil war, when that State sent half a million of men and untold millions of money to the support of the Union, New York State, through its governor, or through its legislature, or through its people, has never subordinated the national to the state good. We may consider in our legislature—and I have no information except what comes from the public press—we may consider in our legislature the scope of this amendment, as our legislature properly should; we may consider whether that amendment in its scope is best for all the States of the Union, as our legislature should; but this House and all other bodies can remain firm in the assurance that whatever action is taken by the legislature of the State of New York on that important amendment will be in view entirely of what the legislature deems will, in the years to come, be for the highest benefit and good of the United States of America as a Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I have residing in my home county, the county of Santa Clara, Cal., a very large number of old survivors of the civil war, and quite a large number of them volunteer officers of that war. These old soldiers are all interested in the passage of a bill now before this House which has for its purpose the creation of a volunteer officers' retired list. I hold in my hand a memorial addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, signed by a few of the leading citizens of my county, asking for the favorable consideration of that bill, and I ask unanimous consent to print the same in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to print the memorial indicated in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The memorial is as follows:

SAN JOSE, CAL., January 29, 1910.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned citizens and taxpayers of the city of San Jose, county of Santa Clara, Cal., respectfully and earnestly request the Congress of the United States and the Committees on Military Affairs of the House and Senate, to make an early and favorable report, and promptly pass the bill (S. 1483) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "The Civil War Volunteer Officers' Retired List, etc., now pending before the Senate committee, and a similar bill (H. R. 18899) pending before the House committee, for the following good and sufficient reasons:

A large majority of those who were old enough to be commissioned officers and served for the period named in said bills have now reached the average advanced age of 70 years or more. That a postponement of this just measure to those who saved and perpetuated this Republic, which is along the lines of the bill granting the same honors and rewards to those in the army of the Revolution, who created the Republic, will be equivalent to its denial, as the infirmities, diseases, and wounds, added to their age, will in a very short time deplete their ranks to a mere corporal's guard, and thus deprive some of the best, truest, and most heroic, deserving, and suffering of these veterans of the honors and benefits of this desired law.

As thousands of citizens have signed petitions to Congress, and the legislatures of 12 States passed resolutions asking for its passage, we feel that we are justified in this appeal.

We, like a large majority of loyal and patriotic citizens, believe that this just measure should not be postponed on the ground of economy in public expenditures, for the good reason that appropriations for hundreds of small creeks, sluggish rivers, new post-offices and other federal buildings, increase in salaries, creation of new offices, etc., can well be postponed with no lasting detriment to the public, no extinction by death of future opportunity for the appropriations, and ample time for realization in a few years.

Inasmuch as the honorable Secretary of the Treasury in his report has estimated a surplus of $35,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1910, we respectfully submit that the bill should not be postponed for other less important, less just, and less patriotic measures.

Respectfully submitted.

W. G. Lorigan, associate justice supreme court of California; P. F. Gosbey, judge of the supreme court; J. R. Welch, judge of the supreme court; John E. Richards, judge of the supreme court; W. F. Parker, county auditor; L. A. Spitzer, county assessor; H. A. Pfister, county clerk; E. W. Conant, county treasurer; Wm. Knox Beans, president of the Bank of San Jose; Wm. V. Dinsmore, cashier of the Bank of San Jose; Hiram D. Tuttle, attorney and counselor; J. W. Dinsmore, clergyman.

Mr. PERKINS. I now ask the gentleman from Georgia to use some of his time.

Mr. HOWARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the laudation by the gentleman from New York of the governor of New York. The governor of New York is one of the citizens of this great country who has come into the limelight, and, in a great many respects, has made good. To my mind, he does not need any defense in the American Congress. I have been studying, I have been thinking, why it is that the gentleman from New York should find it necessary, wise, and eminently proper to come into this presence and make a defense of the governor of the State of New York?

I have not been able to satisfy myself to answer the question as to the motives that prompt the gentleman from the State of New York [Mr. BENNET]. I imagine that there must be some doubt somewhere that somebody, somehow, has not come up to the measure, to the standard of citizenship, of political rectitude, and of patriotism set by the governor of New York. So that I have been busying myself and am still in doubt. Governor Hughes is a great character in this country. There is no doubt about that. He is so great, in fact, that he finds himself out of place in politics. He announces his intention and declared purpose to abdicate, to quit, so to speak, the arena of politics in the State of New York and retire to private life. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] says that, after one term, Governor Hughes has enough of that office. I would like to know the reason why. Is it because——

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? Governor Hughes has had two terms. And will the gentleman pardon me further just a moment? I think his reason for declining a renomination is to give our distinguished colleague who has just taken his seat an opportunity. [Applause.]

Mr. FORNES. I think my colleague did not exactly state the reason, because I believe that the next governor of New York will be elected by the Democrats. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FINLEY. That is my opinion. I am satisfied from what is generally known of politics in the State of New York that Governor Hughes, great man as he is, and for many of his policies and pronounced opinions in respect to public utilities I heartily commend him——

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, Does the gentleman controvert my contention made some days ago on this floor to the effect that there is a class of wealth in this country, embracing New York also, that is not paying its just share of federal taxes, according to its ability to pay, and that the governor of New York interposed his opposition to the ratification of this amendment in order to protect that portion or that class of wealth situated in his State?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the time will never come when I can willingly or successfully contravene any contention made by so good a citizen, so good a patriot, and so faithful a Democrat as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. Now, the governor of New York proposes to retire from public life, and why? He finds himself surrounded by uncongenial—what does the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] call it?—political associates. Yes. He is not in sympathy with them and they are not in sympathy with him. He proposes to quit the game of politics in the State of New York, and I think when the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] comes here and defends the governor of New York he is "carrying coals to Newcastle." Whether those coals are necessary or not I think he knows.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to call his attention to the fact that while the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] appeared to defend the governor of New York, he did not attempt to sustain or approve the contention of the governor of New York as to the income tax.

Mr. FINLEY. I was coming to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like a few minutes more.

Mr. HOWARD. I yield as much time as he desires to take in which to answer the questions that have been propounded to him.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], in defending the governor of New York, was asked this pointed question, as to whether or not he indorsed the views of the governor of New York, to wit, in the matter of the income tax, and whether or not he sustains the contentions of the governor in that respect? Did the gentleman answer? He said he would come to it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Can I answer right now?

Mr. FINLEY. Unless the gentleman answered when he said he would answer, I think the gentleman is out of order now.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will answer now, if you say so.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman is out of order, as, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York said he would answer his question in the course of his remarks, and when he came to it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon. What the gentleman asked me was what I thought of Governor Hughes's reason for the message.

Mr. FINLEY. I beg pardon, Mr. Chairman. I asked the gentleman from New York if he indorsed the position of the governor of New York with respect to the income tax and if he indorsed his contentions in that respect. The gentleman from New York said he would answer that question when he came to it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That was not the question the gentleman asked me. I will answer it now, if he wants me to do so.

Mr. FINLEY. Go ahead.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I said that as governor of New York he did exactly what was his duty.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, I want to ask the gentleman, in view of all the possibilities and probabilities and political exigencies, what would the gentleman do, and what position would the gentleman take, if he were governor of the State of New York?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would have done just exactly what Governor Hughes did. I would call the attention of the legislature to the situation in our State. Acting here as a Representative from the State of New York in the United States Congress, it is my duty to act as such.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The duty of the governor of the State is to give such advice as he thinks for the best interest of the State, having in view the interest of the Nation as a whole.

Mr. FINLEY. How would the gentleman differentiate and how would he act as a Member of the Congress of the United States of America and as governor of New York? Would he take one position here and another position as governor of the State?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I voted as a Representative in Congress from the State of New York to submit that question to the States and would give——

Mr. FINLEY. How would you do as the governor of New York? Would you recommend that the legislature or the general assembly of the State of New York pass that amendment?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It seems to me that it is the duty of the governor of any State, New York, or any other State, on a question of that kind, where he is compelled by the constitution to call the attention of the legislature to the facts relating to legislation, about questions that they are to pass upon, to call their attention to the effect that the proposed constitutional amendment would have upon the securities of the State, and at the same time it seems to me——

Mr. FINLEY. Would the gentleman advocate the amendment, as governor of the State of New York in his message to the general assembly, or would he do otherwise?

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is absolutely a hypothetical question.

Mr. FINLEY. I think it is a practical question.

Mr. BENNET of New York. A gentleman's position here is a matter of record in relation to the amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. Would it not be a matter of record as governor of the State of New York?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The action of the governor of the State of New York is a matter of record.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. And the two persons are two distinct personalities, acting within their separate spheres, each as it seemed best, and as to the governor of the State, I think he acted correctly.

Mr. FINLEY. Is not this true: That the gentleman looking now from his seat as a Member of the Congress of the United States of America, he does not know what he would do were he governor of the State of New York, but he would do whatever best conserved the politics of his party in the premises? [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, no; the governor of the State of New York has the duty to do what is best for the people of his State, having always in view, of course, the best interests of the Nation as a whole.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, wherein does the duty of one citizen in doing the best for his country differ from his duty in another office in doing what is best for the interest of the Nation as a whole?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Because the two citizens act in different capacities. All States are not situated alike. There may be some States without any indebtedness. I trust there are.

Mr. HOWARD. Is this colloquy taken from Plato's Republic? [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is taken from FINLEY's time. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am content.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining of the allotment of four hours?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-three and one-half minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. I yield that time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD].

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address my remarks to-day to the general subject of our Forest Service, and in connection with that to speak more particularly of the service as administered in the Ozark National Forest, in Arkansas. I want to ask permission now to insert in connection with my remarks a letter from Associate Forester Price pertaining to the Ozark National Forest, and also a letter from Acting Secretary Moore, relating to the same subject. I ask this in justice to these gentlemen, as it is my purpose to comment upon the contents of both letters.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks leave to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the Forest Service is under the general supervision of the Department of Agriculture, and as I have the highest regard for the present Secretary of Agriculture, I want it understood in the outset of my remarks that my criticisms are directed solely against the Bureau of Forestry. The Agricultural Department in its general work is doing a great work for the American people. I have said often, in speeches elsewhere, and repeat here, that I believe that the Department of Agriculture, under the management of the Hon. James Wilson, is doing more to-day for the American people than any other department of this great Government.

In the northern part of my own State the Department of Agriculture is now carrying on a great work in an effort toward tick eradication. Under the work that has been done by this department along this line in the last two or three years, six counties have been released from quarantine. Last year two other counties, Benton and Washington, under the orders of the department, were permitted to ship out their cattle free, on inspection. This work has been worth thousands of dollars to the people of my section of the State. Also, I can not speak in too high terms of the excellent demonstration work that the Department of Agriculture has done in the treatment of diseases of fruit trees in the Ozark region; but I regret to say that there is one branch of the service under the immediate supervision of this department that does not meet with the approval of my people. I refer to the Forest Service; and I want to show you that in that locality there is a direct conflict between two bureaus—the Bureau of Forestry and the Bureau of Animal Industry—in the administration of the law. In the Ozark National Forest, which embraces the vast area of 1,663,300 acres of land, the Forestry Bureau has established certain regulations, one of which is to prevent the burning of the woods. In the counties of Washington, Madison, Newton, Searcy, Van Buren, Stone, and Baxter, located in this reserve, the Bureau of Animal Industry is carrying on a great work, the purpose of which is to exterminate the Texas cattle tick.

The Bureau of Animal Industry tell our people to burn the woods as a remedy against cattle ticks on open ranges. The forestry officers, operating in the same identical territory, by their regulations forbid burning the woods. Thus we have two different departments of this Government working at cross-purposes, each paid by public money. I think it is proper for us to inquire as to which one of these bureaus is doing good service to the people, and abolish the other.

But before going into further details in regard to the Ozark National Forest I want to submit a few brief observations in regard to the general Forest Service of the United States as at present administered. The rapid growth, development, and expansion of the Bureau of Forestry is astounding to me, and I believe a mere recital of a few plain facts of history, showing its present scope and its constantly increasing cost will astonish many other Members of this House. President Taft, in his message of January 14 last, in speaking of the extent of our forest reserves says:

> The forest reserves of the United States, some 190,000,000 acres in extent, are under the control of the Department of Agriculture, with authority adequate to preserve them and to extend their growth so far as that may be practicable. The importance of the maintenance of our forests can not be exaggerated. The possibility of a scientific treatment of forests so that they shall be made to yield a large return in timber without really reducing the supply has been demonstrated in other countries, and we should work toward the standard set by them as far as their methods are applicable to our conditions.

Thus it will be observed that nearly 200,000,000 acres of the public lands have been withdrawn from entry and are now included in forest reservations. This, too, notwithstanding the fact that our population is constantly increasing, our cities are crowded to overflowing, and food products to-day are so high that tens of thousands of our people are denied the ordinary comforts of American life in the use of customary foods. The price of meat has become so high that a silent boycott is now being carried on all over the country against the meat trust. People refuse to buy and eat meat on account of the high prices. I believe that millions of acres of land now embraced in these numerous forest reserves should be thrown open to settlement under the homestead laws, and unemployed people should be encouraged to leave our crowded cities and make homes and farms on every foot of the public lands that can be utilized for such purpose.

The Forest Service in the United States, to say the least of it, is only in an experimental stage, and I believe that the President has erred in creating so many of these forest reservations, and that the Congress has erred in making these enormous appropriations to maintain them. That brings me to the subject of these constantly increasing appropriations, and the constantly widening scope of this Forestry Bureau.

Section 24 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture act, and for other purposes," reads as follows:

> The President of the United States may, from time to time, set apart and reserve in any State having public land bearing forest on any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations, and the President shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof. (See Supp. Rev. Stat., 1901, vol. 2, p. 1534.)

In this act is found the authority for the establishment of all of these numerous forest reserves. From 1891, the date of the passage of that act, until 1903, the appropriations for the Forest Service were moderate. After that I desire to call your attention to some figures. In the act making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, approved March 3, 1903, the total appropriation for the Bureau of Forestry is $350,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, the total for Forestry Bureau is $425,140. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, the total appropriations for the Bureau of Forestry Service is $875,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, the total appropriations for the Forestry Bureau is $1,000,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, the total appropriation for the Forestry Service is $2,646,200. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, the total appropriation for the Forest Service is $3,896,200. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, the total appropriation for the Forest Service is $4,646,200. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, the agricultural bill passed by the House February 4, 1910, had a total appropriation for the Forest Service of $5,057,700.

Thus it will be seen that every succeeding year the appropriations for the Forest Service have more than doubled in some instances, and in most instances almost doubled.

Since the act was passed in 1891 authorizing the President to set apart forest reservations there have been, by executive order and proclamation, established 150 national forest reserves. Under the terms of the agricultural bill passed by the House a few days ago the average cost of maintaining each of these reserves is $33,718 a year. The total appropriation carried in the agricultural bill for this year as it passed the House is $13,330,276. Deducting from this the amount of $5,057,700, being the amount appropriated for the Forest Service alone, it leaves a balance of $8,272,576 to carry on all the other work of this great Department of Agriculture, which, to my mind, is of infinitely more importance and service to the people than the Forest Service.

I am aware that this is one of the progressive policies of President Roosevelt. I am aware that President Taft has in a way committed himself to it. I am aware that former President Roosevelt called a conference of governors of the States on the conservation of our resources, and many governors of the different States committed themselves to the conservation policies of the President. I am also aware that the Forester, Gifford Pinchot, published many books and pamphlets, and that his associates furnished editorials to the newspapers and magazines tending to popularize, and intended to popularize, this branch of the public service. That it has been popularized in the public mind I concede, and popularized, I fear, at the government expense and with public funds.

But nevertheless and notwithstanding, I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment there is no justification or excuse for the extravagant and constantly increasing appropriations from year to year to maintain the Bureau of Forestry. I believe that forest reservations have been multiplied unnecessarily, and as a result these growing appropriations have become burdensome to the people. Therefore I think that it is time for us to call a halt, retrace our steps, and abolish many of these reservations that were improvidently established.

Now, the distribution of these enormous sums appropriated from year to year is equally indefensible. Aside from the salaries for the head officials for the Forestry Bureau, and a few of their assistants and clerks, these appropriations have been made in a lump sum, to be disbursed by the Bureau of Forestry under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture. I here and now enter my protest against these extravagant appropriations to maintain the service and against the manner of their disbursement and against certain unwarranted purposes for which the public money has been expended. A most flagrant abuse was brought to light the other day when the Comptroller of the Treasury refused to pay the salary of 200 young men employed as forest rangers whom Mr. Pinchot has been sending to college at the public expense, in order that they might learn forestry. The Washington Times on January 20 published an article which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF PINCHOT'S PUPILS STOPPED—COMPTROLLER RULES RANGERS CAN NOT ATTEND COLLEGE ON UNCLE SAM.

Some 200 bright young men hired by Gifford Pinchot as forest rangers and sent to college to learn the business, will be informed when they attempt to collect their salaries next pay day that they can not be educated at the expense of the Government, and, furthermore, they can not draw salaries while they are learning the duties they were employed to perform. So the Comptroller of the Treasury decides in a decision announced to-day.

The rangers are attending the short courses at the University of Washington, the University of Montana, the Utah Agricultural College, and the University of Colorado.

The disbursing officers of the Forest Service have been instructed not to pay the salaries of these young men while they are attending the colleges, and the young men themselves have been informed that they will be expected to go to work for their living at the earliest possible moment.

Acting Forester McCabe is named as the person who discovered that the Forestry Bureau was carrying the names of 200 young students in forestry on the rolls as rangers while they were attending college. He wired disbursing officers to cut them off the rolls, and then reported the matter to the Secretary of Agriculture. Secretary Wilson could find no statute under which he was authorized to pay these young men, and asked the comptroller for advice.

Comptroller Tracewell announced his decision to-day. He says, in effect, that the grave doubts as to the legality of the payments that disturbed Mr. McCabe affect him also. In his search of the statutes he has been unable to find anything that authorizes such payments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not these forest rangers were paid mileage and per diem on their way from these western countries, where the forests are, to Washington to attend the schools?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I am not advised upon that point, and can not answer the question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman does not know who pays their expenses to and from Washington?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. No; I am not informed as to that.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. HAMMOND. I would like to inquire if the course of training or education given these young men was a general course in forestry, or was it a special course in training designed to fit them for the work for which the Government had employed them?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. In answer to that question I will state that my attention was brought to this matter only a few days ago, as it was brought to the attention of the public generally, and I have no means of information at hand which would answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I ask one further question? If it should develop that these young men were engaged in taking a special course of instruction fitting them for the work they were to do for the Government, not a general course in forestry at all, would not the gentleman think that his criticism would be unwarranted?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I would not. I do not believe that any officer of this Government, be he Forester or whatever position he may hold, has a right to educate any young man or young men at public expense to perform duties that he has hired them to perform, and that the public is led to believe they were qualified to perform under the law before they were employed. [Applause.] I must decline to yield further on that point.

I wish, now, to call attention more particularly to the Ozark National Forest and the rules and regulations administered therein, which I assume will furnish a fair illustration of what is being done in other reservations. Almost from the beginning of the service in the Ozark Reserve constant complaints have been made to me of the manner in which this service is administered. Strong protests have been made against certain annoying, useless, and vexatious regulations enforced therein, and the more serious complaint has been made that the forest officers, without excuse or justification, have caused many homestead entries, made prior to the establishment of the reserve, to be suspended or held up, and that the general attitude and conduct of forest rangers toward homesteaders is such as to discourage and prevent the making of new homesteads. In July of last year, during the extra session of Congress, in behalf of these complainants, I laid this whole matter personally before Mr. Pinchot, the then Chief Forester. He promised to investigate and report.

Later on Mr. Overton W. Price, the associate forester, whose letter I have already put in the RECORD, wrote to me pertaining to the subject-matter of my previous interview with Mr. Pinchot, in which the associate forester defends the course pursued by the local officers, and insists that the rules and regulations promulgated therein are proper and necessary, and incidentally sets out at some length the policy, object, and purposes sought to be accomplished by the Forestry Bureau. These rules and regulations now in force in the Ozark National Forest may be perfectly proper and salutary in other sections where conditions are somewhat different, but I submit when applied to the Ozark they are vexatious to the settler. In the first place much of the territory embraced in the Ozark Forest Reserve has long been partially settled, and most of the inhabitants who reside therein are old settlers and own their own lands. They are farmers, and stock raisers, and fruit growers, and generally men of moderate circumstances, or very poor. They have been accustomed from time immemorial to allow their stock to run on the range, and in order that the grass may be suitable for pasturage, it has been customary, and they insist it is necessary, to burn the woods each year.

If this is not done, the forest leaves cover the ground and prevent the proper growth of the grass. The regulations of the Forestry Bureau forbid the burning of woods, and at the same time require these farmers and settlers to pay for a grazing permit for all stock running at large in excess of the number fixed by the regulations. The Forestry Bureau places great stress upon the fact that they allow free grazing permits to bona fide settlers. I have been informed that before issuing so-called "free permits," they require the farmer or settler to sign a contract that he will aid the forest rangers in putting out forest fires. When there are a thousand inhabitants to one ranger, I suggest that the ranger gets decidedly the best of the bargain. As a lawyer I insist that a permit which exacts a service in consideration thereof is not in the strict sense a free permit at all.

The associate forester, in his letter, admits that the lands embraced in the Ozark National Forest are of great value for agricultural, including horticultural, purposes, and he insists that the Forestry Bureau encourages the homesteading of these lands.

This is denied by the settlers who reside in the reservation, and I have reason to believe, and do believe, that in spite of the protestations of the associate forester to the contrary, that the policies pursued by the forest rangers, who are the local agents of the department on the ground, do discourage, impede, and prevent further settlement of the region by the homesteaders.

In many communities this remarkable condition exists. Only a small portion of the lands embraced in a given area are public lands. The great body of the lands are privately owned, and now and then there is a segregated body of 40 or 80 or 120 acres of public land, and in order to include these isolated tracts of government land within the reserve they have extended the boundaries around great bodies of land owned privately. In some instances these privately owned lands are rich bottom lands, have been settled and cultivated and owned privately for sixty or seventy years, and yet they are included in the boundaries of this Ozark Reservation and the rules and regulations of the Forest Service are imposed upon the owners thereof and settlers generally. Such a condition is not only unwarranted in law, but it is unjustifiable, inexcusable, and ridiculous.

Now, what do these rangers and other forest officers do? What is the purpose of this Forest Service? What are their policies? My people complained, and I went to the Forest Bureau for information. Such as I received I furnished to the House to-day. Now listen to this extract from the associate forester's letter, which is already placed in the RECORD:

I want to assure you, further, that the Forest Service is most decidedly interested in the development of the country. An effort is now being made to interest hard-wood-using industries in the immense stands of hard woods in Arkansas. If such industries can be introduced, it will mean not only an increase in the value of federal holdings, but also a decided increase in the value of private timber lands.

Also, in the same letter, speaking of selling and cutting timber, he says:

The Forest Service will sell timber which has become matured in order to prevent its waste and also to provide for future crops. The amount in each case will depend upon the wishes of the purchasers and the needs of the community in which it is to be sold, and will be limited only by the capacity of the forest.

If the chief object in establishing forest reservations is to prevent a monopoly of timber lands, and thus and thereby conserve our timber resources, I fail to see the wisdom of the law which permits the forester to cut and sell this timber and thereby deplete and destroy instead of preserving the forest. I charge that this is the avowed policy of the Forestry Department as at present administered.

I would like to know if there is any man on this floor who can justify such a policy on the part of a public officer? It seems to me that the true policy of the Government should be to protect our timber resources, in order to hold down prices, so as to give the people generally the advantage of cheaper timber. I saw the other day where the Lumberman's Association had indorsed the former Chief Forester, Mr. Pinchot, and his policies. What lumberman would not? Under the general laws of the United States, made to protect our timber, no lumberman or citizen is allowed to purchase timber cut from the public domain, but inside of a forest reservation the forest officers may sell it. And how much may they sell? What is the avowed policy? The amount they may sell "will be limited only," says the associate forester, "by the capacity of the forest." If this is the policy that is contemplated by the Forest Service, then I deny the claim that they have been making that their purpose is to preserve the timber resources of this country.

The Forest Service as administered in the Ozark National Forest, while an annoyance to the people residing therein, is of no profit to the Government and, in my opinion, can never be made so. Upon this point I wish to give you a concrete illustration, based on actual facts, to show how the Ozark National Forest as a business proposition does not pay. The agricultural bill as it passed the House a few days ago carried an appropriation of $32,960 for the Arkansas National Forest and of $29,961 for the Ozark National Forest, making a total of $62,921 appropriated for maintenance of these two reserves located in Arkansas. I think I may fairly assume, and for the sake of illustration and argument I do assume, that the cost of maintenance last year was the same as that now carried in the agricultural bill. The total revenues derived from these two reserves last year—which I take to include fees charged for grazing permits and also moneys received from the sales of timber—are shown in a letter addressed to me by Mr. Willis L. Moore, Acting Secretary, dated August 31, 1909, and which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., August 31, 1909.

Hon. JOHN C. FLOYD, Yellville, Ark.

DEAR MR. FLOYD: The agricultural appropriation act for 1909, approved May 23, 1908, provides as follows:

"That hereafter 25 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1908, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the state or territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated: Provided, That when any forest reserve is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said reserve shall be proportional to its area therein."

Pending settlement by the Secretary of the Treasury and determination of the exact distributive share of the State of Arkansas, the following report from the records of the Forest Service will show you the net receipts from the national forests in your State during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1908, and ending June 30, 1909, and the approximate (but perhaps not the exact) amount due under the terms of the act just quoted:

Arkansas	$4,948.08
Ozark	1,398.90
Total	6,346.98
Twenty-five per cent	1,586.74

It gives me great pleasure to notify you of this direct contribution of the national forests to the schools and roads in the counties of your State in which the forests lie.

Very sincerely, yours,

WILLIS L. MOORE,
Acting Secretary.

Thus, it will be observed that by an expenditure of $62,921 in maintaining the Arkansas and Ozark national forests the Government has derived revenues therefrom, from all sources, of $6,346.98, of which amount $1,586.74 has been paid to the State, leaving a small balance of $4,760.34 to the credit of the Federal Government. If this is a fair sample of the profits of the Forest Service, as at present administered, I submit in all seriousness that it is time for Congress and the country to cease to look upon the Forest Service as a revenue-producing branch of the public service, and to so modify and amend our present laws as to let the Forester go out of the business of selling grazing permits and cutting and selling timber off of the public lands.

Let us consider the Ozark separately, for that is the one I am specially interested in; 1,663,300 acres are embraced within its broad area, and yet the total receipts amounted to $1,398.90. Under the law 25 per cent of this amount goes to the State. Deducting the amount that goes to the State, we find by an expenditure by the Federal Government of more than $29,000 to maintain this service we have derived a revenue of a little over $1,000; and the claim often made that the Forest Service can be made to become a revenue-producing service falls to the ground. Now, if this is a fair illustration of the administration of the Forest Service throughout the country, I repeat that it is time for the Congress to repeal the laws now in force and let the Forester out of the lumber business; put a stop to his selling grazing permits and cutting and selling government timber on the specious pretense that it is protecting the forests, when in reality such a policy will result inevitably in the destruction of our forests. [Applause.]

Being convinced that the Ozark National Forest is of no benefit to the people and its maintenance a useless expense to the Government, I have to-day introduced a bill to abolish the Ozark Reserve.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What did they do with the $29,000?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. No living man on this earth that I have conferred with has been able to tell me. I do not know. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What kind of control, in fact, do they undertake to exercise over the farms of Tom, Dick, and Harry that are inside of the lines of the reservation?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I am glad the gentleman asked me the question. I will take pleasure in explaining it. They have a regulation that forbids the settler or anyone else from allowing their stock to run upon the range above a certain number fixed by the regulations, and if the farmer who lives within that territory and owns his own land permits his stock to run upon the range, although there may be only one 40 acres of public land to a thousand acres of privately owned land, they compel the farmer in that territory to conform to these regulations; and if he violates them they hold him responsible for the violation of these sacred laws that they have instituted for the government of the people down there.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact also that there is a conflict between two departments of the Government in this; that they are not permitted to burn off these forest reservations by this department under Mr. Pinchot, while under the Animal Bureau, to protect the people from the fever ticks, and so forth, they are required to burn it off? What does the gentleman know about that?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I think I have stated that in my previous remarks.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I was not in.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas (continuing). And explained it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is that true?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. It is. Both of these bureaus are at work in the northern part of Arkansas. The Bureau of Animal Industry is engaged in a most laudable and praiseworthy effort to stamp out the cattle ticks in the counties of Washington, Madison, Baxter, and others in the Ozark Forest Reserve, and yet the Bureau of Animal Industry have issued a bulletin advising people, as a remedy to destroy ticks in open ranges, to burn the open woods, while the regulations of the Forest Service forbid it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can the gentleman inform us, then, which bureau prevailed?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I think the Forestry Bureau prevailed. Here is what the associate forester says on that point. He seems, in his letter to me, to have anticipated that very question. He seems to have realized the force of such objection, and he says:

The question of eradicating the Texas-fever tick is, I realize, of the greatest importance. Investigation by the Bureau of Animal Industry, however, has shown that cattle which are raised in a tick-infested country as a rule are immune. The Farmers' Bulletin No. 258, of the United States Department of Agriculture, "Texas or tick fever and its prevention," indicates that the range can not be cleared entirely of fever ticks by burning unless the tick-infested cattle are kept off the burnt-over area. This, of course, is impossible in an open range.

He knows they are working at cross purposes with this other bureau, and he tries to justify it, but such an explanation is entirely unsatisfactory to me, and it will be entirely unsatisfactory to anyone who has given any study whatever to the question of the effect the fever tick has upon the cattle of the country. Experts have demonstrated that it not only kills cattle in some cases, but even where they are immune it prevents their growth and development.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas how this forest reserve was acquired. Was it segregated from the government land or was land purchased for the establishment?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I will take pleasure in answering the question. It was established in 1908 by executive order of President Roosevelt, and it extended over a vast area, covering in whole or in part thirteen or fourteen counties in the State, entirely ignoring the fact that hundreds of people had settled therein, acquired titles to their lands, and lived within those boundaries. Of course there is some public land within those boundaries, but they never purchased an acre of ground from any settler. On the contrary, if complaints made to me are true, these forest officers—and I have letters received only yesterday stating it—these forest officers have been and now are interfering with bona fide settlers, holding up their claims, causing cancellations, or seeking to do so, in order that they may enlarge the area of government lands within that territory.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in what the gentleman says, for the reason that they are attempting now to establish a forest reserve in Oklahoma, in my district, and in order to establish that forest reserve it will be necessary to buy 1,373,000 acres, which will cost seven or eight million dollars.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Not at all. If they do as they did in Arkansas, they will come down and take it. [Laughter.]

Now, a word as to the law. I will quote the statute and put it into the RECORD. I insist and assert that the mountain lands, the high table-lands of the Ozark or Boston Mountain Range, in which is included the body of this reservation, are fine agricultural lands, and as fruit lands they are of exceeding great value. The Boston Mountains spread out in a level plateau of 2,000 feet above sea level, and of varying width, from 1 to 35 miles. It has been demonstrated that on the top of this mountain range are the finest fruit lands of any in Arkansas, and Arkansas has acquired the reputation of being one of the finest apple-growing States in this Union.

Well, now, horticulture is included in agriculture. All products produced from the soil by way of crops are embraced in the broad term "agriculture." I assert that these are agricultural lands, and so asserting I insist and contend that the President of the United States had no right, under the law, to include them within a forest reserve. To do so was a plain violation of the legislative intent as expressed by the statute now upon the statute books.

Now, what did Congress say in providing for the establishment of these reservations? I will not read the entire provision of the law, just the last part. It goes on and provides how they may be established and what may be included, and then it declares in unequivocal terms the intent of Congress by saying:

> But it is not the purpose or intent of these provisions or of the act to provide for such reserves to authorize the inclusion therein of lands more valuable for the minerals thereunder or for agricultural purposes than for forest purposes.

Now, the lands that have been included in this Ozark reserve under that rule far exceed in value for agricultural purposes any value that they now possess, or ever could possess, for timber purposes. A part of Washington County is included in this reserve. Washington County, Mr. Chairman, is the university county of the State, and yet they have a large portion of it in the forest reserve; and if they had extended a few miles farther north they would have taken in the state university.

I contend that it can be established beyond controversy that the great body of the lands embraced in the Ozark National Forest are agricultural lands and that their value for agriculture and horticultural purposes far exceeds their value as timber lands. If this be true, then the President in establishing the Ozark Reserve clearly disregarded the legislative intent of Congress, as defined and set out in the statute just cited. If the President, from insufficient information or from misinformation furnished him by his subordinates, has been led into the error of establishing forest reservations on lands which, under plain provisions of the law, should be excluded therefrom, that of itself, in my opinion, affords a sufficient reason to warrant Congress to abolish any such reserve.

The Ozark National Forest embraces the Boston Mountain Range, which is a spur of the Ozarks, but is not confined thereto, for it embraces other lands lying adjacent thereto, in which are rich valleys of farm lands which have been owned privately and cultivated since the earliest settlement of the country. The Boston Mountains continue in an unbroken range from a point in Washington County where the Illinois River cuts through a low gap and flows westward into Oklahoma for about 125 miles to a point near Leslie, Ark., where the Red River finds its outlet through a gorge in the mountains and flows eastward to the lowlands of the Mississippi Valley. The country is well watered; the climate is healthy and salubrious. These lands are fair agricultural lands, and will produce corn, cotton, wheat, oats, tobacco, and other farm products grown in that latitude. They are especially adapted to vegetables and horticulture.

Northwest Arkansas has gained a reputation, and justly so, of being one of the finest fruit regions in the United States. While a great variety of fruit is produced there, its soil and climate are especially adapted to the apple, and it has become popularly called "the land of big red apples." But I want to say that I have been over this apple and fruit section of the State repeatedly from my earliest boyhood and that, in my judgment, there are no finer fruit lands in the State than the north slopes and high table-lands of the Boston Mountains. In the south part of Washington County, where the quality of these mountain lands has been tested with reference to fruit growing by the planting of commercial orchards, it has been demonstrated that they are not surpassed in productive value as fruit lands by any lands in northwest Arkansas. These lands devoted to practical fruit raising will far exceed in productive value the rich alluvial lands of the Mississippi Delta. In the counties of Benton and Washington, which are almost exclusively devoted to fruit raising, and where the fruit industry is highly developed and where the orchards are scientifically cared for, the owners of orchards, any average fruit year, realize $100 per acre off of their apple crop, selling their apples on trees. The buyer pays all expense of gathering.

I think you will agree with me that a vast region of territory, embracing several hundred thousand acres of land equally adapted by soil, climate, altitude, and other conditions to fruit growing, but not developed as fruit lands, simply because remote from transportation, ought not to be included in a forest reservation. Not only the spirit but the plain letter of the law is disregarded when lands such as I have described and such as I know the Ozark table-lands to be are included in any such reservation.

As a last and final argument for the abolishment of the Ozark National Forest, I submit that it is of no benefit whatever to the people affected thereby or to the people generally. To maintain such reserve may be of benefit to the numerous stave mills, sawmills, spoke factories, hub factories, barrel factories, and other hard-wood using industries located along the line of the Missouri and North Arkansas Railroad, and probably is a benefit to these concerns in two ways; it may have already enhanced the value of their private timber lands, and when they have used up their own timber it will enable them, if they so desire, to purchase timber cut from the reserve and sold by the forest officers.

It is not my purpose to assail any sound policy looking to the conservation of our forests. On the contrary, I am a strong believer in the proposition that our forests should be protected and conserved by proper laws looking to their preservation. But I think that the policies of the Forestry Bureau, as outlined and set forth in the associate forester's letter, are a sham, a pretense, and a fraud, and if followed will result in the rapid depletion and destruction of our forests rather than their preservation. How much timber does he propose to sell? That will depend upon the wishes of the purchasers and will be limited only by the capacity of the forests. To whom does he propose to sell it? To local people according to their needs? Ah, no. At the very time he was penning his letter he tells us that an effort was being made by the Forestry Bureau to induce hard-wood using industries to come into the immense stands of hard wood in Arkansas. If success accompanied such efforts and such concerns could be induced to come in, what would be the result? Listen! It would not only increase the value of federal holdings, but also enhance the value of privately owned timber lands. And that, too, by that bureau whose former chief was the sworn enemy of land grabbers, timber speculators, and corporations seeking to acquire titles to the public lands. Further comment is unnecessary. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that I may have leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

APPENDIX.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, August 6, 1909.

HON. JOHN C. FLOYD,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. FLOYD: In accordance with the promise in my letter of July 13, I am very glad indeed to take up further with you the administration of the national forests in Arkansas. As you know, there are at the present time two forests in the State, the Arkansas, with an area of approximately 1,663,300 acres, situated in Sebastian, Scott, Logan, Yell, Perry, Saline, Garland, Montgomery, Pike, Polk, and Howard counties. At the present time Supervisor S. J. Record, with headquarters at Mena, Ark., is in charge. The Ozark, situated in Crawford, Washington, Madison, Franklin, Johnson, Newton, Pope, Van Buren, Conway, Searcy, Marion, Baxter, Stone, and Cleburne counties, has an area of 1,526,481 acres. This forest is in charge of Supervisor D. E. Fitton, with headquarters at Harrison.

It is of course needless for me to take up with you the character of the land and timber included in these forests, since you are as familiar as I am with the areas, or even more so. It is also needless for me to outline the main consideration of the Forest Service in the administration of these lands, which is the best good to the greatest number of people. It is the plan of the Forest Service, under existing laws and regulations, or the modifications of existing regulations wherever necessary, to put all land included within the forest to the best possible use, and this I am sure you will agree will result in the end in the greatest amount of good to the people interested and to the counties and to the State.

While much of the timber in the Arkansas forests is at the present time comparatively inaccessible, it will within a few years be exceedingly valuable because of the exhaustion of the timber supply in other parts of Arkansas and neighboring States. The preservation of this timber and its management according to a systematic plan is bound, therefore, to aid materially in the development of central and western Arkansas. In the management of the timber it is the plan of the Forest Service to conduct cuttings so that unnecessary waste will be prevented and to provide for the maximum amount of the best kinds of timber in the future.

SALE OF TIMBER.

The Forest Service will sell timber which has become matured, in order to prevent its waste and also to provide for future crops. The amount in each case will depend upon the wishes of purchasers and the needs of the community in which it is to be sold, and will be limited only by the capacity of the forest. When residents in the forests need green timber for improvements and have not a sufficient supply upon their own lands, it may be obtained in reasonable amounts under free use from forest officers. If actually needed for domestic use, dead timber and pine knots may hereafter be taken without permit. Timber so taken may not, however, be sold.

Mr. Pinchot's notes of his conversation with you state that local officers have not administered the forests in accordance with the Use Book. Such violations have not, however, been previously reported to this office or to the district office at Albuquerque. Field examinations by members of the district office, moreover, have failed to disclose any such violations. Certain modifications have, however, been made since the publication of the Use Book, which would not ordinarily be distributed to others than forest officers. Practically all of these, I assure you, which would materially affect the people in Arkansas have been changes toward a more liberal administration of forest lands. For instance, settlers in or near national forests in Arkansas, because of different conditions, have been allowed during the present year to graze under free permit up to 25 head of cattle or horses, 50 hogs, or 75 sheep or goats. A still further modification in allowing the grazing of the above number of stock free of charge and without permit of any kind is now being seriously considered. You will be interested to know, I am sure, that this year on the Arkansas forest there are only 7 paid permits out of a total of approximately 2,000, and on the Ozark only 35 paid permits out of approximately 2,600. Because of the additions of last spring it is possible that the number of paid permits next year may be doubled. The new plan, you will see, works almost no hardship on the people, is very little further restriction than they have been used to, and requires payment only from those who are best able to pay. You are possibly well aware that the requirements of free permits under the prescribed limits has been the cause of more or less complaint, due mainly, I am sure, to a misunderstanding of the regulations.

I want to take up rather fully with you the position which the Forest Service has taken in preventing fires in the Arkansas forests. Old residents of the Ozark Mountain region acknowledge that the grazing in early days was much better than at the present time, after years of burning. It is an acknowledged fact that repeated burning damages the roots of the grass and causes a deterioration of the soil. Old residents of the mountain region also acknowledge that in early days the woods were much more open than at the present time. Fires kill back young trees and cause a great increase in the number of sprouts from the base of the stem. After the sprouting is once started, it takes repeated fires to keep the woods open. If fires are kept out, the woods will of course be dense for a comparatively short time, but after a few years will be open, as in the early days. The people of the mountain region, as you know, place a great deal of importance upon the open woods. I am convinced from the reports which I have received from officers who have gone into the situation thoroughly that the damage to the timber by repeated fires is much underestimated. Even though the woods are burned over annually and the amount of litter and debris which accumulates is very small, the slight fires which occur scar the butts of even the large trees, rots enter, and the trees become defective. An examination of areas burned over repeatedly shows that such areas contain extremely defective timber. Lumbermen in both the Ozark and Arkansas forests acknowledge this fact, and, in general, are opposed to burning the woods. In this connection we should carefully consider the fact that the hard-wood trees, many of which are not now of value, are bound to be valuable in a few years, when the existing supply of more valuable species and accessible timber has been exhausted.

The question of eradicating the Texas-fever tick is, I realize, of the greatest importance. Investigations by the Bureau of Animal Industry, however, have shown that cattle which are raised in a tick-infested country are, as a rule, immune. Farmers' Bulletin 258 of the United States Department of Agriculture, "Texas or tick fever and its prevention," indicates that the range can not be cleared entirely of fever ticks by burning unless tick-infested cattle are kept off from the burned-over areas. This, of course, is impossible in the open range.

One of the most important questions on both the Arkansas forests is that of listing lands under the act of June 11, the forest-homestead act. In examining lands applied for under this act forest officers consider the value of the land for all phases of agriculture, including horticulture. I can assure you that forest officers are taking into full consideration the fact that the lands on top of the mountain ranges are often the most valuable lands, from an agricultural standpoint. In order that the work may be kept up to date, specialists are sent whenever the amount of work is too great to be handled by local officers. One such specialist spent the greater part of last winter making examinations in Arkansas. At the present time on the Ozark Forest applications for 35 forest homesteads have been received which have not yet been examined. Practically all of these applications have been received within the present calendar year. Efforts are now being made to secure special land examiners in Arkansas. In addition, I am informed by the district office at Albuquerque that in order to make a thorough study of the best policy to be followed in recommending lands for listing efforts will soon be made to secure the services of an expert, who, preferably, has some knowledge of forestry, and is connected with an agricultural college in the South and thus knows southern conditions.

It has been the policy of the Forest Service throughout to disregard many of the minor violations of the laws and regulations, such, for instance, as the cutting of very small amounts of timber for sale on unpatented homestead claims before the creation of the forest until the people can become more used to the new requirements.

I want to assure you further that the Forest Service is most decidedly interested in the development of the country. An effort is now being made to interest hard-wood-using industries in the immense stands of hard woods in Arkansas. If such industries can be introduced, it will mean not only an increase in the value of the federal holdings, but also a decided increase in the value of private timber lands.

The allotment for the Ozark National Forest for the present fiscal year provides for 13 field men, including a supervisor, who spends approximately one-half his time in the field, studying on the ground the work which his rangers are doing. It has, however, been rather difficult to secure, at the salaries we can pay, men of requisite ability, and only 11 of these men are now actually employed. The appointment of 2 additional men is expected daily. During the last fiscal year 11 men, including the supervisor, were used in the forest work on the Ozark. It is barely possible that we should have an additional number of men during the present year, but a special effort has been made to provide for the greatest possible number of men, because of the peculiar necessity for keeping the work up to date on the Arkansas forests. Outside of the forest homestead and claims work there is comparatively little at the present time to occupy the attention of forest officers, so that this work is being pushed to the utmost. On July 10 there were only 31 claims on the Arkansas awaiting action, and this, considering the large number of claims in the forest, is, I am sure you will agree, an excellent showing.

As you know, the work in Arkansas is very new and some of the men have not had all of the experience that they should have. It is possible that some of them have made mistakes, and it is also possible that occasionally a man has been overzealous in his attempts to enforce the law. I am confident, however, that homesteaders who have acted in entire good faith and complied with the law have in no case been interfered with. Doubtful cases probably have been held up until we could get at the facts, but no longer. Those who have not complied with the law have no reason to complain if action in their cases has been held up. It has been and is now our policy to cause the least possible trouble to claimants. At the present time when a homestead claim is about to go to patent the Forest Service is notified to this effect by the Land Office. Forest officers are directed to investigate. If there has been substantial compliance with the law no report is made by forest officers to chiefs of field division. Even if there has not been substantial compliance with the law, forest officers will make no report unless passage to patent of the claim is a distinct detriment to the Forest Service in its conservation policy. When, however, there is some doubt about compliance with the law and the passage to patent of the claim would be a distinct detriment to national forest interests, a careful report showing the necessary facts is prepared by the forest officers and submitted without recommendation of any kind through the district office at Albuquerque to a chief of field division of the General Land Office. Forest officers may act as witnesses if a hearing is ordered by the Land Office, but claims are not canceled without the hearing until the claimant has had an opportunity to apply for this privilege. Forest officers have been directed to assist to the utmost claimants who have attempted to comply with the law and who have acted in good faith. No attempt will be made by the Forest Service to take advantage of a technicality in defeating a claim if the claimant has shown good faith and compiled with the law.

The Forest Service appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, included an appropriation of $600,000 for permanent improvements. Of this amount $3,568.75 was expended on the Arkansas and $2,825.33 on the Ozark National Forest. During the present fiscal year $4,758 of the $600,000 appropriation will be expended on the Arkansas and $4,400 on the Ozark, the increase in amount in each case being due to the additions to the forests. This amount is being used in the construction of administrative headquarters, telephone lines for the better administration of the forests, and roads and trails for better communication. The roads and trails particularly are of the greatest benefit to the people, and this has been shown by willingness to cooperate in both their construction and maintenance.

As you know, the administration of the Ozark Forest is very new. The administration has been very much of an innovation and a decided departure from existing conditions. As such it is obvious that there will be more or less opposition. There is much less opposition now, I am convinced, than when the people first felt the full force of the regulations. It is reasonably sure that the sentiment regarding the national forests is much better where forest users come into close contact with the forest officers. It has not been possible until the 1st of July to place under administration the addition to the Ozark National Forest of 608,537 acres. About one-half of the national-forest area of Van Buren County is included within the recent addition. This may account for a large part of the complaints which are being received from that region. I am sure that as soon as the people in Van Buren County fully understand what the Forest Service is attempting to do that the number of complaints will be very much less.

I am calling the condition to the attention of the local forest officers, however, in order that prompt action may be taken if there is ground for discontent. Since I want to find it out if things are wrong, I shall greatly appreciate it if you will send to me for investigation all the complaints which you receive, either from this region or from other parts of the forest.

I have taken up the questions relating to the national forest administration at great length because of your interest in the matter and because I want you to understand fully what the Forest Service is trying to do and the methods it is following. It will be a great pleasure, indeed, to write you further about any points not now clear or about any points which may be brought up in the future, either by your constituents or others. If at any time you should care to make a personal investigation of our work in Arkansas, I shall be glad, indeed, to direct some of the members from the Albuquerque office or of the local force in Arkansas to accompany you.

Very sincerely, yours, OVERTON W. PRICE,
Associate Forester.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FASSETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18282) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1910, and for other purposes, and had further insisted upon its amendment, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4654. An act to prevent trespassers or intruders from entering the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 19399) to extend the time for the completion of bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., by the St. Louis Electric Bridge Company.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further debate the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, severally appropriated, in full compensation for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word, and asks unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PERKINS. I think I have no possible objection, because I believe the gentleman has something to offer that will be pertinent to the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I mean to discuss the diplomatic service. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State has this year paid us an unusual compliment. He has inserted in the hearings which were had before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, an annual report, so to speak, of the conduct of the Department of State. I have always felt that the Secretary should make such a report, as does the Cabinet minister in charge of all other departments. This would relieve the President's message of a good deal of its bulk, and would fix responsibility more clearly where it belongs. I have always wished also that we had the British system of Cabinet ministers appearing personally in the House to make their statements and to challenge debate. In default of that, I venture to offer a few criticisms upon this report made by the Secretary of State.

In each one of the subjects which he discusses his motives were of the worthiest and his purposes of the highest, and setting aside a few paragraphs which some would criticise as jejune and sophomoric language, I think the Secretary in the main has done himself proud by his report; at least credit to his heart, if not always to his head.

But in two respects at least he has given an illustration of the cardinal fact that in diplomacy nothing succeeds like success, and success is the only justification for an audacious stand. This was certainly true of President Cleveland's Venezuela message. It is unfortunately not true of the positions taken by our administration in the Nicaraguan embroglio and in the abortive Manchurian Railway matter.

In the Nicaraguan affair the Secretary of State gave to the world an official communication in which he stated in substance that our Government would find it its duty to see that democratic forms of government were maintained in the Central American States. This threatened interference in their domestic affairs has aroused suspicion in all Latin America. This position, moreover, is utterly untenable, and we will upon some future occasion be required to retire therefrom with haste and mortification. That is all the Federal Government is obliged to see, even as to the constitutions of the States which are members of this Union, and far from being willing to consider the Central American States as members of this Union, upon one occasion at least in our history we specifically refused to admit them when they applied.

As to the Manchurian Railway matter, Secretary Knox no doubt had in mind the prior note of Secretary of State Hay, in which was laid down the policy of the open door in China, and which I can safely say prevented the immediate partition of China by the greedy powers of Europe.

But what did Mr. Knox do? He occupied a bold and advanced position, but untenable, because he met with a flat refusal from all the powers interested. He proposed that the railways of Manchuria should be neutralized, should be purchased and turned over to China; but he met with a refusal from Russia and Japan and other powers interested—a humiliating check for American diplomacy which can not fail to impair our prestige abroad.

But one matter he does not discuss in his report, which seems to me to be pertinent to the appropriation of salaries of ambassadors. I refer to the obvious difficulty to-day of securing men of proper character and ability to serve this country abroad. For example, take the question of the French mission. For many months that embassy was vacant, until a man of proper caliber was obtained for the post. Take the Austrian mission. After long delay a man has been sent at last to Austria, who, to judge by the articles in the daily press, is measured as to his services chiefly by the size of his campaign contributions.

Take the case of the English mission. After this has been publicly declined by a noted educator, it has been offered by the newspapers to men in every rank of life, and has been treated as a football by newspaper editors.

How unfortunate this situation is may be judged when it appeared in a New York newspaper yesterday that the situation had tapered down to Mr. Paul Morton. He was nominated for the embassy to England by a New York newspaper, which hastened to add that developments had occurred in the last week which made it imperative to appoint a successor to Mr. Reid. Why, if Mr. Morton, with his record as a repeated, self-confessed violator of the law, is to be an ambassador to Great Britain, it will become patent to all the world that the path of the rebater is to lead to the foot of the throne.

Take, again, the mission to China. After this had been offered to at least a dozen American citizens, the very unfortunate Crane incident came about. I need not enter into this, as it is so well known to all the members of the committee, but it certainly does not enhance the dignity of the American diplomatic service.

Why is it that it is so difficult to secure men for the diplomatic service to-day? In my opinion, at least, largely because the ocean cable has destroyed diplomacy. To-day ambassadors are too often messenger boys in silk knee breeches, with toy swords, who spend their whole time either being photographed as the hosts of royalty or chanting the monotonous and sometimes nauseating song of "Hands Across the Sea."

Now, to a real, active, virile man, such a position would be intolerable, and the consequence is that it is very difficult to get substantial and responsible Americans to take these positions abroad. They would rather stay here and attend to their own business affairs. Sometimes, indeed, loaded down with honors in the evening of life, an American may consent thus to pass his declining years in the best society of Europe. But that in itself is not sufficient to appeal to all Americans.

I see, however, that into this atmosphere of stagnation and decay there has come a breath of fresh air for which Secretary Knox appears to be responsible.

This is what is now referred to as "dollar diplomacy." That seems to mean that the Secretary of State is going hereafter to value our foreign representatives by the cash amount of trade which they can bring into American business coffers.

[The time of Mr. HARRISON having expired, by unanimous consent his time was extended three minutes.]

This dollar diplomacy, no doubt, will cause a thrill of horror in the minds of those of our ambassadors abroad who spend their days entirely in the society of aristocrats where the mere mention of trade is vulgar. To those of our foreign representatives whose evening are spent "galling the kibe of the courtiers," a shudder of dismay will proceed upon the adoption of the new dollar diplomacy, but to every American citizen who has traveled abroad and who values at its present worth the American diplomatic service, it will come as a matter of rejoicing that at last some real work is to be given to American diplomats, so that they may earn the respect and regard of their contemporaries and the salaries which we are now called upon to vote them. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to enter into any prolonged debate on the questions suggested by my colleague from New York, and in many of his views I entirely concur; and for the reason that I do in some, I feel bound to express my dissent in others.

So far as the hope expressed, if it was expressed in those words, that a republican form of government should be established and insured in the Central American States, or some of them, I confess my hopes are no more sanguine than are those of my colleague from New York. What the future may have in store no person can say, and I doubt if conditions there are such at present that anyone with any reasonable hope can look for the establishment of a form of government that deserves the name of a republic.

On the other hand, I do not agree with my friend in his criticism of the policy of the Secretary of State in reference to endeavors to open trade in the East. Certainly the worst policy—the policy that is least effective—in pushing American wares, in extending American influence, is the policy that does nothing. It is better to endeavor to extend the influence of the country in certain branches here and there, even though it may not always be successful, than to sit in the State Department at Washington and leave the world outside to wag its way.

I doubt if the prestige of the United States was in any way injured by the endeavors made in reference to the Manchurian Railway. If nothing is accomplished now no one can say what may be accomplished in the future. I wish to call my friend's attention to the fact in reference to the Chinese loan, for instance, which certainly has an indirect value not to be underestimated, that there were rebuffs and rebukes, but finally American capital had its certain part in that loan, and the value of that, I think, we will all agree to.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the gentleman aware of the negotiations surrounding the securing of that Manchurian railway loan among the bankers of my city in which certain bankers prominently mentioned as being connected with the money trust had the right of way, and other bankers were entirely excluded from sharing in the loan?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, we will not go into the details of that now, but if we are going to send American money around the world to exert American influence, we have got to take any sort of American money; we can not say that American money shall be of no value furnished by some people, and shall be of a value when furnished by others.

Mr. HARRISON. That is exactly what I claim.

Mr. PERKINS. The money was furnished by the great business interests. Now, as to the foreign ambassadors I agree that the compensation is too small. I hope the gentleman will support the bill which the committee has reported, authorizing from time to time the purchase of embassies, and I think he will find that the indisposition to accept these offices is because the compensation is so insufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chargés d'affaires ad interim, $40,000; total, $550,500.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making an inquiry. I ask the chairman of the committee having this legislation in charge if this bill carries any appropriation or provision for the purchase or the acquisition of sites for legations and embassies in the capital cities of the world?

Mr. PERKINS. It does not. The committee has reported a separate bill for that purpose. There is no appropriation of that kind in this bill.

Mr. SULZER. In this connection I just want to say that I am in favor of the Government buying and owning in all foreign countries suitable residences for its ministers and ambassadors. I hope the plan will be adopted by the committee and carried out in a separate bill. I understand there is such a bill. Am I correct?

Mr. PERKINS. There is, and I hope the gentleman will support it.

Mr. SULZER. I certainly will. Has the bill been reported?

Mr. PERKINS. It has been reported from the committee.

Mr. SULZER. I am very glad to know that, and I trust the bill will soon pass and become a law. In my judgment it will be wise, economical, and democratic for us to adopt a plan sufficiently comprehensive in scope to enable the Government gradually to buy suitable official residences, or buy a site and build on it a suitable official residence, for its representatives in foreign countries. It can be done gradually and along safe and economical lines. It may take ten or twenty years, but ultimately it will be accomplished, and then this great Republic will own in its own name, furnished and complete, with the flag of our country forever floating above it—a harbor of refuge to all—a legation, or an embassy, in foreign countries commensurate with its dignity and importance; and then, and not till then, will brains and fitness instead of wealth and position be the qualifications for appointment in the American diplomatic service. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey and any other language that may be deemed necessary by the Department of State, with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey, at $1,000 each, $10,000: Provided, That said student interpreters shall be chosen in such manner as will make the selections nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as interpreter to the embassy and consulates in Turkey so long as his said services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to inquire, first, how many languages it is necessary to have these student interpreters learn?

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order on the entire paragraph?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order on that language in the paragraph beginning with the word "and," at the end of line 16, down to the word "State" in line 18.

Mr. MANN. That covers the same thing. That is what I want to ask about. How many languages is it necessary for these student interpreters to learn?

Mr. PERKINS. They can profitably, in almost all those eastern countries, be familiarized with two languages. Some of them are sent to Persia and some to places where Arabic is used. Certainly as long as we pay these young men and take care of them we may just as well make them learn two languages as one.

Mr. MANN. That may be the case. I can see a great deal of force in that proposition.

Mr. PERKINS. That is about the size of it.

Mr. MANN. That might be true, but there is no limitation here. I notice the cost of these student interpreters is gradually increasing. A few years ago we were told if we would pay a moderate amount for them per month or per year that would be sufficient. Now we are asked to pay a little more. We are now supposed to supply them with quarters and some other things, and I simply would like to get an idea in my head as to whether, with the increase of the knowledge they are to acquire, we are to increase the expense of their maintenance.

Mr. PERKINS. No; the salary that is paid these interpreters is the same that was paid before this additional requirement was made. The only change made is that whereas formerly we furnished buildings for the interpreters in China and, I think, in Japan, we did not in Turkey. There seems no good reason why we should not in Turkey as well as in China. Then, the gentleman will recognize the necessity of the increase of compensation all along the line, grown out of the desire expressed by Congress, and I think it is a most wholesome desire, that all of these people should be Americans. Many of these interpreters, when we got interpreters at $500 a year in China, were Chinese, or of different nationalities—they were not always brought from America. These young men educated in that way are young Americans, and after they have received this education, the expense of which is not much, we are informed by the State Department that they are among the most useful employees in the consular service.

Mr. MANN. I suppose they get into the consular service.

Mr. PERKINS. They do. They go into the consular service and quite often receive promotion and in time achieve respectable positions in the consular service. Of course, some that are unsatisfactory are dropped, but a large portion do well.

Mr. MANN. Here is a case where we offer to educate a man and pay him $1,000 a year in order to educate him. That covers his expense. There are probably 10,000 young men in America who would like to accept such a position. There are a great many who would like to go to West Point, where they receive $000 a year; a great many who would like to go to Annapolis, where, I believe, they receive $600 a year. I can see a reason for saying that these young men shall be Americans. If we pay them at the rate of $1,000 a year, that certainly is not a small sum out of which a student must take care of himself abroad. It is not a small sum in this country. The average student in this country receives far less than $1,000 a year when he is away from home at college.

Mr. PERKINS. I would state to my friend what he probably knows, but, perhaps, for the moment has not in his mind, that these positions are not open to any young American who thinks he would like to spend a few years abroad being educated by the Government and receive $1,000 a year, but he has to sign an agreement that at the close of his education he will remain at least five years in the service of the Government.

Mr. MANN. And if you could get the Government to sign an agreement that he should remain in the service of the Government for twenty-five years he would jump with joy. He is glad to sign an agreement for five years' salary after he stops being a student interpreter with the assurance that he is going to enter the government service, which makes him certain that he is going into the diplomatic and consular service of the United States.

Mr. FASSETT. There is no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. Certainly not; it is to his interest, and we could acquire plenty of them if we only paid them $500, although I am not quibbling about the amount. I see no reason why they should not be paid a reasonable amount.

Mr. PERKINS. That amount has always been paid, $1,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the salary of the interpreter, who is not the student interpreter, at Bangkok, however, you have increased, and I suppose to get an American.

Mr. PERKINS. I will explain that to the gentleman; there is really no increase there at all.

Mr. MANN. There may be really no increase; but then it certainly needs explanation, because when one year we appropriate $500 and the next year $1,500 it looks as if either there was an increase or else queer work.

Mr. PERKINS. I will explain that to the gentleman now. This man received $500 a year. Well, they could not get for an appropriation of $500 this particular man, who is a good, competent man. They had there a work of antiquity, what was called a jail of some sort which was never used, but for many years in the bill there was an appropriation of $1,000 for a jailer, and the interpreter got $500 for being an interpreter and $1,000 for being jailer. This bill abolishes the jail and the jailer, which was a farce. It may have been useful at some time in the past; and the man receives the coming year exactly what he received last year, but he receives it for the one office, the work of which he does, and the jail and the jailer in this place have passed into history.

Mr. MANN. It passed into history before, did it not?

Mr. PERKINS. No. In the appropriation bill a year ago the gentleman will find there was $500 paid to an interpreter and $1,000 to a jailer, but as a matter of fact it was the same man who got them both.

Mr. MANN. Well, that was certainly subject to criticism on the part of some one, that under the head of expenses for prisons for American convicts there has been carried for some years an appropriation for the expense of a prison and the prison keeper at the consulate general at Bangkok, $1,000.

Now, if it be true that it was not for the expense of prisons for American convicts and was simply a method for paying somebody a salary, the State Department—and, I am not sure, the gentleman's committee—is probably subject to some criticism.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, not the gentleman's committee, except the criticism that is passed upon ignorance, because we did not know about it.

Mr. MANN. Then, the State Department; they knew about it.

Mr. PERKINS. There was a time when this jail was used, but in the course of years—for quite a number of years now—no prisoners have been confined there. Now, conditions have so changed in the East by the establishment of the United States Chinese court, and otherwise, that this jail is obsolete and the department recommends that it be abandoned legally, as for some it has been practically.

Mr. HINSHAW. Was the jail used for American citizens?

Mr. PERKINS. Why, it was used for American citizens who were criminals, but there are no American criminals there, and have not been for some time.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is probably true about the rest of these you have under the same item; at least we will find out whether there is any authority of law for it. If the State Department proposes to ask Congress for appropriations for one thing, for the purpose of using it to pay somebody's salary, that is hardly fair.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not think there was any intention of that sort. The thing hung along.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a few questions in regard to this paragraph beginning on line 14, page 7. The paragraph as heretofore carried in previous diplomatic and consular appropriation bills read as follows:

For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey with a view of supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey.

Now, I desire to know if that language is not sufficiently particular to admit of these student interpreters studying any language that may be necessary in the consular service in Turkey?

Mr. PERKINS. I am perfectly frank to say, Mr. Chairman, that if I had the honor of being the officer in the State Department who has charge of these interpreters, and I told one of them to study Turkish or Sanskrit, or anything else, the fellow would do it or lose his job; but I see no harm in this provision.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the language which the committee has added, and which is new language, is as follows:

Or any other language that may be deemed necessary by the Department of State—

Now, I think if it is necessary to enlarge——

Mr. FASSETT. Read right on.

Mr. TAWNEY (reading):

with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey.

But this language here would admit of the State Department appointing student interpreters to study any language that it saw fit—the English language, the German language, the French language, or any other.

Now, I think there ought to be some limitation upon the authority of the State Department in respect to the language that can be taught. I wanted to ask the gentleman from New York if he would not accept an amendment, by striking out in line 17 the word "deemed" and the word "by;" also the words "the Department of State with a view of supplying," and insert, after the words "United States," "to qualify them for service as interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey," making it read:

For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey and any other language that may be necessary to qualify them for service as interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. That will really make it impossible for the State Department to employ anyone there at the expense of the Government to study any language other than that which is necessary to supply them for anything but interpreters in Turkey.

Mr. MANN. That would include French.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. At the suggestion of the gentleman in charge of the bill, I will withdraw the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I also withdraw the point of order and offer an amendment to strike out the word "deemed" and the word "by," in line 17, and all of line 18, and insert after the words "United States," "to qualify them for service as interpreters to the embassy," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "deemed" and the word "by," in line 17; also strike out all of line 18, and insert after the words "United States" the words "to qualify them for service as."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk now report the section as it will read when amended, beginning at line 14 down to and including line 19.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend so as to read:

"For ten student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey and any other language that may be necessary to qualify them for service as interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, at the rate of $125 per annum each, $1,250.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to make an inquiry, if I may, who this money is paid to. Is this to add to the salary of some one else in the legation?

Mr. PERKINS. As I understand, it is paid for just what it says—the cost of their tuition. I suppose it is paid to their teachers.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to ask for information the gentleman does not have.

Mr. PERKINS. It could not be anything else.

Mr. MANN. It could be paid to somebody in the legation, to teach these people, given to somebody to help bring the salary up, and giving them two places instead of one.

Mr. PERKINS. It would be a manifest abuse if that were so.

Mr. MANN. The fact is the committee is paying the salary, or making the appropriation for the purpose of taking care of American student interpreters preparing for the service.

Mr. PERKINS. I know; but in this case we can not get good interpreters; and we have only four of them.

Mr. MANN. He might be giving himself two jobs. I do not see any reason why in the course of time there may not be men in connection with the legation able to teach that language.

Mr. FASSETT. My recollection is that the statement of the Department of State was that this paid a teacher who came in, and it cost $125 each.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERS FOR THE STUDENT INTERPRETERS AT THE EMBASSY TO TURKEY.

For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy of Turkey, $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph. Has there been any difficulty about obtaining student interpreters over there at the expense of the Government at $1,125 a year, or whatever the sum may be?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not know what the trouble may have been. The number of student interpreters in Turkey authorized by law is ten, and only four are employed; so that it either goes to show that it is difficult to fill up the force, or else by the exercise of thrift it is found that four can do the work.

Mr. MANN. How many have they in China, and how many in Turkey?

Mr. PERKINS. Seven in China, and four in Turkey.

Mr. MANN. Why do we keep on appropriating if there is no effort to fill these places?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, the gentleman in that is mistaken. The consular service is constantly increasing. The best proof that it is increasing is not that the trade of the United States is increasing, though this has some connection with it, but the amount received for consular fees of all sorts and kinds, all of which are now paid to the Government have increased until, as perhaps the gentleman understands if he did me the honor to listen the other day——

Mr. MANN. I did myself the honor, and gave myself the pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the cost, the net expense of this great consular service spread all over the world is only $229,000.

Mr. MANN. You mean net expense of the Treasury?

Mr. PERKINS. Out of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. But not the expense of several millions of dollars that somebody else pays.

Mr. PERKINS. It is a little over $2,000,000. But for the work that costs a little more than $2,000,000, something over $1,800,000 is collected and turned into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am free to say that it is a new provision. I think it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman insists upon his point of order.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withdraw his point of order for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will withhold it.

Mr. FASSETT. I understand the point to be made against the student interpreters to Turkey, and we have the same provision as to student interpreters to China and Japan. Our attention was called to the fact that our trade relations with no country in the world was increasing so rapidly as with Turkey and Turkish countries, and they desire to have young interpreters, young Americans, who should put themselves on the same footing as those in China and Japan, which they thought would give us a greatly improved service. Of course it is new and subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I remember when the appropriation first went in for these interpreters in China, I believe it was, and it was urged at that time that it would be difficult to get young Americans to go over to China, and there ought to be a special consideration for that, and we fixed the salary upon that basis, and then provided them with quarters upon that basis.

Mr. FASSETT. And teachers.

Mr. MANN. It was specially urged that China and Japan were differentiated from other places where we had embassies. Now, I suppose there may be some differentiation between Constantinople and London, but if I were a young student going abroad it would be much more interesting to me to go to Constantinople than it would to go to Paris or London.

Mr. FASSETT. I think the service would be very fortunate if it secured the presence of the gentleman at either place.

Mr. MANN. I think there would be plenty of people anxious to have that experience over there now.

Mr. FASSETT. As a matter of fact, the State Department is not very crowded with applications. I suppose there is nothing we have ever done in China that has done us more good than these very opportunities for the education of young Americans there. I suppose there is no investment we could make here that would result in a larger return on the amount invested than this one which we are making here in Turkey.

Mr. MANN. I appreciate that as to China and Japan, but I fail to appreciate it at all as to Turkey.

Mr. FASSETT. The same relative reasons apply as to Japan and as to Turkey, because Arabic is not a language which is commonly known to American young men. It requires special training.

Mr. MANN. We have opened up relations with the Far East which are absolutely new. Our relations with Turkey have existed ever since we were a Republic.

Mr. FASSETT. And they have violently changed in the last year.

Mr. MANN. Not violently changed; no.

Mr. FASSETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The Turkish Government has violently changed, but our relations are the same.

Mr. FASSETT. Our relations are opening up new opportunities almost violently.

Mr. MANN. There are very few opportunities over there for anything of the kind. We get certain things from Asiatic Turkey.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of the necessary furniture for the quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy at Constantinople, Turkey, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order against that.

Mr. PERKINS. As long as they are not going to get the rent of quarters, I do not see any great necessity for furniture. It is subject to the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRIBUTING INFORMATION, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For two clerks to be employed by the Department of State and to be charged with the distribution of information among the diplomatic missions, one at the rate of $1,800 per annum, and one at the rate of $1,600 per annum; in all, $3,400.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against that paragraph. First, it is new legislation, and, second, it does not belong in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. It is for the employment of clerks in the city of Washington, in the State Department here, and belongs properly to the legislative and judicial appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. It is not new legislation. It is in the current law.

Mr. PERKINS. It is not new legislation, and so far as the point of order is concerned, that it is not properly in this bill, that does not impress me as having either gravity or very much importance. If we are going to pay these two gentlemen, whether their salary is allowed in this bill or some other bill, amounts to very much the same thing, so far as the Treasury is concerned.

This appropriation was made and properly made in the diplomatic appropriation bill last year. These clerks are used in a system which is exceedingly valuable, by which messages received in one part of the world are transmitted to our representatives in other parts of the world, to whom they may be of value, and often they are of great value. Now, these clerks were first situated at London and were a part of the London office. It was found by experience that they could do their work much better if, instead of being at London and there endeavoring to collate and distribute the diplomatic news of the world which was important to our representatives, they came to Washington, which is the center to which all our diplomatic information is brought. So, as a matter of fact, these two clerks are now located in the department at Washington.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does this bill carry any other clerks in Washington in the State Department?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not think it does, and these clerks would not be in Washington if it were not for the fact that after this system was instituted the men who did the work, who were for a while at European capitals, were brought to Washington.

But the work which they do could, so far as anything but convenience is concerned, be done anywhere on the civilized globe where they could be furnished the dispatches of the various ministers, and then distribute that information in such a way as might be available to other ministers and representatives of the Government working along similar lines.

Mr. MANN. How can they get the dispatches of other ministers except they be here at Washington?

Mr. PERKINS. They might get them at London.

Mr. MANN. They might get them at London if they had somebody here to collect the dispatches and send them to clerks in London and have those clerks send them to some other place. That would be red tape beyond the State Department, and that is saying a good deal.

Mr. PERKINS. It was an inconvenient system——

Mr. MANN. Ought not all clerks of the Department of State be carried in one appropriation bill, so that the people may know what the expense of clerical service is in the department?

Mr. PERKINS. It does not seem to me that this provision, which has been carried in the bill for some time, is subject to a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with my distinguished friend from New York that this point of order is of very little importance. If it proposed to convert this appropriation bill, which is for the diplomatic and consular service, into an appropriation bill for the executive department here at the seat of Government, which controls and supervises that service, then, of course, we would never know from the aggregate appropriation what the consular service was in fact costing the people of the United States.

The value of keeping the appropriation for clerical service here at the seat of Government separate and apart from appropriations made for field service under the control and jurisdiction of this department is this: Congress can at all times, by comparing the aggregate appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service away from the seat of Government, determine whether or not the appropriation for that service is increasing, and, also, we can determine the extent to which the appropriations for the clerical service in the department having control of and jurisdiction over the consular service are increasing. It is, therefore, of great importance to Congress, as a matter of information, that this service, the appropriations for these two branches of the service, should be kept separate and distinct. This committee has no jurisdiction whatever in this appropriation in this bill over the clerical service in the State Department, no matter what the service may be and no matter what its relation may be to the public service.

The title of this bill is "Making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911." It does not even say "and for other purposes."

This is not an appropriation bill in which to carry the appropriation, and furthermore the officers that are here appropriated for are not authorized by law. I think, Mr. Chairman, that if we are going to keep the appropriation bills so that the House may make intelligent comparisons from year to year with respect to appropriations, we should keep the clerical services of the State Department out of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York, chairman of the committee, if the two clerks here appropriated for are employed in the State Department at Washington?

Mr. PERKINS. They are now employed in the State Department at Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

STEAM LAUNCH FOR LEGATION AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

Hiring of steam launch for use of embassy at Constantinople, $1,800.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I would like to know by what authority that provision is carried in this bill; why not hire the minister an automobile?

Mr. FASSETT. He could not get there by automobile. It is for the purpose of conveying the minister and his helpers from the residential part of Constantinople to the business part, and it costs less to get this launch than it would to pay for his transfer otherwise. You can not run an automobile on water as yet.

Mr. MACON. How about a flying machine?

Mr. FASSETT. If the gentleman from Arkansas was there to furnish the motive power, that might do.

Mr. MACON. I do not think the gentleman from Arkansas could furnish much more motive power for a machine of that kind than the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. FASSETT. I will do the flying if the gentleman will furnish the power.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question. Is it cheaper to rent the launch than it is to own it?

Mr. FASSETT. Yes; it is estimated to be so, and was so stated to the committee.

Mr. MACON. I have a perfect right to ask for information about this matter, and the gentleman from New York should not become facetious or sarcastic about it.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to give the gentleman a little further information. A launch is absolutely required. Constantinople is situated on the Bosphorus and divided into entirely distinct cities. I believe Lord Byron once swam the Hellespont, but it is an extremely difficult feat, and the minister can not swim the Bosphorus. [Laughter.] You have to have some means of getting about there, and here is a launch that we have all the year round. We pay for the use of the launch, and for eight lusty Turks who row it about the Bosphorus—and sometimes it is pretty rough—the sum of $1,800 for the entire year.

Now, the gentleman knows well enough that if we bought a launch, we would pay $10,000 or $15,000 for it in the first place, and then we would have five or six men, who would want first $500 or $600 a year and then $600 or $700 a year. This is one of the most economical business arrangements that I know of.

Mr. MACON. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is customary to furnish the diplomatic officers abroad with conveyances from their residences to their places of business?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; but there is no situation like this. In most places the diplomatic officer can go from his residence to the business parts by carriage, if he has a carriage, or take the street car, but he can do neither one of these in Constantinople.

Mr. MACON. Why is it that the minister can not have his residence and his place of business on the same side of the Bosphorus?

Mr. PERKINS. Because it is impossible to live in the old Turkish part.

Mr. MACON. Would it not be almost impossible to do business over there, then. It seems to me that a place that is not fit to live in would hardly be fit to do business in.

Mr. PERKINS. If my friend had traveled in the East, he would find a great many places in which business is done that he would not want to live in, and if he did live in them his life would be very short, I fear. They are not such places as an American can live in, and no one would be asked to do it. All the foreign residents live in the same part of the town. The expense of this, I think, is very reasonable, and I am quite sure my friend from Arkansas, when he thinks that in these days of automobiles, the driver of an automobile is paid $1,200 a year and the automobile costs $5,000 to begin with and everything corresponding, a launch that we can have for twelve months in the year, with the men to run it and for which we pay only $1,800, is something of a bargain.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Much cheaper than an automobile.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. MACON. The point that struck me was that I did not know it was the policy of the Government to furnish transportation to its diplomatic officers abroad from their places of residence to their places of business.

Mr. PERKINS. This is the only place, as far as I know of in the world, where it is necessary.

Mr. MACON. That is what I want to find out, and I wanted to find out about the appropriation for this particular place.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the particular reason.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, before I take my seat I desire to say that I do not think that an honest inquiry in regard to a matter by a Member of the House, who has a perfect right to know, ought to be met with either snarls or sarcasm by those in charge of the bill containing it.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly my friend from Arkansas can not say that he has met with anything but courtesy at my hands.

Mr. FASSETT. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Arkansas does not feel aggrieved because of my answer to his inquiry about an air ship. If he does, I apologize. I have no intention to hurt his feelings.

Mr. MACON. I try to be a gentleman and I must insist that others must try to be such in their manner toward me when I am interrogating them about a matter that I have a perfect right to interrogate them about. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

The appropriation of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be required, provided by the diplomatic and consular appropriation act for the fiscal year 1910, approved March 2, 1909, to meet the expenses actually and necessarily incurred by the United States by reason of its participation in the Twelfth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography, which was to be held in the city of Washington during the year 1910, is hereby extended and made available for such participation in the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography, to be held at some place in the United States, to be selected by the President, in the year 1911 or 1912.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not sure myself, and I would like the judgment of some one as to whether this will render this appropriation available if the Congress is not held until 1912.

Mr. PERKINS. It says in here for 1911 or 1912.

Mr. MANN. I know it does, but this is an appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

Mr. FASSETT. Line 17 would seem to cover it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It ought to be made available and to remain available.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman does not want to reappropriate next year.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman that this is really his appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I understand, and I am interested in it as much as anybody.

Mr. PERKINS. I think it is always better to have general terms. It seems to me if the gentleman would offer an amendment by which it would be said that the appropriation of $10,000 is hereby made available for participation in the Fifteenth International Congress and say nothing about the years it is to be called, that would obviate the difficulty.

Mr. MANN. The difficulty is that this appropriation is for the next fiscal year, and at the expiration of that fiscal year they would not be authorized, I fear, to use the money thereafter for something occurring thereafter, unless we specifically authorized it.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest that the gentleman offer any amendment he thinks proper.

Mr. MANN. If I had in my head just the form of the amendment to be offered, I would do so.

Mr. FASSETT. I would suggest, "to remain available."

Mr. TAWNEY. To remain available.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that this clause be passed for the present, and if the gentleman desires to offer his amendment he can——

Mr. MANN. I think we can amend it right here. I would suggest to insert, after the word "available," in line 17, the words "and shall remain available."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "available," in line 17, the words "and shall remain available."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Contribution to the maintenance of the International Bureau of Weights and Measures for the year ending June 30, 1911, in conformity with the terms of the convention of May 24, 1875, the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to said bureau on its certificate of apportionment, $2,895.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph for the purpose of getting some information from the chairman in regard to this appropriation. I notice the appropriation is proposed to be made in conformity with the terms of a convention. Has that convention been ratified by treaty?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes. I will state to the gentleman that this bureau was created as far back as 1875. It was ratified by 17 nations, of whom our Nation is one, and the work, I will say to the gentleman frankly, is a permanent work. It is expected by the 17 nations that this bureau will be a permanent bureau. This bureau corrects the standards of the different countries. Their standards are sent to this central bureau. There may be from time to time certain variations in weight and size, very slight, but still they might be of much importance in questions of boundaries and things of that sort, and the various nations have determined that this was a far more economical arrangement to have one bureau act for them, as otherwise this Government would have to consult with Norway and England, with Sweden, and so on. The treaty was ratified by our own country, and the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, which certainly does valuable work, appeared before the committee with an explanation, which was very satisfactory, concerning the value and importance of the work. It is authorized by law, and I think it is a judicious appropriation.

Mr. MACON. I notice the appropriation is increased about $500 over the amount carried in the last appropriation bill for the same purpose. Will the gentleman please explain the reason for the increase?

Mr. PERKINS. Under the provisions of the treaty it was determined to apportion the money of these countries in proportion to their population. I think at certain intervals there is a reapportionment, and I believe, as our country has grown more rapidly during these recent years than others, its pro rata is somewhat larger.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from New York about the matter is entirely satisfactory to me, and I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

International Bureau of American Republics, $75,000: Provided, That any moneys received from the other American republics for the support of the bureau shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit, in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the Secretary of State for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the bureau: And provided further, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print an edition of the Monthly Bulletin, not to exceed 5,000 copies, for distribution by the bureau every month during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information. I desire to ask, first, whether the printing of the bulletin is to be paid out of this appropriation?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not understand it is; no.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, are the bulletins which the Director of the Bureau of American Republics is authorized to distribute here to be distributed free?

Mr. PERKINS. They are distributed free upon request of Congressmen and persons interested, and the demand is very large.

Mr. TAWNEY. I know the demand is very large, and the reason I ask is I received a letter from the director in which he makes the suggestion that the demand is so large that they could very profitably and properly distribute more copies if he was authorized to charge for copies, as people are willing to pay the actual cost of the printing plus 10 per cent, or some amount over the actual cost, and I wanted to ask if the committee had taken this matter into consideration?

Mr. PERKINS. The director made the same suggestion to us, but we thought in this general appropriation bill we would not endeavor to deal with that. Of course there is a certain prejudice against being compelled to pay for a government publication, and at all events——

Mr. TAWNEY. But government publications can be purchased. We have a document room here under the control of the Public Printer, and a catalogue is issued every month showing all the public documents that are offered for sale, and the price. Now, I understand that this officer does not have any of these bulletins for sale.

Mr. PERKINS. I think myself it would be a very sensible provision, because there is no doubt that the demand is large, and that the utility is considerable.

Mr. FASSETT. We could hardly put this document on sale by the Public Printer, because the South American Republics are interested in its production pro rata as much as we are.

Mr. TOU VELLE. A portion of them are now on public sale. I do not know whether they are the American publications or not, but in their list there is a whole lot of them that they sell.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to inquire how much is contributed to the support of this bureau by other American Republics, and which is spent by the director in addition to this appropriation?

Mr. PERKINS. The expenses of the International Bureau of American Republics are paid by agreement between the South American republics and our own. These payments are made in proportion to population. The total expense has been heretofore, I think, about $100,000, of which our Government has paid $60,000 and the other countries have paid in round figures $40,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Our contribution was $56,000.

Mr. MANN. Last year.

Mr. PERKINS. The expense of this bureau would necessarily be increased. It constantly increases its field of activity. Another thing is this new building given by Mr. Carnegie, which undoubtedly is a valuable asset, is a large and commodious building, and is sure to cost more than a smaller building, where the quarters are less sufficient.

The gentleman knows that the international conference meets this year in July. It is the expectation that the contributions of the different governments will then be readjusted, and upon the proportion of $75,000 contributed by our Government the contributions from the South American States will amount to about $60,000. So I think that every Member of the House must agree that while, of course, we do not want to have any foolish expenditure in any branch of government service, yet the result of the increased activity, the increased relations between our own country and South America, has shown great fruit, and when doubtless this has been one of the useful agencies it is not a time that it should be stunted. The gentleman may have noticed when he read the report—if not, I am sure he will be surprised at it—the growth in commercial relations between this country and South America. We took three years so as to strike an average, so that they could not say "you took one year when trade was very dull and another year when it was very good." We took the years 1897, 1898, and 1899—ten years ago.

The average trade between our country and South America for those three years was $284,000,000. Then we took the three corresponding years just past, 1907, 1908, and 1909, and the increase in only ten years brought the average annual trade from $284,000,000 up to $520,000,000, an increase of almost $250,000,000. It is prodigious.

Furthermore, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to one feature which is of special interest. He believes, as I believe, that trade is profitable on both sides, and that we do not want to have all exports and no imports. We can not have that. At the same time, it is agreeable to see a growth in the export trade of this country, especially where we are furnishing manufactured materials to such a great extent in South America. Now, of the average trade in the first three years—$284,000,000—the exports from this country were only $78,000,000, or about one-quarter. During the last three years of the $520,000,000 our exports were $220,000,000, almost one-half, and in ten years the exports from this country to South America showed an increase of almost 200 per cent, and an aggregate increase of over $140,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is one of the objects of this bureau to encourage and facilitate and extend trade between the United States and these countries?

Mr. PERKINS. That is the object. These bulletins are published in English, Spanish, and Portuguese. The Portuguese and Spanish bulletins are sent to South America and contain references to the trade of our country, opportunities, and so on.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who selects the material to go into these bulletins? Has the State Department any control over that?

Mr. PERKINS. There is a large force. The whole bureau is under the charge of a governing board, on which sits one representative from each of the countries forming a part.

Mr. MANN. That is purely theoretical. John Barrett is the whole thing. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the gentleman may be recognized, as I wish to make some remarks on the subject.

Mr. PERKINS. Of course the active man, who has had the practical supervision of the work of the bureau during the last four or five years, during which time the work has enormously increased in size, and I think I can justly say has enormously increased in value, is Mr. Barrett. I remember when I first came down here ten years ago, and our committee first got to appropriating for the expenses of this international bureau and its publications, I looked at it and it seemed to me that we were blowing money into a pretty dead concern; but I am quite sure that is no longer the opinion of any member of our committee, nor do I think it is the opinion of any Member of the House. The bureau has certainly been most vigorously and most intelligently increasing in its activities.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I made the inquiries about this bureau because, from what I understood of the object of its existence, I wondered how it could be reconciled with some statements which have been made recently as to the activity of the State Department in extending the trade of this country with other nations. Recently it has been asserted that contracts for two battle ships for the Argentine Republic had been secured by an American shipbuilding firm in competition with shipbuilding firms in Europe. It seems somewhat astonishing that in competition with the shipbuilding firms of the world our shipbuilders could compete and win out as the low bidders, in view of the contentions that have been so persistently made that it was impossible to build ships as cheaply in this country as in other nations. Then it has been suggested that while perhaps our shipbuilding firm is not the low bidder, that some coercive measures were resorted to by the Department of State to compel a friendly South American republic to make a contract with a shipbuilding firm in this country instead of placing it elsewhere on more favorable terms. That is one of the instances in which it seems that our State Department has been very active in spreading our trade.

Recently the Republic of Honduras was arranging to raise some money by an issue of bonds, and I am informed had commenced to negotiate with an English syndicate. I do not recall the exact figures and amounts; but as I recall, the amount was something like $110,000,000; that the bonds were to be secured by a lien upon certain public utilities in that Republic, and negotiations had about reached completion when the State Department stepped in again; and the result of that interference by the State Department caused this matter to be rearranged so that a great firm of financiers in the city of New York was injected into the enterprise, conducting the negotiations with the same syndicate, and received a commission of almost $465,000 because of the assistance given to this friendly nation by our State Department in straightening out its affairs.

We are somewhat familiar with the efforts recently made toward extending our trade in Manchuria and with the efforts made by this administration by this velvet-handed, big-stick method to force certain enterprising gentlemen of this country, who have been noted particularly for their ability to capture rich and profitable contracts all over the world, into certain arrangements which were about to be made in Manchuria. Unable to upset certain arrangements which had been made for certain railroad enterprises, this same select band of financiers, under the protecting and helpful wing of the State Department, is being aided now to project railroads along different lines into that country for the ostensible purpose of establishing and developing our trade.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that my time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have been endeavoring to reconcile the activities of the State Department in these directions where, apparently by the exercise of a carefully concealed strong arm upon certain not very powerful nations, money seems to be diverted into the pockets of certain favored individuals in this country upon the theory that a beneficent extension of trade between this and other countries was taking place.

I have been endeavoring to reconcile that carefully exerted power with this, in theory, beautiful manner of extending our trade by the kindly offices of a bureau organized as the Bureau of the American Republics. Before many days have passed further facts will be stated in connection with these matters to which I have just called attention.

I deny that it is the proper function of this Government or of any of its great departments to coerce weaker countries in their attempts to adjust their financial affairs, so as to compel commissions to be paid to powerful financiers in this country who happen to be friendly with the administration. I deny that it is a part of a policy that will result in good to coerce friendly South American republics to award contracts to American firms, unless it be clearly established that they have fairly met and conquered in open competition the contractors of all other nations, and I have no sympathy——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Has the gentleman any evidence that just those facts were not met in connection with the letting of that contract for these battle ships?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I have not. I have repeated the two statements that have been made.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. And yet the gentleman criticises the Government for having done something that he does not know that it has done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not done anything of the kind. I say I deny that it is the proper policy of the Government to do that, if it has been done.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Does the gentleman claim that it is the policy of this administration to do that thing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I have stated the facts. The gentleman can ascertain what has happened. I have stated that it was said that these men had, in open competition, been awarded these contracts because they had met the contractors of other countries successfully.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Has the gentleman any reason to doubt that fact?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I stated that it has been so persistently asserted, here and elsewhere, by gentlemen of the political faith of the gentleman who is now addressing me that it was utterly impossible to build ships as cheaply in this country as in other countries, that therefore there might be some reason to believe the other rumor, that because of the exertion of the strong arm of this Government, this other Republic had been induced—I think that is the diplomatic word—to believe that it was to its advantage to award the contracts to the American firm.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the State Department is entitled to great credit, and that the gentleman and myself and others ought to thank the State Department for having demonstrated that the proposed ship subsidy is a wild-eyed scheme, for which there is no necessity? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will pardon me. I hope the result of what I say upon this matter will be to compel a disclosure of the truth, so that we will be able to say positively whether our shipbuilding firms are able to compete successfully with the shipbuilding firms of every other nation, or whether, as a matter of fact, the influence exerted has induced this friendly nation to believe it is to its interest to award its contract to our concern.

I do not believe that it is a part of the duty of this Government to go abroad in the world exerting any influence or power other than that which is proper and which comes from real friendship to encourage and aid our trade. I do not believe that any attempt to compel nations to deal with us, unless we are able to meet all comers on an equal footing, will have a beneficial result.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, I suppose we are not expected to take too seriously the words of the distinguished gentleman who has just preceded me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, if the gentleman will permit me, he need not say anything if he does not take my words seriously.

Mr. FASSETT. I find it in my heart to excuse him for speaking in a trifling and playful manner of serious things; and I would never get in the way of a full-fledged Democrat when he was engaged in that beautiful and always successful operation of stuffing a man with straw and then knocking the straw man out of the window. The gentleman from New York has indulged the gentle operations of his fancy and blown them to full size, and has acknowledged they amount to nothing, and then he has decried their existence as monsters of illegality and impropriety.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASSETT. I will in a moment. The gentleman from Brooklyn might well feel uncomfortable when he contemplates in the quiet of his closet and in that prayerful solitude which I hope he sometimes enjoys the real meaning of his words unexplained. He has advised nations that have as much pride in their nationality as we have in ours that they are being coerced and have been coerced because they were feeble, weak, and insignificant. He has talked about the obtaining of contracts for battle ships as the lowest competitor, and has intimated that the State Department was engaged in bulldozing those nations by some curious means undescribed by our author into accepting a contract, to their detriment, out of fear or the desire of self-preservation.

The fact is, I was as much surprised as the gentleman from New York that our people secured these contracts. Inquiry developed the fact that while we can not, as a rule, build a merchant ship for within 25 to 40 per cent of the price at which a merchant vessel may be built elsewhere, our armor can be made and forged, owing to our facilities, at $100 a ton cheaper than the armor can be forged abroad, and that our contractors offered to supply this armor at $100 a ton cheaper than the armor could be supplied by our rivals, and our people secured the contract, a very notable triumph, one to take pride in.

So far as our experience in Manchuria is concerned, it is a devious and ingenious imagination that can construct such a train of suspicion, build a powder house with such inflammable material and then set torch to it, as characterizes the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Unworthy of the State Department, unworthy of any state department would it be, traversing this great globe like a Colossus and compelling people, not by persuasion, not by superiority of articles or wares, but because we had a great army and a great navy, to do business with them; and referring to the nations of China, Japan, and Russia as weak and unimportant nations was amazingly indiscreet. It seems to me, if the gentleman had been writing a leading editorial for a Democratic newspaper, he might possibly not be criticised too severely for using such language, but as a sworn representative of the American people on this floor, I submit the impropriety or unguarded epithets and ill-considered innuendoes. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before the gentleman sits down will he discuss the Honduras Republic affair?

Mr. FASSETT. Perhaps at some future time.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to shorten debate unduly, but this is entirely foreign to any item on this bill, and we must finish the bill to-night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There has been no effort here to be unfair or to take up time unduly. I do not know upon what other bill it would be more appropriate to discuss the State Department than this.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this paragraph close in ten minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion. I want some information myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The haste with which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT] rushed to the defense of the outer works of the ship-subsidy schemers indicates that the other gentleman from New York found a blowhole in their armor. [Laughter.] But that is not the point I want to discuss. I am interested in this paragraph of the bill. I am interested as a man who has been gratified to see the prodigious growth of our trade in South and Central America, in maintaining the only organization that has devoted itself to the purpose of developing that trade. The extraordinary development of trade in South and Central America more than justifies every dollar paid out by the State Department for the support of the Bureau of International Republics. And when we come to contrast it with the marked decline in the trade with China and Japan, we are more impressed with the importance of endeavoring to develop our trade with the South American Republics.

My recollection of the figures is that the total trade with China is something like $50,000,000 a year; that is, in exports and imports; and the total trade between Japan and this country is something like $43,000,000 per year. Now, the trade of our country with the people of South and Central America, according to the figures given in this report, is ten times as great. Furthermore, if gentlemen will investigate the export and import trade with the South and Central American countries and then compare it with the Asiatic countries, they will discover that every peon, every half-clad Indian in South and Central America is worth from four to ten times as much as a consuming unit as are the people of the old civilized countries of China and Japan. Mexico with 15,000,000 people does more business with us than China with her 350,000,000. South and Central America are important to our manufacturers and merchants. They are big customers now and will no doubt be bigger customers in the future. Our trade with China and Japan is important, but declining. Of decreasing value as customers they are an increasing menace as competitors. We neglect the more inviting field on our own continent to pursue the less valuable trade of far away Asia. The very purpose of the existence of the Bureau of American Republics is to correct that absurdity. Under these circumstances I hope that no serious effort will be made to curtail the work being done by the Bureau of International Republics. As I said a moment ago, it may not be the very best way in which this work can be done, but at the present time it is the only effective agency that we are able to discover. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask some member of the committee for some information about this bureau. I know, of course, its chief head, as everybody in Washington does, and quite a number of people out of Washington, but I would like to know how the money is expended; whether there is any supervision over the expenditure, and whether this representation of the different countries is a real or simply a theoretical representation. Do these representatives of the different countries get together and conduct the affairs of this bureau, or are they all conducted by Mr. Barrett?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think with this bureau, as with many bureaus of this kind, their most important work probably is discharged when they choose a competent man to do the work.

Mr. SHERLEY. That, I suggest, is hardly an answer to my inquiry.

Mr. PERKINS. They have meetings, of course, occasionally, but the gentleman can understand that the Secretary of State and the ambassadors and ministers from these various South American republics, while they attend the meetings from time to time, can not exercise a very close personal supervision over the work. In a general way they direct the policy or approve the policy of the director, but the detail falls to him.

Mr. SHERLEY. I see that we appropriate $75,000 this year, and we formerly appropriated about $14,000 less. Does Congress or anybody else know how that money is expended?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes. I have here the figures, when the appropriation made was $87,000. It is expected that expense will be increased, but this will give the gentleman an idea of how the expense is made up.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That is, when the income of the bureau was $87,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; when the income of the bureau was $87,000. There were paid in salaries and wages, in round figures, $47,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. How was that $47,000 distributed? I do not mean every detail of it, but what were the headmen paid?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Barrett was paid $5,000. He got the highest salary. Then there was a large force of interpreters and clerks, about 30 of them, that were paid from $3,000 down to much smaller sums. Then there was paid for the monthly bulletin expenses, outside of the Government Printing Office, for the preparation of articles, photographs, and so forth, $14,000; for the traveling expenses of representatives of the bureau in Latin America and in the United States, which was paid entirely from the quotas from Latin-American republics, $5,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is that the expense of Mr. Barrett and others in speaking around the country?

Mr. PERKINS. No; it is the expense of representatives to these different conferences and meetings. Then there was the expense of the propaganda, descriptive of the 20 Latin-American countries, paid for from the Latin-American quota, being publications in Spanish and Portuguese, $4,600; printing, outside of Government Printing Office, paid by Latin-American quota, $3,400; rent, maintenance of buildings, and so forth, $3,000. There is a large amount of small items, carriage and automobile hire and expressage and drayage, $1,600; stationery, $1,500; and so forth.

Mr. SHERLEY. May I ask the gentleman from what his memorandum is made up?

Mr. PERKINS. It was furnished to me by Mr. Barrett.

Mr. SHERLEY. What I am trying to arrive at is whether there is any statement of this kind made to anybody that has the power of supervising expenditures?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; he makes this report to this bureau, composed, as I have already said, of these different representatives, who have, of course, entire power to make any investigation that they deem proper.

Mr. SHERLEY. And which, if I understand the gentleman correctly, does not exercise that power.

Mr. PERKINS. How much supervision they make I do not know, but they have the power. I do not see anything in these items that would necessarily suggest the necessity for an investigation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not mean to suggest that there is an item there that is wrong. I was trying to find out whether these expenditures were scrutinized by any power dealing with the matter.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, I am informed——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PERKINS. There is an annual report of the director submitted to the International Bureau of American Republics in very great detail, filling 60 pages, more or less, and I am informed that that report is examined and investigated by certain officials or inspectors, or whoever the bureau sees fit to employ.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, one other question. I note here a provision authorizing the Public Printer to print an edition of the Monthly Bulletin. Is that paid out of the moneys belonging to the bureau, or is that paid by the Federal Government?

Mr. PERKINS. No; that is not paid out of moneys belonging to the bureau.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is that paid out of an appropriation for the Public Printer carried in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. PERKINS. It is paid out under authority of the Printing Committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I recall having seen in the past year or two some publications, very elaborately bound, in half morocco and plush, issued by the Bureau of American Republics. Are those paid for under this provision?

Mr. PERKINS. No; I think not.

Mr. SHERLEY. These were so elaborate as to impress me more with the elaborateness than anything else, and I wondered just out of what funds they were being paid for.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, there may have been some editions de luxe. Such are sometimes indulged in, as the gentleman knows, but I could not go more into detail.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Surely.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the pro forma amendment. I believe the bureau is to have a new home contributed by private citizens.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And they expect to go into it shortly.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; this spring.

Mr. MANN. I notice coincident with that an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. PERKINS. Assuredly.

Mr. MANN. From $56,000 to $75,000. I suppose it is going to cost more after they get in.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, certainly; it always does. The gentleman knows a new building, a large building, means more employees, more heating, and more cost.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have sometimes suspected that would be the case when gentlemen talk about owning our embassies abroad, expensive buildings; that it would cost a great deal more to maintain them after you have the building constructed than it does now to rent quarters, and yet I have been met with observations on the floor of the House that that was not the case.

Mr. PERKINS. That would depend entirely upon the character of the building. I think if this Government should buy some great building costing half a million dollars in London or Paris, it would necessarily be beyond the means of any man of ordinary resources to live in it. A man of moderate means can not live in a million-dollar house. The gentleman and myself do not live in such a house for reasons it is not necessary to state. A great house is costly to live in.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word about the importance, the growing importance, of this Bureau of American Republics. When I first came to Washington it was so moribund that the Committee on Foreign Affairs considered seriously the question of discontinuing the appropriation for its support. But during the past few years it has not merely exhibited the signs of renewed vitality, but has developed and expanded enormously. It is performing a work the value of which can not be overestimated. In the meantime it has entirely outgrown its present quarters. Through the generosity of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the bureau in the course of a short time will be housed in a dignified and proper manner. It is a source of gratification that this new home of the bureau is located here in our capital city.

But necessarily the expenses of the bureau in this new home will be somewhat increased.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman that if that building were built abroad, and if they sent one of our ambassadors there, we would have to increase his salary?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Oh no; not at all. We are not increasing anybody's salary in asking for this increased appropriation for the maintenance of the bureau.

Mr. MANN. But you are increasing the expenses of this bureau $19,000 because you are going into the new building. Is the same ratio to hold if we construct buildings abroad for our representatives?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Because of the extension of the bureau, because of the increased work it is doing, because of its growing importance, and because it is now to be housed not merely in adequate quarters, but in a building that is commensurable with its dignity, the cost of its maintenance is necessarily increased. And yet I submit to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that this increase under all circumstances is a very moderate one. It is hardly fair to compare the maintenance of this International Bureau of American Republics, to which each of the 21 American republics contribute, with the maintenance of legations and embassies abroad. And this is hardly the time to discuss the question whether the expenses of our legations and embassies abroad should increase when we own them, as I hope we shall do in the near future. Speaking for myself, I would not expect that the salaries of our ambassadors and ministers would necessarily be increased because of our owning these legations and embassies. But I do think that the Government should contribute a reasonable amount toward the maintenance of these homes for our representatives. I would like to see our foreign embassies Americanized. I would like to see the hospitality that is dispensed therein the official hospitality of the Government.

Mr. PAYNE. Will not that depend very much upon whether we build such buildings abroad as we do here; for instance, the post-office building at Chicago—I do not intend to be personal at all in regard to that—or other government buildings such as we erect, with rooms so large that it costs a good deal more to run them?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that I endeavored to prevent the very extravagant post-office building in Chicago from being constructed.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not say that personally because the gentleman happens to be from Chicago. Others as well as myself remember the gentleman's efforts.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. While there might be some increase in the expense of maintaining an embassy which we own in Paris or London or Berlin, the additional credit which would accompany its ownership would more than justify any additional expense which the Government might incur. But it is hardly fair to compare this International Bureau of American Republics with an American embassy in one of those cities. It is the simple truth that the bureau has entirely outgrown its present quarters. And the 21 American republics which unite to maintain it are to be congratulated upon the fact that they have a noble building nearing completion which will furnish facilities for many years for the work of the bureau.

And this bureau is doing a very great work—a work in which every American citizen ought to be interested.

Mr. SHERLEY. What I would like to get at is how they do so. All I have been able to find out is a name and an individual.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. In order to indicate to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] something of the routine work done by the bureau, I quote from the statement made by the director of the bureau before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This statement will show in a general way the character of the work in which the bureau is now engaged:

I have prepared a little statement of some facts that I would like to lay before you in very succinct form, and base on them the recommendation that I have to make with reference to the appropriation for the International Bureau of American Republics covering the ensuing fiscal year. The first point I will mention shows the practical work of the institution. As far as I can ascertain, with the possible exception of the Bureau of Corporations and the Bureau of Forestry, the International Bureau of American Republics has shown during the last year more growth in its general work and correspondence than any individual bureau of the United States or of any individual bureau of any other of the governments supporting the bureau, which is a remarkable record, considering the fact that three years ago it was practically reorganized, and up to that time had done only what you might call routine work.

Secondly, the correspondence of the bureau in the last three years—I am speaking of the period of the present administration of the bureau since I have been director—has grown, according as you may estimate by the quality of the correspondence, from nearly 200 per cent to 600 per cent, of which there has been an increase of nearly 300 per cent during the past fiscal year. For instance, the letters coming and going average now 200 per day, in contrast to 30 per day three years ago, and some 5,000 per month in contrast to 800 a month three years ago.

Now, third, a most interesting fact, as showing the relationship of the International Bureau to the Senate and House of Representatives: Three years ago, when I took charge, the total number of inquiries coming to us from Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in any shape or form was only 10 per cent of the total membership; during the last fiscal year 97 per cent of the House and Senate utilized the bureau more than once in some shape or form of which we have definite record, either through correspondence or by telephone request.

Fourth. Three years ago only 3 or 4 of the 21 American republics, including the United States, made frequent or constant use of the International Bureau. During the last year every one of these republics has used it so constantly and frequently that our staff has been unable to keep up with the demands made upon us.

Fifth. Three years ago it was practically impossible to dispose of the monthly bulletin because it was uninteresting and not valued by manufacturers or general readers or Members of Congress. Now we are not able to meet by any means the general demand that there is for it from all over the country. I have received numerous letters from Congressmen, from newspaper editors, and manufacturers all over the country stating that it is the most interesting and valuable government publication that goes out from Washington. We have been striving in every way to meet the demand for it against greatly adverse conditions of an overworked staff and a limited printing allowance.

Sixth. In 1906, or three years ago, the total number of pieces of printed matter distributed by the bureau amounted to approximately 50,000; last year, in response to actual requests—not any of our publications being wasted, but being conserved to meet the general and congressional demands for printed matter—we distributed 450,000 pieces to every State of the United States, to all the Latin-American countries, and also to some of the European countries.

Seventh. A fact of which I am particularly proud and to which I would call your especial attention by most careful consideration of our correspondence with manufacturers, merchants, exporters, and importers, and with the data we have collected from the different governments, the bureau finds itself directly responsible for new and original business done during the last three years between the United States and Latin America of $23,000,000, a most remarkable fact when it is analyzed. But that does not take into consideration the thousands of influences that the International Bureau has set at work, not only in the United States, but all through Latin America, of which we can have no possible record. We can only base our conclusions on the correspondence we have had with business firms and on the reports of the governments dealing with specific matters.

Eighth. Three years ago only 900 manufacturers, merchants, exporters, and importers of the United States sought practical good from the work of the bureau; this last year 4,000 manufacturers, merchants, exporters, and importers in the United States have specifically depended upon the bureau for the information they have received from it, obtaining data they could not get from any other source in the United States or Latin America. Three years ago 15 universities applied to the bureau for data about Latin America for their curriculums and matters like that; this last year 320 American universities, colleges, and academies between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts have made demands upon us for data that would aid them in their work. In 1906 only 60 students are reported as having sought information and data from the bureau on subjects relating to these countries and our relations with them; last year several hundred students in these different universities and colleges applied to us for all kinds of data that would be helpful in their educational work. Three years ago only 72 newspapers were recorded as having sought definite information from us for editorials and other data; during the past year 1,100 newspapers have directly applied to us for valuable data. Three years ago not 100 people, intending to travel in Latin America, sought information and data from us; during the last year we have record of over 1,000 specific letters of this kind, seeking the kind of information which they could not get from anywhere else.

Next, coming to some of the work of the bureau which is not generally appreciated as showing its broad international scope and character, the Argentine Government, through the aid of the international bureau, has organized, established, and set working a national bureau of labor, which it did not have before it appealed to us to assist in preparing the data necessary to make the establishment of the bureau possible, and we have received the official thanks of the Republic of Argentina for having done that. The Government of Brazil, wishing to revise certain laws which are of importance to that country on account of its being a land which wants immigration, applied to the bureau for data and cooperation.

I received special letters from Brazilian officials thanking me for the practical help that we had given them. The Government of Ecuador, face to face with the difficult problem of the sanitation of Guayaquil, which directly concerns the Panama Canal, and therefore concerns the United States, applied to us and we gave them such assistance and cooperation in that respect that they are now thoroughly convinced of the necessity of completing and carrying through the sanitation of that port. This is the last port of call before the Panama Canal is entered from the South, and must be made sanitary if the canal is to be properly guarded.

In Chile we gave useful information looking to the building of their great harbor at Valparaiso which will cost over $15,000,000. In Bolivia we assisted the Bolivian Government in floating their railway loan in New York. We have been the agency for supplying some teachers for the different Latin-American Republics, such as, for instance, Panama and Peru.

We are now at work on the preparation of the programme and the data for the great Fourth Pan-American Conference to be held at Buenos Aires in July next. This involves an enormous amount of very careful work, inasmuch as it requires statistics of all these countries, showing their progress and development and those conditions which involve unity of interest and action among them. Then again, in the case of the international expositions, such as the one recently held in Ecuador, those to be held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and in Santiago, Chile, they have depended largely upon the bureau to get all the countries interested as well as the United States. In the matter of international exchange of publications and correspondence, the bureau is becoming more and more the vehicle or channel through which all the countries are informing themselves in regard to each other.

It is hardly necessary for me to add that the bureau is brought into contact with all the various commercial bodies scattered through the United States. There is disseminated far and wide among our merchants and manufacturers information of the greatest importance as to our trade relations with the republics of South and Central America. The enormous increase in our trade with South America in very recent years is due, in my judgment, in no small degree to the publicity work of the bureau. Not a day passes that the director does not receive scores of letters of inquiry from business men and business houses as to trade opportunities in the various republics which are united under this bureau. In answering these inquiries and in sending out its bulletins the bureau is constantly informing the American people as to conditions and opportunities in the lands to the south of us. It is to-day the one important source of information relative to conditions in these sister republics. And the indirect influence of the bureau is only second in importance to the actual work done by it. The bringing of all these 21 republics together under this International Bureau of American Republics inevitably results in producing a generous rivalry among them. The question of sanitation is a most important one to us in the United States. The work we did in Habana in transforming that city from a pest hole into a garden spot was of inestimable value to the people in the southern part of our country. They no longer suffer from the scourge of yellow fever brought hither from the island. Now that we are in possession of the Canal Zone and have spent millions of dollars in the work of sanitation there, we are tremendously interested in seeing to it that those countries with which we shall necessarily be brought into close contact when the canal is completed shall do their full share by way of sanitation to prevent yellow fever and the bubonic plague from being brought to the zone as an incident of our closer commercial relations. And the influence that this bureau is to-day exerting in this behalf through the representatives of the various republics is far-reaching and invaluable.

Mr. MANN. It is mostly done through the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I would not for a moment underestimate the importance of the work done through the Marine-Hospital Service under Surgeon-General Wyman, but it is also true that this bureau is exerting a wholesome and far-reaching influence as respects the important question of sanitation.

Some one inquired a few moments ago as to how the bureau is conducted. Let me say there is a governing board with one representative from each of the 21 republics thereon. Our representative is our Secretary of State. The ambassador or minister from the other 20 republics to the United States, with our Secretary of State, constitute the governing board of the bureau. This governing board meets regularly. There is not a member of the board that is not intensely interested in the work of the bureau. The director makes his report annually to this board, showing exactly how every cent of the bureau's income has been spent, and that report is acted upon by the governing board. I certainly believe that as the years go by the importance and usefulness of the bureau will steadily increase. I am sure that we shall get a full return for every cent we spend upon it, for it will continue to furnish the opportunity for our becoming acquainted with the people of our sister republics, and as we become better acquainted with them they will better understand us, and the better they understand us the less danger there will be of friction or strained relations.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee rise informally for the purpose of submitting a conference report for printing in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the committee informally rise. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the urgent deficiency bill for printing in the RECORD under the rule.

The report of the committee of conference and statement of the House managers are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18282) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1910, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follow:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4 and 38, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following: "Furnishing new post-office, custom-house, and court-house, Cleveland, Ohio: For furniture equipment for the new post-office, custom-house, and court-house building at Cleveland, Ohio, one hundred and sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "United States court of customs appeals: The salaries of the judges, officers, and employees of the United States court of customs appeals, authorized by the act approved August fifth, nineteen hundred and nine, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' shall hereafter be at the rates per annum as follows: For the presiding judge and four associate judges, seven thousand dollars each; marshal, three thousand dollars; clerk, three thousand five hundred dollars; assistant clerk, two thousand dollars; five stenographic clerks, one thousand six hundred dollars each; stenographic reporter, two thousand five hundred dollars; messenger, eight hundred and forty dollars; and for the payment of the said compensation for the balance of the fiscal year nineteen hundred and ten, at the rates herein fixed, there is appropriated the sum of twenty-seven thousand four hundred and forty dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "The allotment for printing and binding for Congress is hereby made available for the printing, under provisions of existing law and the rules of the Senate and House of Representatives relating to public printing, as public documents of such of the publications of the National Monetary Commission as the commission may designate. And the superintendent of documents is hereby authorized to order reprinted, from time to time, such public documents of the National Monetary Commission as may be required for sale;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

JAMES A. TAWNEY,
GEO. R. MALBY,
E. J. BOWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
J. H. GALLINGER,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18282) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 4: Appropriates $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, for participation in the International Agricultural Exhibition at Buenos Aires.

On amendment No. 9: Appropriates $160,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the House, for furnishing the new public building at Cleveland, Ohio.

On amendments No. 36 and 38: Provides for the salaries of the judges of the court of customs appeals at the rate of $7,000 per annum.

On amendment No. 46: Provides for the printing of the publications of the National Monetary Commission and the charging of the cost of the same against the allotment for printing and binding for Congress.

On amendment No. 47: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate providing for printing and binding for the International Bureau of the American Republics.

On the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate relating to the Immigration Commission the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

Managers on the part of the House.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that my colleague should get so incensed at the mention of the supposed policy of the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to offer an amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am opposing the pending amendment. Because Members do not froth at their mouth that is no reason that they are not serious in what they suggest. The gentleman expressed his surprise that the American shipbuilders were able to obtain the contract mentioned by me, and so, as he said, upon inquiry he had ascertained that, while, as a rule, it was impossible to build ships in this country except for from 20 to 25 per cent in excess of what it would cost elsewhere, that in this particular instance, because of the price at which armor could be supplied, this American concern had been able to obtain the contract. It is unfortunate that the gentleman did not get more detailed information when he made such special inquiry.

I am not familiar with the details of these vessels, but I do know that, exclusive of armor and armament, the latest vessels authorized for the American Navy cost $6,000,000. My recollection is—and I have had no chance to refresh it—that the armor and armarment alone cost about $3,500,000 additional. My recollection of the price at which the American shipbuilding concern is to get these two ships is in the neighborhood of $22,000,000, and the contract for the armor for each ship is about $1,950,000. So that the cost of the armor is about one-fifth of the cost of the ship.

It would be interesting to know, Mr. Chairman, if this armor which can be supplied so cheap when used for foreign nations is being supplied by the American armor manufacturers at a price less than that at which they supply it to the United States for the same purpose.

Now, my colleague got very much wrought up by what he termed my setting up of men of straw simply to knock them down; but he carefully avoided any reference whatever to my statement in connection with the loan to the Republic of Honduras, for the negotiation of which, through the action of the State Department, a financial house in the city of New York was paid a commission, as I recollect, of about $460,000, an additional burden upon that country imposed for the benefit of the American banker because of the activity of the Department of State.

Within ten days there has been roaming about this city a member of another financial house of the city of New York not friendly perhaps to the one which received this commission; and it is said that that firm served notice upon the Department of State that if it were not let in on the financial deals that were being negotiated in Manchuria he would stir things up. A distinguished gentleman, well known in financial circles, prominent in his connection with financing Republican campaigns, has publicly admitted that in the past few days matters have been adjusted, and that there would be no difficulty between these two concerns.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not the information before me, so that I can give the details of the matter to the House, but I shall take care to have it here the next time the House meets, ready to meet anybody who challenges the accuracy of my statements.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION.

To meet the share of the United States in the expenses for the year 1909 of the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration, created under article 22 of the convention concluded at The Hague July 29, 1899, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, $1,250.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, on page 15, after line 19, the following:

"BUREAU OF THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION.

"For maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration, as the share of the American Congress, $2,500."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I shall be obliged to make the point of order against that. It is not authorized by law; but if my friend wishes me to withhold the point of order for five minutes, I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, since I stated my reasons for this amendment during general debate I have heard so many favorable expressions from Members of the House in regard to it that I am led to believe the proposition to thus officially recognize the Interparliamentary Union and accord to it the support which it now seeks in all the parliaments of the world will meet with the almost unanimous approval of the House. It is a proposition which particularly concerns us as the lawmaking body of the United States, and what we are asked to do here will be for the general cause of arbitration and peace. We have Hague conferences and Pan-American conferences and other international assemblies for which appropriations are made to enable American participation in them. But they are councils to which the executive governments send their delegates.

But here it is proposed to aid the legislative branch of the Government in its desire to meet and confer with the representatives of the legislative bodies of the other governments under the auspices of that great organization of lawmakers, whose object it is to promote the cause of international arbitration. For the first-named conferences we provide salaries and traveling expenses, but nothing of this kind is asked for the delegates of the interparliamentary meetings. All that is asked here is that the American Congress, as a member of the Interparliamentary Union, contribute its proportionate share to the expenses of maintaining the bureau of that organization. Heretofore that bureau was maintained by voluntary subscriptions of the several groups and of individual citizens, until at the London conference, in 1906, a resolution, offered by the delegates of the American Congress, was unanimously adopted, calling upon all the national legislative bodies to officially recognize the new world parliament by contributing to the maintenance of its international bureau, or headquarters. Since that time the parliaments of Belgium, Denmark, Great Britain, Italy, Norway, Austria, Greece, Sweden, the Netherlands, and Roumania have responded to that resolution, and only a few days ago, when the question came up in the French Chamber of Deputies, the prime minister of that country gave the assurance that an appropriate allowance would have the support of the French Government. All other parliaments have the matter now under consideration. The question is, then, whether the American Congress shall uphold or repudiate the action of its own delegates, whether our sweet words in behalf of the cause of good will and peace shall or shall not be corroborated by actual deeds, or whether we should not more emphatically even than other parliaments go on record as giving our willing and enthusiastic support to this international brotherhood of lawmakers. I know that the amendment is subject to a point of order, but in view of circumstances of the case and in view of the fact that favorable action on this question should be taken before the middle of March when the interparliamentary council will meet at Brussels, I appeal to the distinguished chairman of the committee and to the other gentlemen present not to raise it.

Mr. PERKINS. I must now insist on the point of order. The appropriation is not authorized by law and has not the approval of the committee. However commendable it may be, this is not the time to consider that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Missouri can cite the Chair to some law authorizing this appropriation the Chair will sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE.

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1910, $4,800.

Mr. MACON. I reserve the point of order. I want to know how it is that an appropriation for an agricultural establishment of any kind happens to be carried in this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Because it rests on an international treaty. This bill carries all obligations and international relations resting upon treaties between this and other governments.

Mr. MACON. I would like to know the purpose of the establishment of this institution.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say, in answer to the gentleman, that I do not think that this is subject to a point of order. This institute was created by treaty signed in 1905 by the representatives of 41 powers. I will say to the gentleman frankly that while it is an international obligation, I am not myself wildly enthusiastic as to the wisdom of this measure. If the gentleman from Arkansas at some time will introduce a resolution into the House asking the State Department to notify the other powers that we elect to withdraw from this treaty at whatever time the terms of the treaty will admit, personally I might not object.

Mr. MACON. If it is a useful establishment, I do not see any reason for doing that, but I wanted to know what the purposes of the institution are.

Mr. PERKINS. The institution was started by some enthusiastic gentleman who went over to Italy and interested the Italian King and other officials to establish a central bureau, which was to obtain information as to the cost of products of the soil all over the world, with the idea that that could be furnished in such a way and with such promptitude that it might be of value to the markets and the purchasers of the world. Personally, however laudable the scheme might be, I very greatly doubt whether the results of this bureau will be of advantage to the agricultural interests of the country, but that is my own individual judgment.

Mr. MACON. Where is this institution established?

Mr. PERKINS. In Rome, Italy.

Mr. MACON. And the gentleman says it was established for the purpose of gathering information to be disseminated all over the world?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; as to the different crops and prices, and all that; and although it seems to me rather impracticable, yet as long as the treaty is in force we must pay our part, because we have agreed to the treaty, and until we notify the other powers that we elect to withdraw from the treaty we have to pay our proportion, because it is a treaty obligation. It is for that reason that this appropriation of $4,800 is in the bill.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. Is this an amendment to the paragraph?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the foot of page 15, line 24, after the word "dollars," add the following:

"For the payment of expenses of delegates of the United States to the annual assembly, $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, to that I make a point of order that that expenditure is not authorized by law or by the provisions of any treaty.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from California to say that he was offering an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. HAYES. I am.

Mr. MANN. I want to move at the proper time to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HAYES. I hope the gentleman from New York will reserve his point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. I will reserve it.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment relating to the International Institute of Agriculture. I think the gentleman from New York is mistaken; I do not think this amendment is subject to a point of order. The International Institute of Agriculture is, as he has stated, the creature of a treaty, and the principal part of that institute, the most important part, is the annual assembly which is held in Rome every year. I think it was held there last month.

I am sorry to disagree with the gentleman from New York as to the work which this institute is doing. I believe it is doing a most important work, and it is doing it at a very little expense so far as this Government is concerned. The gentleman in charge of that institute in Rome, David Lubin, is now and, since the signing of the treaty, has been performing his duties entirely without compensation because of his enthusiasm and his belief that it will be not only largely beneficial to this country, but to the whole world. Let me read a few words of the treaty itself, which gives the purposes of the institute.

The institute, confining its operations within an international sphere, shall—

(a) Collect, study, and publish as promptly as possible statistical, technical, or economic information concerning farming, both vegetable and animal products, the commerce in agricultural products, and the prices prevailing in the various markets.

(b) Communicate to parties interested, also as promptly as possible, all the information just referred to.

(c) Indicate the wages paid for farm work.

(d) Make known the new diseases of vegetables which may appear in any part of the world, showing the territories infected, the progress of the disease, and, if possible, the remedies which are effective in combating them.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman state the date of that treaty?

Mr. HAYES. Nineteen hundred and five, I believe.

Mr. HINSHAW. This appropriation has been running, then, for four or five years?

Mr. HAYES. This institute; yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, I might state that there are other important purposes to be conserved by the institute, but this is sufficient to indicate the character of its work.

Mr. TIRRELL. Will the gentleman please inform us whether any of those reports relative to wages, and so forth, have been printed and whether they are at the disposition of any department?

Mr. HAYES. I can not inform the gentleman; but I think the work of the institute thus far—which, I believe, has only been in progress a short time—has been largely the work of organization, and as a practical working institution it has not yet done the work that it was intended to do. As I stated, the important work of this institute is the annual assembly, and I ought to state that this work has the emphatic approval of the Secretary of State, who, perhaps, knows more about it than any official of the United States. We are entitled to five delegates to that assembly from the United States. If we are going to take any part in this institute at all, it seems to me that we should have all the delegates to which we are entitled. I believe, therefore, that we should make the appropriation, and I do not believe that this amendment is subject to a point of order. We should make appropriation for the expenses of these delegates, provided for by treaty.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I called attention to this appropriation last year and subsequently received a somewhat lengthy communication from a gentleman who has been the chief beneficiary in one way at least, Mr. Lubin, who is a constituent of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES]——

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the gentleman does not desire to do injustice to a very estimable gentleman. Mr. Lubin has paid the expenses largely out of his own pocket. He is not the beneficiary of this institute in any sense. He is a gentleman of independent property.

Mr. MANN. What I state is true—the chief beneficiary in one way.

Mr. HAYES. I do not see in what way.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will listen to me a moment I will endeavor to show. I read Mr. Lubin's communication which I received last year with some care and attention, after a debate in the House, and without any unfriendly feeling to Mr. Lubin, and was still forced to retain the opinion that this institute was largely something originating with Mr. Lubin and that nobody else was especially interested in it. Since that time I have endeavored to ascertain whether this institute has ever done anything. I believe they have a building over there, or claim to have one, donated by the King of Italy. They have had some appropriations which the gentleman from California says have been mainly used in organization. Organization of what? Organization for what purpose, organization to what effect? What have they ever done? It is true that this institute has not been in existence for many years.

The original convention was dated June 7, 1905. It was ratified by the United States on June 27, 1906; signed by the President on July 7, 1906. So that it has been in existence three years and a half, so far as we are concerned. During that time what publications have they issued, what information have they acquired? Can anybody here tell? An institution that is supposed to diffuse knowledge concerning agricultural methods and agricultural products; an institute that has been running three years and a half since we became members of it. Has anybody ever received any information from this institute? Has any information ever been published which our own live Agricultural Department has been able to get hold of? Not at all. It is rumored—and it is only a rumor that that may be true—that the institute has finally issued a circular which describes the methods of collecting agricultural statistics. What valuable information that is! Everybody knows the method of collecting agricultural statistics. Schoolboys in our grammar schools in the United States can write accurate essays upon that subject, and yet this great institute in Rome, originated by the constituent of the gentleman from California, who is not to be criticised for supporting this amiable constituent——

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Lubin is not my constituent.

Mr. MANN. Then it is a misfortune for Mr. Lubin.

Mr. HAYES. It is a misfortune for the gentleman from California.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman from California represented everybody in California. He was a Californian.

Mr. HAYES. He was.

Mr. MANN. He is now located in Rome. He lives in Rome, and he wants to benefit by being the chief mogul from the United States in the social affairs of Rome as the representative of this Government in this institute.

He wants to have the importance; that is all there is to it; he wants to have the importance of being the representative of this Government to an institute in Rome, an institute which never has done anything, an institute which does not intend to do or ever did anything except to swell Mr. Lubin and his importance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who appointed him?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Lubin originally appointed himself. [Laughter.] He originated the whole scheme, and I am not blaming him for it. He showed a brilliancy of thought and execution which does justice to any Californian—and they are pretty good at it—but having secured this project, having gotten other nations to enter into a convention, having secured the ratification of the United States Senate and the approval of the President of the United States, none of whom knew anything about it, he ought to have been appointed to the place which he had created, which he had gotten other nations to join, for the purpose of making a place which he might fill. If there is anybody to fill the place, Mr. Lubin is entitled to it. It is his own child; nobody else has the right to claim it. But there is no excuse for creating the place or position. It is not intended to do anything. An agricultural institute in Rome to tell us how to collect agricultural statistics!

Mr. HOWARD. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois before he takes his seat a few questions about this?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman realizes that this provision is in this bill in consequence of a treaty between the United States and Rome on the subject?

Mr. MANN. I do; I realize the difficulties of the subject.

Mr. HOWARD. And that this House must either appropriate in pursuance of the terms of the treaty or neglect it entirely.

Mr. MANN. But I am talking about the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to increase this amount by $8,000 to pay Mr. Lubin's expenses in Rome.

Mr. HAYES. No——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Can the gentleman from California invoke the law under which this salary is fixed?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have the treaty here. It provides for a contribution by this country annually of $4,800, and there is no provision by which we agree to pay anybody one cent. We have the right, if we see fit, to send a certain number of delegates, and if we see fit to send them there we can pay what we desire to pay. But there is no treaty obligation, there is no authority of law for paying one dollar to any person who is sent as a delegate, or for any other purpose, to this congress. The only legal obligation is to contribute our share to the general expense under which the $4,800 is paid by the treaty. There can be no question about it, and I must insist upon my point of order.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for one moment?

Mr. PERKINS. For only one moment; time is moving rapidly.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say in defense of Mr. Lubin that I do not expect the gentleman from Illinois to comprehend the motive underlying the activities of Mr. Lubin in this matter. I do not expect him to appreciate it, because he is not accustomed to look at things in that way. Mr. Lubin has been prompted to this activity by the very highest motive, and not by the sordid motives which the gentleman from Illinois has suggested, as I know. I have known Mr. Lubin for some years, and I know in this matter he has acted from a very high sense of duty to humanity, and has engaged in a work which, as he believes, will assist the agriculturists not only of this country, but of the whole world, in the line indicated by the extract from the treaty, which I have already read.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOUNDARY LINE, ALASKA AND CANADA.

To enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto, between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, in conformity with the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties, including employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, and draftsmen as are necessary to reduce field notes, $100,000, to be immediately available, together with the unexpended balance of the previous appropriation for this object.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making some inquiry of the chairman of the committee as to how much money, in his judgment, will be necessary to complete the marking of the boundary line between Alaska and Canada.

Mr. PERKINS. It is very hard, Mr. Chairman, to ascertain with accuracy what the additional expense will be. Fixing the boundary line is naturally very expensive work. They go through a very remote part of the world, over snows and mountains and through forests. The estimate made by the gentleman in charge is that it will probably be completed at a probable further cost of $200,000.

Mr. MACON. How much has been appropriated up to this time?

Mr. PERKINS. Five hundred and fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. MACON. So that will be $815,000 for the establishment of the boundary?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; the gentleman is correct. Those are the approximate figures.

Mr. MACON. Of course the committee has made investigations about this matter. Does the chairman believe it is worth practically a million dollars to establish a boundary line between Alaska and Canada?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly. The establishment of a boundary between great nations is of a value that one can not overestimate. Suppose in five or ten years from now gold mines might be discovered, and there was any question of boundary. The Canadians would say, "This is our gold mine," and the Americans would say it was theirs. That would be an international complication that might be very serious. This work is done jointly by the two governments, and each one contributes one-half. The expense is large, but it is a great country that we are surveying. They go through glaciers, mountains, and valleys, an exceedingly remote and difficult part of the world to traverse. To have the boundaries between this country and England fixed with accuracy, so it is necessary to do nothing but turn to the map and say, "That is the map made by the two governments," and to show the line which has been so established by the two governments, is a very valuable work.

Mr. MACON. For the purpose of preventing an interruption when we reach another paragraph a little further along in the bill, I will ask the gentleman while he is upon his feet what the cost of establishing the boundary line between this country and Canada will be? I notice you are appropriating now about $105,000 for the next fiscal year for that purpose.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, I would state that it is estimated by the government officials in charge of the survey on our side that the survey should be made at a cost of $200,000 to our Government. That, of course, means a total cost of $400,000. As to the past cost it is impossible to say. We have been surveying and measuring and fussing and fighting about the line between this country and Canada almost from the time the country began its existence.

Mr. MACON. Is not the line between this country and Canada, at least a large part of it, a water line?

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman, if he will turn back in his historical reading, will remember it was forty or fifty years ago when the cry was made, "Fifty-four-forty or fight."

Mr. MACON. Yes. "Fifty-four-forty or fight" was the campaign slogan quite a number of years ago.

Mr. PERKINS. If it had not been for the wise action of our representatives and the English, it is possible that there might have been fighting. It only shows the difficulties long attending the fixing of this boundary.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, these appropriations strike me as being a little excessive for the establishment of boundary lines; but, of course, I have not had an opportunity to investigate the matter, and will not take issue with the chairman of the committee about them. He states that, in his judgment, these are proper appropriations, and for that reason I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the annual installment for the calendar year 1910, under the assignment and transfer made by the Republic of Panama to the Republic of Colombia, in manner and form as contained in the treaty between the Republic of Colombia and the Republic of Panama of January 9, 1909, the recognition of which assignment and acceptance of notice thereof are given by the United States in Article V of the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Colombia concluded January 9, 1909, $250,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MANN. On the ground that the Committee on Foreign Affairs does not have jurisdiction over this appropriation. It is true that it is dependent upon the treaty that it refers to in this bill. But that does not necessarily confer jurisdiction. I would not make the point of order except for the fact that this is part of the expenses in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal, and I think if the point of order lies, it is proper to be made, because I think that all of these expenses ought to be carried in the same appropriation bill, which is the sundry civil or the deficiency appropriation bill. Two of these installments have already been appropriated for. They were appropriated for through the Committee on Appropriations in the deficiency bill making appropriations for deficiencies for the year 1909. That bill carried an item for the payment of the annual installment for the calendar year 1908 and 1909, payment to be made in connection with the conventions and treaties named in the pending proposition.

The gentleman in charge of the bill will probably recall that every treaty obligation is not necessarily paid through the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The appropriation bill is properly entitled "A bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service" of the Government. For instance, the appropriation which we made for the payment of the Bering Sea award did not come from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but through the Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill; and when we made the payment in reference to the Spanish war treaty, the payment was made, not through the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but through the Committee on Appropriations; and the Committee on Appropriations already have assumed jurisdiction, under the direction of the House, for payment to be made under this treaty. I think that the jurisdiction lies in the Committee on Appropriations, not in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Appropriations having jurisdiction of all other appropriations relating to the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, that the question of jurisdiction has sometimes been carelessly exercised, confusedly exercised, between different committees of the House, we all know. But the only question that comes up now is whether this appropriation contained in this bill is of a character of which the Foreign Affairs Committee has jurisdiction. The mere statement is an answer. We appropriate for the diplomatic and consular service, and we also appropriate for liabilities which arise under treaties.

How can my friend say that this is found improperly in the diplomatic bill, when there are contained in this bill, and have been contained as long as there has been a diplomatic bill, more than half the items, appropriations for the expenses of the neutrality act, for instance, the emergency fund which the President is authorized to use, the expenses of boundary acts, and treaties made between this country and England? Of course, the Committee on Foreign Affairs would have no jurisdiction of the expense which is carried in this bill for making surveys if that expense did not rest upon an agreement made between our Government and some other government.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Is it not true that that expense is paid to people working under the control of the State Department?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, well, it is not true as to a great many of these items.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman will find it is true of everything in the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; right here on the page before me, the international bureau, for publication of customs bureau. We send the money to that bureau. The State Department has no more control over it than the gentleman from Illinois. We sent over there, under treaty, $1,500. This bureau which has just been discussed, in Rome, receives $4,800, because this is a treaty obligation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is not merely because of the treaty obligations.

Mr. PERKINS. This is an obligation of our Government under this treaty, not to the international bureau at Rome, not to the international bureau at Paris, and not to any other of the various purposes for which appropriations are made in this bill, but to the Republic of Colombia for the sum of $250,000, a claim resting upon treaty, and that alone. If it were not for the treaty we would have no more right to pay $250,000 to Colombia than to send it to England or to any other foreign government to which we are under no obligation. But because a treaty obligation stands, it must be paid; and because it is the duty of the Foreign Affairs Committee to attend to the discharge of obligations that rest upon treaties between this Government and other countries, it is properly in this bill; and if it is not properly here, then payments in this bill that have been carried from time immemorial are subject to precisely the same criticism.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. It seems to me very easy to differentiate between this item and the items to which reference has been made. That is, where there is a continuous service for the Government. Take the agricultural institute at Rome, for which the appropriation was just made. It is not a payment of a fixed obligation at all. It is supposed to be a diplomatic service in connection with the diplomatic establishment of the Government. They are supposed to be performing an international service between the nations; quite a different proposition from paying a fixed award by this country to another country. I think you will find no other items in the bill like this at all.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to say just one word more as illustrating the jurisdiction of the committee. As a result of the Boxer war the Chinese Government agreed to pay to our Government a large number of millions of dollars. By a bill finally reported from the Foreign Affairs Committee that amount was reduced, and the sum of about $2,000,000, on which claims were made, was, under the jurisdiction of the committee, held until the claims could be ascertained. The entire jurisdiction over that money—which was not anything permanent, running on for all time; which was not any part of consular or international service, but was a payment of money to this country under a treaty obligation to us from another country—was entirely disposed of, and was properly held to be under the jurisdiction of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. MANN. Of course there is no other committee that could have jurisdiction of a legislative proposition involving that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, and will first read from Hinds's Precedents, volume 4, page 716:

> Awards of money to foreign nations belong to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. In 1879 the Halifax award was reported in the sundry civil bill. * * * On February 17, 1899, the bills to pay the award to Spain under the treaty of peace were referred to the Appropriations Committee, and the appropriation was reported therefrom.

These precedents, taken in connection with the fact that payments under this same treaty have been made under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, lead the Chair to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL SEISMOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

For defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association, and the expenses of the United States delegate in attending the meetings of the commission, $1,300.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph for the purpose of ascertaining something about it. I see it is a new appropriation—at least it was not carried in the appropriation bill a year ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. This commission is believed by scientific men to be of value. There appeared before the committee various scientific employees of our own Government. This central body makes observations in reference to earthquakes and the indications of earthquakes, and where they can be located. It is suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the reports they make are regarded as valuable in connection with the work done at Panama and as scientific investigations.

Mr. MACON. Where is the association domiciled?

Mr. PERKINS. I forget where the headquarters are. I would say in this connection that from the standpoint of finance it seems to be rather profitable, because our contribution is only $1,300, but the work of this association is necessarily scattered over the earth, and there are various small observatories. There are kept in this country two such observatories, and there is paid out of the fund of this association for the support of these observatories sustained in the United States the sum of $4,000 a year. So we really get more out of it than we pay.

Mr. MACON. Do all the civilized countries participate in this association?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; and we get the benefit of the reports of these various governments that unite to get information which we believe to be of large value in connection with the investigations as to earthquakes—their duration and probable recurrence.

Mr. MACON. I thought this small appropriation of $1,300 would not be sufficient compensation for a scientific delegate.

Mr. PERKINS. There is money contributed by private parties who have special interests. The work done is regarded as of value, and it is done economically and carefully.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALLOWANCE FOR CLERK HIRE AT UNITED STATES CONSULATES.

Allowance for clerk hire at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $300,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask if the amount carried here for clerk hire is the same as in the bill of the previous year?

Mr. PERKINS. No; it is an increase of $57,000. I will say to the gentleman, that the department asked for an increase of $107,000, and the committee thought that was a large increase for one year and cut it down to $57,000. The increase is explained in this way. I will state that there will be undoubtedly increases in the future, because this is a part of the policy of the Government and the policy of Congress to have the work of the consulates in the hands of Americans.

Of the 300 employees many of them get from $500 to $600 a year. They have been foreigners. It is believed by the Government, and all of us, that it is for the interest of the country, if we are to have a consular service at all, to have an American service; and necessarily we can not get bright American boys to go over and enter the service at a salary of $600. Over one-third of the clerks and assistants now are Americans, and it is hoped in time to have all the clerks and assistants American citizens. That explains this increase.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the provision and the increase of appropriation. The only criticism I have to make is that the increase is not large enough. An additional allowance of $50,000 will not permit the State Department to do what ought to be done in reference to placing the American consular affairs in the hands of American clerks.

Mr. PERKINS. They could not go as far as they should if we had given them $100,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. The appropriation ought to be doubled, and I move to increase the appropriation from $300,000 to $600,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, line 24, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "six," so that it will read "six hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, that would be $200,000 more of an increase than was demanded by the State Department. I do not think it is expedient to increase these expenses with too great rapidity. Let the increase be gradual. We have a great many years before us yet. The country is young, and I trust the committee will agree with the judgment of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that an increase of $50,000 is sufficient. We have increased the expenses of the consular and diplomatic service with a good deal of rapidity, I do not think with undue rapidity, but with sufficient rapidity, and I trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman will not be adopted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what amount the State Department really asked for?

Mr. PERKINS. They asked for an increase of $107,000, and we gave them an increase of $57,000. It seemed to us that in one year that was sufficient. I have no doubt there will be a further increase in the amount of the bill for the ensuing year. To increase it from $250,000 to $300,000 in one year, an increase of 20 per cent for the clerical assistance in the consular service, we thought was going fast enough. I think every gentleman will agree with me that this increase, from $250,000 to $300,000 a year is rapid enough, and that very rapid increases are not apt to be as judiciously managed as if a reasonable increase was made. As the gentleman knows, we have time before us. The department will ask for more, and I have no doubt it will at a future time receive it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. My time has been largely taken up by others and I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. As I understand it, there was an increase of $50,000.

Mr. PERKINS. The increase is $57,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. How much does the State Department ask for?

Mr. PERKINS. They asked for an increase of $107,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment and move to amend by increasing the amount by $107,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his amendment and offers another, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. AUSTIN. I move to amend by making it $357,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 24, after the word "hundred" insert the words "fifty-seven," so that it will read "$357,000."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I had over a year's experience as an American consul at a very busy and important port on the west coast of Scotland. The allowance for clerk hire was only $1,000 per annum, and out of that amount I was required to employ two clerks, giving them $500 each per annum.

Now, in visiting other consulates I found the same condition existing. The clerk hire being insufficient, capable and efficient Americans could not be induced to accept the positions at the salaries allowed by the State Department. There has not been at the consulate I filled an American citizen filling the positions of vice-consul and deputy vice-consul since the creation of the consulate. I think we all can agree on this proposition, that every American consulate should have an American clerk and an American deputy and vice-consul. If we do agree, there is no justification or excuse for delaying the matter of increasing the appropriation which will enable our State Department to fill every office in the consular service with Americans. If it will be a "good thing" for next year or five years or ten years hence, it is a needed reform this House ought to inaugurate now. In the transaction of official business, in securing facts and information, in the interest of our American exporters and manufacturers, every consulate should be officered with American citizens, loyal and devoted to the interests of our Government, ready and anxious to push at all times American trade and commerce, and we can not effect this change or new condition unless this appropriation is increased and the State Department furnished sufficient funds with which to increase salaries to justify our citizens in accepting this foreign service—service which is vital to the best interests of the American Government and, certainly, to the best interests of the American exporters and manufacturers. I hope the committee will increase this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Actual expense of renting a prison at Shanghai for American convicts in China, $1,200; for repairs and furnishings, $2,000; for contingent expenses, $1,200; for the wages of a keeper of such prison, $1,200; and for the wages of an assistant keeper of such prison, $800; $1,550.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of that paragraph for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the committee to what seems to be an evident mistake.

Mr. PERKINS. There is a mistake in the figures; yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "one thousand five hundred and fifty dollars" and insert in lieu the words "six thousand four hundred dollars."

Mr. BORLAND. That corrects the mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wages of prison keeper in Korea, $600. Total, $17,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to know whether this is to pay a salary or whether it is for a real prison.

Mr. PERKINS. I am informed that the prison keeper at Korea has some real work to do; that occasionally some Americans do get into jail.

Mr. MANN. If it were not so late in the day and the circumstances were other than they are, I would try to get all of these small matters out of the bill.

Mr. FASSETT. I can tell the gentleman this is a real case of keeping prisoners in Korea.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendments, to the House, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19255, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken in gross.

The question is on the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18895. An act to authorize the Wilson and Glassport Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Monongahela River between Wilson and Glassport boroughs, Allegheny County, Pa.;

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey, indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.

Mr. STURGISS, from the 13th to 21st instant, on account of important business.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported the bill (H. R. 20686) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report (No. 436), was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that on Monday morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I will call up the bill for consideration.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned to meet on Monday next.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, (1) a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed statement of the refunds of customs duties for the year ended June 30, 1909 (H. Doc. No. 679), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 14, 1910.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

THE PRESIDENT'S LINCOLN ANNIVERSARY SPEECH.

Mr. HALE. I have here a full report of the speech of the President made at the Lincoln anniversary in New York. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading, and also as a document. (S. Doc. No. 361.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The speech follows:

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT TAFT AT THE LINCOLN BIRTHDAY BANQUET OF THE REPUBLICAN CLUB OF CITY OF NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 12, 1910.

Mr. President, gentlemen of the Republican Club, and fellow-guests:

The birthday of the man whose memory we celebrate to-night is an appropriate occasion for renewing our expressions of respect and affection for the Republican party, and our pledges to keep the part which it plays in the history of this country as high and as useful as it was during the administration of Abraham Lincoln. The trials which he had to undergo as President, the political storms which the party had to weather during the civil war, the divisions in the party itself between the radical antislavery element and those who were most conservative in observing the constitutional limitations, are most interesting reading, and serve to dwarf and minimize the trials through which the Republican party is now passing, and restore a sense of proportion to those who allow themselves to be daunted and discouraged in the face of a loss of popular confidence thought to be indicated by the tone of the press.

In what respect has the Republican party failed in its conduct of the Government and the enactment of laws to perform its duty? It was returned to power a year ago last November by a very large majority after a campaign in which it made certain promises in its platform, and those promises it has either substantially complied with, or it is about to perform within the present session of Congress.

Let us take up these promises in order:

In the Republican platform of last year, upon which the campaign was made, appears the following plank in regard to the tariff:

> The Republican party declares unequivocally for the revision of the tariff by a special session of Congress immediately following the inauguration of the next President, and commends the steps already taken to this end in the work assigned to the appropriate committees of Congress which are now investigating the operation and effect of existing schedules. In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries. We favor the establishment of maximum and minimum rates to be administered by the President under limitations fixed in the law, the maximum to be available to meet discriminations by foreign countries against American goods entering their markets, and the minimum to represent the normal measure of protection at home, the aim and purpose of the Republican policy being not only to preserve, without excessive duties, that security against foreign competition to which American manufacturers, farmers, and producers are entitled, but also to maintain the high standard of living of the wage-earners of this country, who are the most direct beneficiaries of the protective system. Between the United States and the Philippines we believe in a free interchange of products, with such limitations as to sugar and tobacco as will afford adequate protection to domestic interests.

We did revise the tariff. It is impossible to revise the tariff without awakening the active participation in the formation of the schedules of those producers whose business will be affected by a change. This is the inherent difficulty in the adoption or revision of a tariff by our representative system.

Nothing was expressly said in the platform that this revision was to be a downward revision. The implication that it was to be generally downward, however, was fairly given by the fact that those who uphold a protective-tariff system defend it by the claim that after an industry has been established by shutting out foreign competition, the domestic competition will lead to the reduction in price so as to make the original high tariff unnecessary.

In the new tariff there were 654 decreases, 220 increases, and 1,150 items of the dutiable list unchanged, but this did not represent the fair proportion in most of the reductions and the increases, because the duties were decreased on those articles which had a consumption value of nearly $5,000,000,000, while they were increased on those articles which had a consumption value of less than $1,000,000,000. Of the increases the consumption value of those affected which are of luxuries, to wit, silks, wines, liquors, perfumeries, pomades, and like articles, amounted to nearly $600,000,000; while the increases not on articles of luxury affected but about $300,000,000, as against decreases on about $5,000,000,000 of consumption. I repeat, therefore, that this was a downward revision. It was not downward with reference to silks or liquors or high-priced cottons in the nature of luxuries. It was downward in respect to nearly all other articles except woolens, which were not affected at all. Certainly it was not promised that the rates on luxuries should be reduced. The revenues were falling off, there was a deficit promised, and it was essential that the revenues should be increased. It was no violation of the promise to increase the revenues by increasing the tax on luxuries, provided there was downward revision on all other articles. The one substantial defect in compliance with the promise of the platform was the failure to reduce woolens. Does that defect so color the action of the Republican party as to make it a breach of faith leading to its condemnation? I do not think so. Parties are like men. Revisions are like the work of men—they are not perfect. The change which this tariff effected was a marked change downward in the rate of the duties, and it was a recognition by the party that the time had come when instead of increasing duties they must be decreased, when the party recognized in its platform, and in much of what it did, that the proper measure of protection was the difference in cost in the production of articles here and abroad, including a fair profit to the manufacturer. There was a dispute as to what that difference is, and whether it was recognized in the change of all the duties downward. Particularly was this the case on the materials that enterer into the manufacture of paper and paper itself. The reduction on print paper was from $6 to $3.75, or about 37 per cent.

There was a real difference of opinion on the question of fact whether the new duty correctly measured the difference in the cost of production of print paper abroad and print paper here. It affected the counting-rooms of the newspapers of the country and invited the attention of the newspaper proprietors who had associated themselves together like other interests for the purpose of securing a reduction of the tariff. The failure to make a larger reduction showed itself clearly in the editorial columns of a great number of the newspapers, whatever their party predilection. The amount of misrepresentation to which the tariff bill in its effect as a downward revision bill was subjected has never been exceeded in this country, and it will doubtless take the actual operation of the tariff bill for several years to show to the country exactly what the legislation and its effect are. It is perhaps too early to institute the fairest comparisons between the Payne-Aldrich bill and the bill which preceded it, but the Payne-Aldrich bill has been in operation now for six months and figures are at hand from which we may make a reasonable inference, first, as to whether it is a revision downward, and, second, as to its capacity for producing revenue; for it must be borne in mind that the passage of the law was demanded not only for the purpose of changing rates in their effect upon the industries of the country, but also for the purpose of increasing the revenues; and the success of the measure is to be judged by its results in both these respects.

The Bureau of Statistics is authority for the statement that during the first six months of the operation of the Payne law, which has just ended, the average rate of duty paid on all imports was 21.09 per cent ad valorem. The average rate of duty paid on all imports for the same six months for the four preceding years under the Dingley law was 24.03. This would show that the reduction in the Payne law is 2.94 per cent of the value of the goods, or that the reduction below the previous tariff rates is 12 per cent, showing a downward revision to this extent. But this is not all. Under the Payne law 51.6 per cent of the gross imports for the last six months have been entered free, while under the four years preceding for the same six months the free list amounted to 45.46 per cent of the total importations; so there was not only a reduction of duty on gross imports of about 12 per cent, but also an enlargement of about the same percentage of the free list.

For the production of revenue the Payne law is even more an improvement on the Dingley bill. During the six months that the Payne tariff was in force, from August 5 to the night of February 5, the customs receipts amounted to $166,002,856.54. Under the Wilson-Gorman tariff the semiannual average was $83,147,625.90. Under the Dingley tariff the semiannual average was $130,265,841.84. Under the Wilson tariff the monthly average was $13,857,937.65. Under the Dingley tariff the monthly average was $21,710,973.64; while under the Payne tariff the monthly average has been $27,667,142.75, or 100 per cent greater than the monthly average under the Wilson tariff and 26 per cent greater than the monthly average under the Dingley tariff.

Of course as the country increases in popualtion the customs receipts increase, but even considering the population, the increase in the tariff receipts has been marked. Under the Wilson tariff the average annual customs receipts per capita were $2.38; under the Dingley tariff, $3.23; while under the Payne tariff they are $3.71.

For the six months that the Payne tariff has been in force the total receipts, both from customs and internal revenue, have been $323,899,231.91, while the disbursements have been $332,783,283.08, showing an excess of disbursements over receipts of about $8,884,051.17, with no collection as yet from the corporation tax. For the corresponding period last year the expenditures exceeded the receipts by over $40,000,000. This showing indicates that under the present customs law the deficit will be promptly wiped out, and that to meet our normal expenditures we shall have ample revenue.

I therefore venture to repeat the remark I have had occasion to make before, that the present customs law is the best customs law that has ever been passed, and it is most significant in this that it indicates on the part of the Republican party the adoption of a policy to change from an increase in duties to a reduction of them, and to effect an increase of revenues at the same time.

The act has furnished to the Executive the power to apply the maximum and minimum clauses in order to prevent undue discrimination on the part of foreign countries, and this is securing additional concessions in respect to impositions on our foreign trade.

The act has done justice to the Philippine Islands by giving them free trade with the United States.

More than all this, the new tariff act has provided for the appointment of a tariff board to secure impartial evidence upon which, when a revision of the tariff seems wise, we shall have at hand the data from which can be determined with some degree of accuracy the difference between the cost of producing articles abroad and the cost of producing them in this country.

The great difficulty in the hearing and discussion of the present tariff bill was the absence of satisfactory and credible evidence on either side of the issues as to low or high tariffs. The importer on the one hand and the manufacturer on the other were present to give their fallible judgments affected by their own pecuniary interests as to the facts under investigation. Men who were struggling to find the truth were greatly perplexed by the conflicting testimony.

The tariff bill authorizes the President to expend $75,000 in employing persons to assist him in the administration of the maximum and minimum clause and to assist him and other officers of the Government in the administration of the tariff law. I have construed this to mean that I may use the board appointed under this power not only to look into the foreign tariffs, but also to examine the question with respect to each item in our tariff bill, what the cost of production of the merchandise taxed is, and what its cost is abroad. This is not an easy task for impartial experts, and it requires a large force. I expect to apply to Congress this year for the sum of $250,000 to organize a force through which this investigation may go on, the results to be recorded for the use of the Executive and Congress when they desire to avail themselves of the record. In this way any subsequent revision may be carried on with the aid of data secured officially and without regard to its argumentative effect upon the question of raising or lowering duties. Taken as a whole, therefore, I do not hesitate to repeat that the Republican party has substantially complied with its promise in respect to the tariff, and that it has set itself strongly in the right direction toward lower tariffs and furnished the means by which such lower tariffs can be properly and safely fixed.

An investigation by the tariff board of the sort proposed will certainly take a full two years or longer. Meantime the operation of the present tariff promises to be consistent with the prosperity of the country and with the furnishing of sufficient funds with which to meet the very heavy but necessary expenditures of carrying on our great Government.

The Republican national platform contained the following:

> We favor the establishment of a postal savings-bank system for the convenience of the people and the encouragement of thrift.

A bill has been introduced to establish a postal savings bank. The great difficulty in the bill seems to have been to secure a proper provision for the management and investment of the money deposited. The great advantage of a postal savings bank is the encouragement to thrift of those whose fears of the solvency of any depository except a government depository tempts them away from saving. A government promise to repay seems to be specially effective in leading people to save and deposit their savings. The machinery of the Post-Office, with its 60,000 post-offices and 40,000 money-order offices, offers an economical and far-reaching machine for the reception in places remote from banks, and among people who fear banks, of that which but for the opportunity they would not save but spend. The low interest offered to it, that of 3 per cent, prevents such postal savings banks from interfering with regular savings banks whose rate of interest always is in excess of 2 per cent.

In the present stage of the Senate bill there have been inserted amendments drawn apparently for the purpose of having money deposited as savings in government post-offices distributed through the locality where deposited in the banks, state and national, and so deposited as to make it impossible for the trustees of the fund appointed under the law to withdraw the money for investment in any other form. I regard such an amendment as likely to defeat the law. First, because it takes away a feature which ought to be present in the law to assure its constitutionality. If the law provided that the trustees to be appointed under the law with the funds thus deposited could meet the financial exigencies of the Government by purchase or redemption of the government 2 per cent and other bonds, the measure would certainly be within the federal power, because the postal banks would then clearly be an instrument of the National Government in borrowing money. We have now about $700,000,000 of 2 per cent bonds with respect to which we owe a duty to the owners to see that those bonds may be taken care of without reduction below the par value thereof, because they were forced upon national banks at this low rate in order that the banks might have a basis of circulation.

This implied obligation of the Government, the postal savings-bank funds would easily enable it to meet. Secondly, if the funds are to be arbitrarily deposited in all banks, state and national, without national supervision over the state banks, and a panic were to come, it is difficult to see how the Government could meet its obligations to its postal savings-bank depositors, because with every bank suspending payment, the funds of the postal savings banks would be beyond the control of the Government, and we should have a financial disaster greater than any panic we have heretofore met. A provision that when the money is not needed to invest in government bonds or to redeem the same it may be deposited in national banks in the neighborhood of the place of deposit, will avoid the great danger of a panic and will strengthen a banking system which is an arm of the Federal Government. I sincerely hope that before the measure is hammered into its final shape it may take on these characteristics which shall give it a constitutional validity and sound financial strength and usefulness. Those who insist upon the elimination of these two necessary characteristic features of the bill will put the party in the position where it can not hope to escape the charge that it is not in good faith seeking the passage of a postal savings-bank act, and is not seeking, therefore, to comply with the promise of the Republican platform in that regard.

On the subject of railroads the Republican platform said:

> We approve the enactment of the railroad-rate law and the vigorous enforcement by the present administration of the statutes against rebates and discriminations as a result of which the advantages formerly possessed by the large shipper over the small shipper have substantially disappeared; and in this connection we commend the appropriation by the present Congress to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to thoroughly investigate and give publicity to the accounts of interstate railroads. We believe, however, that the interstate-commerce law should be further amended so as to give railroads the right to make and publish traffic agreements subject to the approval of the commission, but maintaining always the principle of competition between naturally competing lines and avoiding the common control of such lines by any means whatsoever. We favor such national legislation and supervision as will prevent the future overissue of stocks and bonds by interstate carriers.

A bill to carry out these declarations has been introduced in both the House and the Senate, and is now being considered before the appropriate committees of those two bodies, and there is every hope that the bills thus introduced, in substantially the same shape as introduced, will pass and be enacted into law. Indeed, this railroad measure goes further than the promise of the platform, for while it subjects the issue of stock and bonds to the restrictive supervision of the commission and prevents future watering of securities and forbids the acquisition by a railroad company of stock in a competing line, it also puts very much more power into the hands of the commission for the regulation of rates, and it facilitates in every way the ease of supervision by the commission of the railroads to secure a compliance by the railroad with the rights of the public and of the shipper. The bill was prepared by the Attorney-General, after a full conference with the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the representatives of the shippers, and with the representatives of the railroads, and while it was not the result of an agreement between all the parties in interest, it was drafted with a view to meeting all the fair objections and suggestions made by every one of them.

The platform further provided:

The Republican party will uphold at all times the authority and integrity of the courts, state and federal, and will ever insist that their powers to enforce their process and to protect life, liberty, and property shall be preserved inviolate. We believe, however, that the rules of procedure in the federal courts with respect to the issuance of the writ of injunction should be more accurately defined by statute, and that no injunction or temporary restraining order should be issued without notice, except where irreparable injury would result from delay, in which case a speedy hearing thereafter should be granted.

A bill to carry out exactly this promise has been introduced into both the Senate and House and will doubtless come up for consideration and passage. The bill does not go as far as Mr. Gompers and the Federation of Labor demand, but it goes as far as the Republican convention was willing to let it go, and it is so drawn as to make an abuse of the issuance of injunction without notice very improbable. It requires that no injunction shall be issued without full notice and hearing, unless to prevent irreparable injury, and that in such case the court shall make a finding from the evidence adduced, pointing out what the injury anticipated is and why irreparable, and why there is not time to give notice; and after the injunction shall be issued without notice, it is provided that such injunction shall lose its force at the expiration of five days unless a hearing is had.

The platform also promised statehood to Arizona and New Mexico, and the bill providing such statehood has passed the House and has been favorably considered by the committee of the Senate, so that there seems to be no reasonable doubt that this promise will be fully kept.

The Republicans in their platform spoke further, as follows:

We indorse the movement inaugurated by the administration for the conservation of natural resources; we approve all measures to prevent the waste of timber; we commend the work now going on for the reclamation of arid lands, and reaffirm the Republican policy of the free distribution of the available areas of the public domain to the landless settler. No obligation of the future is more insistent and none will result in greater blessings to posterity. In line with this splendid undertaking is the further duty, equally imperative, to enter upon a systematic improvement upon a large and comprehensive plan, just to all portions of the country, of the waterways, harbors, and Great Lakes, whose natural adaptability to the increasing traffic of the land is one of the greatest gifts of a benign Providence.

In accordance with this plank measures for the conservation of the public domain, for the reclassification of lands according to their greatest utility, and the vesting of power in the Executive to dispose of coal, phosphate, oil, and mineral lands, and of water-power sites in such a way as to prevent their monopoly, and union of ownership in one syndicate, or combination, have been already introduced and will doubtless in a form approved by Congress be made into law. The subject has attracted the widest interest, and its importance is becoming more and more impressed upon the American people.

The river and harbor bill, which has just been reported by the River and Harbor Committee of the House, has been framed with a view to complying with the plank of the platform I have just above quoted. It has taken the plan for the improvement of the Ohio from Pittsburg to Cairo as a project to be carried out in a certain number of years, and it has treated similar projects for the improvement of the Missouri from Kansas City to St. Louis, for improvement of the Mississippi from St. Paul to St. Louis, and of the same river from St. Louis to Cairo; and by continuing contracts and regular appropriations these projects will go on until they are completed. This is a change from the previous plans and is the result of an extended popular agitation in favor of such a system.

Following the panic of 1907 the governmental revenues fell off and the expenditures continued as before, leaving a deficit for the years 1907, 1908, and 1909. There was, however, no deficit in the whole administration of Mr. Roosevelt when the expenses are compared with the revenues. Indeed, it will be found that under the operation of the Dingley bill, which covers most of his administration, and the first six months of the present administration, the surplus on the whole was about $250,000,000. At the beginning of this administration, however, it was perfectly evident that with expenses increasing and revenues decreasing there would be a continuous deficit, and this the Republican party, with its majority in Congress and the responsibility placed upon it, has proposed to meet by reducing expenditures and increasing revenues.

I have already shown what the increase in revenues has been. The present administration in its estimates for the year ending June 30, 1911, cut them some forty-odd million dollars below the actual appropriations of the year before, and now it is proposed to appoint a joint commission, consisting of Senators, Representatives, and members appointed by the Executive, who shall examine the organization of the various departments and bureaus, and by the elimination of duplication, the consolidation of bureaus, and the increase in efficiency of the individual civil servant shall decrease the regular permanent cost of governmental operation.

With respect to trusts, the Republican party spoke as follows in its platform:

The Republican party passed the Sherman antitrust law over Democratic opposition and enforced it after Democratic dereliction. It has been a wholesome instrument for good in the hands of a wise and fearless administration. But experience has shown that its effectiveness can be strengthened and its real objects better attained by such amendments as will give to the Federal Government greater supervision and control over and secure greater publicity in the management of that class of corporations engaged in interstate commerce having power and opportunity to affect monopolies.

Since this plank was adopted prosecutions of the tobacco trust and the Standard Oil trust, begun in the last administration, have gone on and have resulted in decrees in the court of appeals of the second and eighth circuits, which are now pending on appeal in the Supreme Court. The decrees in each case tear apart the congeries of subordinate corporations which, united by holding companies, make up the trust in each case and enjoin individuals from a further maintenance of the illegal combination of such corporations to carry on the business for which it was organized.

It has been said that the Republican party made a promise so to amend the law as to ameliorate and soften the application of the trust law in its interdiction upon business as conducted by the greatest corporations, but I find nothing in the platform to justify such a construction. The principle of the antitrust law is that those engaged in modern business, especially of manufacture and transportation, shall pursue the policy with respect to their competitors of "Live and let live," and that they shall not use the bigness of their concerns to frighten exclusive patronage from customers and eliminate smaller concerns from competition, and thus control output and fix prices.

The Attorney-General has prepared a bill which, he thinks and I think, will offer to those who wish to pursue a lawful method of business the means of easily doing so. A lawful interstate business under the protection of a federal charter which, while it will subject the business of the concern to the closest scrutiny of government officers, will save the business from harassment by state authorities and will give it that protection which a peaceful pursuit of its business as a federal corporation will necessarily secure it. This measure has not met the approval of those who fear too great concentration of power in the Federal Government, of those who deny the right of the Federal Government in such cases to grant incorporation. I believe the act to be constitutional, and I believe that if enforced it would furnish a solution of our present difficulties; but as it was not specifically declared for in the Republican platform, I do not feel justified in asking the adoption of such an act as a party matter. I have brought it forward, however, as a suggestion for meeting the difficulties which are likely to be presented in the prosecution of suspected illegal trusts as a means by which they can put their houses in order and take their places among those engaged in legitimate business.

If the other measures to which I have referred are enacted into law, and the pledges of the Republican party performed, there would seem to be no good reason why the party should not receive renewed approval by the electors of the country in the coming congressional campaign. But there are signs which many construe as an indication that the Republican majority in the present Congress will change to a Democratic majority in the next. This is based chiefly on the dissensions in the Republican party and upon the very severe attacks made by a great many of the newspapers having Republican tendencies upon the party and its leaders in Congress and in the Nation. I am glad to say that so far as the legislation which I have indicated above is concerned, there seems to be a clear party majority in both Houses in favor of its passage and the consequent redemption of the party pledges. There is, however, a very decided difference as to the proper rules to prevail in the House and as to the personnel of the leadership.

It would seem as if these questions were questions that might well be solved within the party lines, but they have been so acute as to produce what has been called an insurrection and to awaken the country over a controversy between the insurgents and the regulars, so called. I am hopeful that as we approach the lines of battle for the next year, the settlement of these internal questions can be effected without such a breach of the party as to prevent our presenting an unbroken front to the enemy.

We among the Republicans may be discouraged when we consider our own dissensions, but when we look to the possibility of any united action on the part of the Democrats for any policy or any line of policies we must take courage. It was General Grant who said that when he first went into battle he had a great deal of fear, but he overcame that feeling by maintaining in his mind the constant thought how much more afraid his opponent was. And so we who find ourselves at times given over to the thought that Republican control is at an end should not forget to consider not only our own factional strife but also that of our ancient enemy. If the Democratic party were a solid, cohesive opposition, guided by one principle and following the same economic views as a whole, the situation would be far more discouraging than it is. The Republican party has been the party responsible for the Government for the last seventeen years. It has discharged those responsibilities with wonderful success. The problems growing out of the Spanish war and those which have come from the rapid accumulation of wealth and the greed for power of its accumulators it has fallen to the party to meet, and while they have not yet all had a perfect solution, the record is one of which we have no reason to be ashamed.

Mr. Roosevelt aroused the country and the people to the danger we were in of having all our politics and all our places of governmental authority controlled in corporate interests and to serve the greed of selfish but powerful men. During his two terms of office, by what almost may be compared to a religious crusade, he aroused the people to the point of protecting themselves and the public interest against the aggressions of corporate greed, and left public opinion in an apt condition to bring about the reforms needed to clinch his policies and to make them permanent in the form of enacted law.

But as an inevitable aftermath of such agitation, we find a condition of hysteria on the part of certain individuals, and on the part of others a condition of hypocrisy manifesting itself in the blind denunciation of all wealth and in the impeachment of the motives of men of the highest character, and by demagogic appeals to the imagination of a people greatly aroused upon the subject of purity and honesty in the administration of government. The tendency is to resent attachment to party or party organization, and to an assertion of individual opinion and purpose at the expense of party discipline. The movement is toward factionalism and small groups, rather than toward large party organization, and the leaders of the party organization are subjected to the severest attacks and to the questioning of their motives without any adequate evidence to justify it.

I am far from saying that the Republican party is perfect. No party which has exercised such power as it has exercised for the last seventeen years could be expected to maintain either in its rank and file or in its management men of the purest and highest motives only. And I am the last one to advocate any halt in the prosecution and condemnation of Republicans, however prominent and powerful, whose conduct requires criminal or other prosecution and condemnation. It should be well understood that with the Republican party in its present condition, with its various divisions subjected to the cross fire of its own newspapers and its own factions, any halt or failure on the part of those in authority to punish and condemn corruption or corrupt methods will be properly visited upon the party itself, however many good men it contains.

We shall be called upon to respond to the charge in the next campaign that the tariff, for which we are responsible, has raised prices. If the people listen to reasonable argument, it will be easy to demonstrate that high prices proceed from an entirely different cause, and that the present tariff, being largely a revision downward, except with respect to silks and liquors, which are luxuries, can not be charged with having increased any prices. But this will not prevent our Democratic friends from arguing on the principle of post hoc propter hoc, that because high prices followed the tariff, therefore they are the result of it. And we must not be blind to the weight of such an argument in an electoral campaign. The reason for the rise in the cost of necessities can easily be traced to the increase in our measure of values, the precious metal, gold, and possibly in some cases to the combinations in restraint of trade. The question of the tariff must be argued out. The prejudice created by the early attacks upon the bill and the gross misrepresentations of its character must be met by a careful presentation of the facts as to the contents of the bill and also as to its actual operation and statistics shown thereby. I believe we have a strong case if we can only get it into the minds of the people. Should disaster follow us and the Republican majority in the House become a minority in the next House, it may be possible that in the Democratic exercise of its power, the people of this country will see which is the party of accomplishment, which is the party of arduous deeds done, and which is the party of words and irresponsible opposition.

I only want one more word. From time to time attacks are made upon the administration on the ground that its policy tends to create a panic in Wall street and to disturb business. All I have to say upon that subject is this: That certainly no one responsible for a Government like ours would foolishly run amuck in business and destroy values and confidence just for the pleasure of doing so. No one has a motive as strong as the administration in power to cultivate and strengthen business confidence and business prosperity. But it does rest with the National Government to enforce the law, and if the enforcement of the law is not consistent with the present method of carrying on business, then it does not speak well for the present methods of conducting business, and they must be changed to conform to the law. There was no promise on the part of the Republican party to change the antitrust law except to strengthen it, or to authorize monopoly and a suppression of competition and the control of prices, and those who look forward to such a change can not now visit the responsibility for their mistake on innocent persons. Of course the Government at Washington can be counted on to enforce the law in the way best calculated to prevent a destruction of public confidence in business, but that it must enforce the law goes without saying.

I am glad to be present at this meeting of the Republican Club of New York and here meet your distinguished governor, whose name is such a power before the people of this State and of the country, that to lose him as a candidate for governor by his voluntary withdrawal is to lose the strongest asset that the Republican party has in the State to enable it to win at the next election.

I am glad to be here at the meeting of the Republican Club on Lincoln's birthday, because my knowledge and information with respect to the club is that it stands for stalwart Republicanism, believes in party organization and party discipline, but insists on the highest ideals and methods in formulating the policies of the party and carrying them out.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact filed by the court in the following causes:

Edward Ambler, executor of James M. Ambler, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 362); and John R. Adams v. United States (S. Doc. No. 363).

The foregoing causes were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12438) to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriations and provisions to carry the same into effect."

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 5237. An act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5573. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and wars other than the civil war and to certain widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 5574. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 19255. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911;

H. R. 19959. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 20480. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 20490. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 12438. An act to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriations and provisions to carry the same into effect;

H. R. 14676. An act for the relief of the Pittsburg Brewing Company;

H. R. 15448. An act to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia;

H. R. 18895. An act to authorize the Wilson and Glassport Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Monongahela River between Wilson and Glassport boroughs, Allegheny County, Pa.;

H. R. 19399. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., by the St. Louis Electric Bridge Company; and

S. J. Res. 66. Joint resolution amending section 18 of the act of July 2, 1909, entitled "An act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WETMORE. I present a memorial of ex-Governor Sprague, of Rhode Island, who was a Member of this body for twelve years. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senators and Representatives in the Congress from Rhode Island.

GENTLEMEN: I had an opportunity during the civil war to see military operations in the field and know many officers who served in all the grades from second lieutenant to the highest rank in the service. Most of these officers were volunteers, and a large proportion rose from privates to commissioned officers for gallant and meritorious services and showed equal capacity, as a whole, to officers trained in our military and naval schools. At the close of the war they returned to private life and to seek such employment as they could find. Some gained distinction in civil life, but a vast majority have had to struggle for an existence for the last forty-five years. They have received the same pension as all soldiers of the civil war have received and have always been as true to their own comrades as they were when they led them on in battle and cared for them in camp and on the march. I am glad that bills to create "a volunteer-officer retired list" have been introduced in Congress and hope some one of the bills will be passed this session. The old officers are dropping off very fast, and if due recognition is to be made of their great services to the Union, I think it can not be done too soon.

WILLIAM SPRAGUE,
Surviving War Governor.

Mr. WETMORE presented a resolution adopted by the city council of Providence, R. I., favoring the reduction of the duty on meat and food products, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM presented memorials of sundry citizens of Victor, Cripple Creek, and Merino, all in the State of Colorado, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURNHAM presented a petition of Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, No. 15, of Crescent City, N. H., praying for the passage of the so-called "ship-subsidy bill," which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the International Association of Master House Painters and Decorators of the United States and Canada, praying for the passage of the so-called "Heyburn pure-paint bill," which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of New Market, N. H., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the New England Wireless Society, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the appointment by the President of a commission of seven members to prescribe rules and regulation for the use of wireless apparatus, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Wheeling, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

He also presented a petition of the Knights of Columbus Council, No. 715, of Grafton, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the admission of publications of fraternal societies to the mail as second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented memorials of Typographical Union, No. 79, of Wheeling; of Typographical Union, No. 372, of Clarksburg; of J. H. Chapman, of Hugheston; of Paul Kotchpa, of Wheeling; of H. W. Greenlee, of Leon; of Julius W. Hill, of Charleston; of O. A. Pope, of Ronceverte; and of D. B. Snider, of Fairmont, all in the State of West Virginia; of National Council, Knights and Ladies of Security, of Topeka, Kans.; and of the Postal Defense League, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against any increase in the postal rates on second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BULKELEY presented memorials of sundry citizens of Middletown, New Britain, and East Haddam, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein). That the following memorial be adopted and copies sent to the Senate and House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C.:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Kansas, respectfully represent:

That whereas a bill is now pending in Congress having for its purpose the granting of pensions to the survivors of what is known as the "Battle of Beecher Island" and their widows:

Now therefore your memorialists urgently recommend the enactment of said legislation. Said legislation is necessary for the reason that the participants in said battle were civilian scouts enlisted and recruited by Col. George Alexander Forsyth, and were known as "Forsyth's Scouts;" that there were in number about 50 of said scouts, including their officers, and that at a point known as "Beecher's Island," in the State of Colorado, a battle was fought with the Indians September 17, 1868; that said scouts and their officers were surrounded by more than 1,000 Indians for nine days and nights; that 5 of them were killed and 21 wounded, and the survivors suffered untold agony; that only a small number of said scouts survive to this day, and that practically all of them and their widows are in straitened circumstances financially; that had they been regularly enlisted in the United States Army, they would long since have been receiving pensions; but on account of the irregularity of their enlistment in the service which they rendered to their country, they are not entitled to pensions under the general law. For this reason a special bill has been introduced in Congress for their relief. Your memorialists therefore earnestly recommend that said bill be passed, in order that these men may receive that recognition to which they have always been entitled, but which they have never received.

The secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward copies of this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and our Representatives in Congress.

Passed the house January 29, 1907.
Passed the senate February 8, 1907.
Approved February 11, 1907.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a memorial of sundry citizens of McPherson and Palco, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Maple Hill, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit dealings in futures and gambling in farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wheatland, Ind., and a petition of sundry citizens of Loogootee, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit dealing in futures and gambling in farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Claremont, N. H., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RAYNER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Baltimore and Westminster, in the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Typographical Union No. 12, of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the rate of postage on periodicals and magazines, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Middlesex and Norfolk Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to conserve the natural resources of the country, which was referred to the Committee on National Resources.

Mr. OLIVER presented memorials of Scottdale Chapter, No. 114, of McKeesport Chapter, No. 273, and of Pittsburg Chapter, No. 3, all of the American Insurance Union, in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the rate of postage on periodicals and magazines, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Gratz, Pa., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Bolivar, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of the Maine Press Association, remonstrating against the printing by the Government of certain matter on stamped envelopes, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MARTIN presented memorials of sundry citizens of Newport News, Clover, and Warm Springs, all in the State of Virginia, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KEAN presented memorials of sundry citizens of Elizabeth and Belmar, of the New Jersey Bankers' Association, and of Group No. 1, New Jersey Bankers' Association of Perth Amboy, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Federated Trades Council of the Oranges, New Jersey, praying for the passage of the so-called "eight-hour bill," which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Centerville and Chestertown, in the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of the Ben Franklin Club, of Lincoln, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the printing by the Government of certain matter on stamped envelopes, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CURTIS presented memorials of sundry citizens of White City, Soldier, Longford, Lenexa, Pittsburg, Phillipsburg, Liberty, Hesston, Lancaster, Mineral, and Santa Fe, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings-bank bill," which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to defer the date of filing the first reports required by the corporation tax law until the Supreme Court renders a decision as to the constitutionality of that law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROOT presented memorials of sundry citizens of New York City, Syracuse, Geneva, Perry, Canandaigua, Clifton Park, and Brooklyn, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the rate of postage on second-class mail matter, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Maine Press Association, remonstrating against the printing by the Government of certain matter on stamped envelopes, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 226) to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of Nebraska into divisions and to provide for an additional district judge in said district," reported it without amendment.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 539) to amend an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto, so as to extend the benefits thereof to the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 220) thereon.

Mr. BOURNE. I am directed by the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12397) granting certain rights and privileges to the department of fisheries of the State of Pennsylvania, to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, where it properly belongs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Fisheries will be discharged and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. PILES, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6051) to authorize the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company to reconstruct, maintain, and operate its railway bridges across the Escambia Bay, Choctawhatchee River, and Apalachicola River, in the State of Florida, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 221) thereon.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5705) to authorize the issue and sale of certificates of indebtedness against the reclamation fund, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 222) thereon.

UINTA INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am directed by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5926) making available certain lands on the former Uinta Indian Reservation under the reclamation act, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 219) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. The bill is confined in terms to a Utah Indian reservation, but it draws from the fund which belongs to all the States. I should like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. While it is true that the money is paid from the reclamation fund, it will be charged against the project, and will have to be paid ultimately by the farmers who receive the water.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask how much money will be required to buy this land?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Over $60,000. The lands are grazing lands and are being leased, and will in the course of ten years or such a matter return to the fund all the money that is paid.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wish to ask another question of the Senator from Utah. The bill draws $60,000 from the present available moneys in that fund. I understand from the official communication that was made to us that that fund is very short, and we are proposing to borrow $30,000,000 to augment it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator will observe that the payment is not to be made at once. It is to be made in five equal annual installments. It will not constitute a very great drain on the fund.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted to know, because that fund is of the utmost importance to the States where it will be made applicable. I notice a provision, as I heard the bill read, that the Indian title was extinguished. Do the Indians receive any part of the money that is paid for the land?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Indians receive all of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. A dollar and a quarter an acre?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A dollar and a quarter an acre. It goes into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. Do any Indians occupy this land?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; no Indians occupy it. They are many miles away from this land.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend to inquire as to the Indians, because I assume and I know that the Senators representing Utah are quite competent to look after all those matters within the State, and I never interfere, but the fund is a matter in which we are all interested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHIVELY. I understood the Senator from Utah a moment ago to say that when the titles are extinguished and the money received such money is to go to the Indians.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. I notice the concluding lines of the bill say something about certain funds being turned into the reclamation fund.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the fund arising from the land. The bill provides first that the sum of $1.25 an acre shall be paid for the land. Then, after the lands are paid for, any proceeds arising from the lands——

Mr. SHIVELY. From the sale of the lands?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the sale or rental of the lands, any proceeds from any source whatever connected with the lands, shall be covered into the reclamation fund.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong the consideration of this question, but it occurs to me that under the provisions or within the spirit of the general law providing for the reclamation fund this $1.25 should go into that fund.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What fund?

Mr. HEYBURN. Into the fund from which the reclamation fund is sustained.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. It is public land.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; these lands were formerly a part of the Uinta Indian Reservation. It is provided by law that the proceeds arising from the lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of these Indians. While it is true that these are grazing lands, they are valuable lands, and the Indians should be first of all paid for them. We ought not to take——

Mr. HEYBURN. Let me interrupt the Senator there. Is not that, in a measure, repealing the existing law which provides that the proceeds of the sale of public lands shall go into the reclamation fund?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. These are public lands, but they are charged with a trust for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, should not that trust be discharged out of the Treasury of the United States? Is there any justification for diverting the proceeds of the sale of public lands from the reclamation fund to pay a private debt?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. These lands ultimately go into this project and constitute a part of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. But if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, they constitute a part of the project just as much as the reservoir itself or the work which is constructed in connection with the reservoir. It is proper that the reclamation fund should bear the burden of it, precisely as it bears the burden of constructing the reservoir or the tunnel through the mountain which is connected with the reservoir. I will assure the Senator that the reclamation fund will not suffer. Before the tunnel is constructed the rental arising from the land, which will be returned to the reclamation fund, will be a large portion of the money that has been paid.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is only a medium through which the reclamation fund can derive anything by the rentals of the land in lieu of the sale of the land?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps, later along, some of the lands may be sold, but at present they ought not to be sold. Perhaps they ought never to be sold at all; but the rentals will go a long way toward this expenditure. I know that, because they have already brought a considerable return.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator thinks, then, that the reclamation fund will not be a loser by reason of the payment of this money from the reclamation fund?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am quite certain the reclamation fund in the end will not be a loser by this transaction.

Mr. HEYBURN. Except, of course, we take notice of the fact that that is a question which affects all the States having these projects.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite understand the Senator's position.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is well to keep that in view.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands were, on page 2, line 6, after the word "proceeds," to insert the word "arising," and, in line 7, after the word "therefrom," to insert "as rentals or otherwise," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay from the reclamation fund for the benefit of the Uinta Indians the sum of $1.25 per acre for the lands in the former Uinta Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, which were set apart by the President for reservoir and other purposes under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1905, chapter 1479, and which were by the Secretary of the Interior withdrawn for irrigation works under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, in connection with the reservoir for the Strawberry Valley project. Such payment shall be made in five annual installments, and the moneys paid shall be subject to the same disposition as the proceeds of the sales of lands in the former Indian reservation. All right, title, and interest of the Indians in the said lands are hereby extinguished, and the same shall be available in connection with the operations under the reclamation act, and any proceeds arising therefrom as rentals or otherwise shall be covered into the reclamation fund.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 143), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Twenty-sixth Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission, for the year ended June 30, 1909.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 14, 1910.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 19255. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 19959. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 20480. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 20490. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

RETURN OF BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 5522) to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River near Paroquet, Ark.; the bill (S. 5523) to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the St. Francis River near Parkin, Ark.; and the bill (S. 5524) to authorize the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the White River, at Augusta, Ark., returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the votes by which the bills were ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the bills be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the Committee on the Judiciary has yet given any consideration to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 50) providing for the election of Senators by direct vote?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator is making the inquiry of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that the committee has given consideration to the joint resolution, but has arrived at no conclusion thereon.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to state that consideration has been given to the joint resolution?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I said the committee had given consideration to it. I did not say that they have completed the consideration. I understood the Senator to ask if any consideration had been given to the joint resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire if there is any prospect that a report will be made soon?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator is as good a judge of prospects in a committee of the Senate as I am.

Mr. BRISTOW. I hardly think I am as good a judge of the prospect in regard to a joint resolution before the Committee on the Judiciary as the chairman of that committee would be.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As I stated to the Senator on a previous occasion, I would not attempt to prophesy how or when the joint resolution may be conclusively considered in the Judiciary Committee. I have said to the Senator before, and I say now, that the committee intends to act in entire good faith toward the joint resolution, as toward every piece of legislation referred to that committee. Further than that I can not tell the Senator.

I will say further that the Senator ought not to inquire unless he desires to have the committee discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have no desire to have the committee discharged; if the committee is giving serious consideration to it and for the purpose of reporting the joint resolution either favorably or adversely I am satisfied, only I should like to have it reported at as early a date as possible.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say further to the Senator, so that there will be no misunderstanding, that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary is not laying aside all other work before it for the purpose of considering this joint resolution. If the Senator desires, he is at liberty at any time and I welcome him to enlighten the committee on the merits of the joint resolution to which he refers. The meetings of the committee are always open to him or to others who desire to call up any particular legislation proposed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Thank you.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first bill on the calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as first in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property was announced as next in order.

Mr. MARTIN. That bill can be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. That is the unfinished business, and it will be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1035) authorizing and directing the Secretary of State to examine and settle the claim of the Wales Island Packing Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. KEAN. That is a very meritorious bill, I will say to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand; but there are questions connected with it that it will take some time to dispose of.

The bill (S. 5876) to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

W. B. GRAHAM.

The bill (S. 4778) to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, that is the bill that was up some days ago for discussion, and I made an inquiry as to the basis for the claim. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] replied that it was for clerical assistance in a post-office, and for moneys that the postmaster had expended for clerical assistance; that the postmaster had not been authorized to make such an expenditure by the department, but that the department had requested or recommended that this bill reimbursing him be passed.

There was an appropriation of $100,000 made that year in the post-office appropriation bill for the purpose of paying just such expenses incurred by postmasters. I understand that the Post-Office Department asked for a deficiency appropriation for the purpose of paying these and other claims, or making additional allowances to this and other offices, and the Post-Office Committee refused to place such an item in the deficiency appropriation bill; that is, it refused to include in the appropriation bill that year the money to pay such expenses. Then, the Post-Office Department seems to have authorized the postmaster to go ahead and expend this money, in the face of the fact that the Post-Office Committee had refused to recommend an appropriation. It seems to me that that is an arbitrary way of creating a deficiency in the face of Congress refusing to make an additional appropriation.

If a postmaster can go ahead and expend money beyond the amount appropriated by Congress, even when the Congress refuses to pass an item in a deficiency appropriation bill to provide additional money for such expenditures; if, then, the department can go ahead and expend the money anyway, apparently in defiance of the will of Congress, and come in here later with a private claim on the part of the postmaster and ask that that be provided for, there is no limit to the amount of the claims that can be created here. It seems to me like a very dangerous precedent, indeed, for Congress to establish, because the department simply relieves itself of all responsibility or authority over the limiting of expenditures if bills of this kind shall be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall have to ask that a vote be taken on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A vote on the final passage?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; a vote on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading? [Putting the question.] By the sound, the ayes have it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like the Senate to understand this appropriation. Here is a postmaster who goes ahead and makes expenditures at his post-office aggregating over $3,000 for clerical help over and above what the department allows him. A request is made by the department for an additional appropriation, over and above the $100,000 which was allowed for this purpose, as a deficiency. Congress refused that additional appropriation.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him whether that appropriation was asked for after the expenditures had been incurred or in anticipation of it?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think a part of it had been incurred before and a part of it afterwards. This additional amount was asked, and Congress refused, claiming that $100,00 was enough to meet all such expenditures in the department.

Now, in the face of that, the department authorizes this postmaster, or he does it without authority, I do not know which, to go ahead and incur this additional expense, and then a bill is brought in here as a private claim. What is to prevent any postmaster in the United States from doing the same thing and coming back here and asking that a private claim be passed to reimburse him for expenditures which he never was authorized to make or which Congress refused to recognize by an appropriation at the time?

Mr. FRAZIER. May I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. Was the expenditure made upon the authority of the Post-Office Department or by the postmaster on his own responsibility?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Post-Office Department made certain allowances to him out of the $100,000 which was appropriated to meet extraordinary conditions. It made no more, and this $3,000 is in addition to what the department allowed. Whether it was made by their authority or without their authority we are not advised, but we know that it is $3,000 more than was allowed the postmaster out of the appropriation. Now, why should he be reimbursed?

Mr. NIXON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. NIXON. Mr. President, in explanation I will state that the town of Ely, Nev., was a fourth-class post-office in 1907, and was advanced to the second class on July 1, 1908. It was prior to the time of its advancement to the second class that this deficiency occurred, which was brought about by a large influx of people because of the growth of Ely from a small settlement to a great mining camp. To give exact figures, on January 1, 1907, the postmaster was allowed $120 per year for regular clerk hire. On April 1, 1907, his allowance for regular clerk hire was increased to $300, and a further allowance was made of $300 from the appropriation for unusual conditions for May and June, 1907. On July 13, 1907, $1,000 was allowed from the appropriation for unusual conditions for the third quarter in 1907. On August 17, 1907, $1,000 was allowed from the appropriation for unusual conditions for the fourth quarter of 1907. The appropriation for unusual conditions was then practically exhausted, the sum of $19.81 only being left on hand.

The postmaster either had to pay the unusual expenses of the office out of his own funds or virtually close up the office. I do not believe the Post-Office Department authorized him to expend this money, but from January 1, 1908, no allowance was made except $300 for regular clerk hire, the appropriation for unusual conditions having been exhausted. Having the interest of the public at heart, and as an efficient postmaster and an American citizen looking out for the general welfare of the community, he continued to conduct the affairs of the office by advancing the necessary money out of his private funds.

I have a copy of a statement and affidavit here which I will not read, but simply ask leave to have printed as a part of my remarks, in order to make the record complete. It is a list of each item of expenditure, to which the postmaster has taken oath, and in many cases the receipts are with the papers accompanying the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The statement and affidavit referred to are as follows:

STATE OF NEVADA, County of White Pine, ss:

W. B. Graham, being duly sworn, says that at all the times mentioned in the foregoing statement he was the duly appointed and acting postmaster at Ely, White Pine County, in the State of Nevada.

That he has read the said statement and knows the contents thereof, and the same is true.

That each and every item contained in said statement, amounting in all to the sum of $3,335, has been paid by this affiant at the time and to the parties therein mentioned.

That the amounts set forth in said statement, for which there are no vouchers attached, were actually paid by affiant to said parties at the time mentioned in said statement.

That no voucher nor receipt was taken by affiant for any of the money paid as aforesaid except those vouchers or receipts hereto and to said statement attached.

That the present location of the parties named in said statement is the location therein named.

That affiant is unable at the present time to secure any vouchers for the said payments made by him, as set forth in said statement, other than the vouchers attached to said statement and herewith inclosed.

W. B. GRAHAM.

Subscribed and sworn to before the undersigned, a notary public in and for White Pine County and the State of Nevada, this 10th day of April, 1908.

[SEAL.] FRANK X. MURPHY.

STATE OF NEVADA, County of White Pine, ss:

W. B. Graham and Q. W. Hull, being duly sworn, each for himself, and not one for the other, says:

That during all the time between the 30th day of June, 1906, and the 1st day of April, 1908, the said W. G. Graham was the postmaster and the said Q. W. Hull was the duly appointed and acting assistant postmaster at Ely, White Pine County, Nev.

That during said time the said W. B. Graham, as such postmaster, paid, laid out, and expended for labor performed in relation to the proper care and handling of United States mail matter at the post-office at Ely aforesaid the sum of $3,335, as set forth in the foregoing attached statement.

That the said sum of $3,335, and the whole thereof, was properly and necessarily expended by said W. B. Graham as such postmaster in addition to all sums of money received by him in payment of clerk hire and other expenses incurred in the care, management, and control of said post-office during said period.

That no part of said sum of $3,335 has been paid, returned, nor refunded to said affiant, W. B. Graham, nor to any other person for his use or benefit.

That during all of said time the said post-office, and the business pertaining thereto, was managed economically, and with the least possible expense; and each and all of the persons named in said annexed statement worked diligently and well for more than eight hours each and every day during said time; and many days during said time affiant Hull worked in his capacity of assistant postmaster for more than fifteen hours per day.

That each of said clerks named in said statement was competent, and the services rendered by them were reasonably worth the said sum paid therefor.

That said services were necessary and could not have been secured without incurring the said expense, and paying out and expending the said sum of $3,335, and the whole thereof.

W. B. GRAHAM.
Q. W. HULL.

Subscribed and sworn to before the undersigned, a notary public for said county, this 10th day of April, 1908.

[SEAL.] FRANK X. MURPHY.

Mr. NIXON. Mr. President, I will state that in the report to the department from Assistant Superintendent Hall, who was an inspector for that district, he stated that from September 1, 1905, to January 1, 1908, the postmaster expended from his personal funds $2,570 for clerk hire, and that during the next six months he expended from his personal funds $765.

That is covered by this bill. As I said a few days ago when this matter was up, I personally am very familiar with the circumstances out there, and, regardless of the fact as to whether it is just the right thing or not, I know that this money was honestly expended by the postmaster in keeping the office open and for the benefit of the patrons of the office. I do not believe that any Senator here would say that it was good business policy to close up a post-office simply because there was no department provision to keep it open.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] that perhaps it would have been better if this matter had been taken care of by the Post-Office Department, but they informed me that it was impossible for it to be handled by them, on account of the appropriations for unusual conditions being exhausted. Therefore I introduced this bill. It covers the same character of legislation as other bills introduced by me in behalf of the postmasters at Goldfield, Tonopah, and Rhyolite, all of which have been passed by this body.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is proceeding under Rule VIII, which only permits a Senator to speak once.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will ask, then, that the bill go over.

Mr. KEAN. It is too late to do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Consent has been given for the consideration of the bill. The Senator from Kansas has demanded the yeas and nays on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. NIXON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. BOURNE. Before that question is put I should like to ask to have read the report of the committee containing the statement of the Post-Office Department on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon demands the reading of the report. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read report No. 161, submitted by Mr. BURROWS February 3, 1910, as follows:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4778) to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

A similar bill (S. 6682) was reported favorably from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads during the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, and the report made thereon is herewith made a part of the report on S. 4778.

[Senate Report No. 649, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6682) to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Post-Office Department, as will appear by the following letter:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1908.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 22d ultimo, relative to the merits of Senate bill 6682, "to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance," I beg to inform you that in view of the fact that Mr. Graham was forced to pay the amount claimed from his personal funds in excess of the amount allowed by the department, and the further fact that the department could not give him an increased allowance on account of the exhausted condition of the appropriation for unusual conditions, it is believed that this case is meritorious.

Very truly, yours,
C. P. GRANDFIELD,
Acting Postmaster-General.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads,
United States Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question or two of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON], who introduced this bill. I will say that I am not so much concerned about the question which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] raises as I am about the method of the Post-Office Department in doing business. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada how long a time this deficiency covered for which the postmaster at Ely has made claim?

Mr. NIXON. I think it is a period of about a year and a half.

Mr. BURKETT. Then, during that year and a half the postmaster paid out $3,000 more than he was allowed?

Mr. NIXON. Yes; he paid out that much more than he was allowed.

Mr. BURKETT. There was no appropriation bill, then, between the time when the deficiency started and the time when it ended? Is that the fact?

Mr. NIXON. I think that is the fact. The department, as I understand, requested an additional appropriation of $20,000 for unusual conditions, as stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], but that appropriation was not made. Therefore the department could make no allowance for that post-office, and the postmaster had to continue paying the expenses of the office out of his private funds or close the post-office.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the Senator know why the post-office was permitted to continue so long in the lower class? Why could it not have been advanced to a higher grade, so that it could be taken care of with an adequate allowance?

Mr. NIXON. As I understand, it takes a little over a year to accomplish that. A record of the business of a post-office for a year is taken as a basis for the advancement of the office. It was in the interim that this deficiency occurred. I do not remember the exact dates, but in the report which has been made the exact dates are given.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not want to object to the bill, but as I understood the reading of the statement by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON], this deficiency covered a period of three years; that it began back in 1905 and continued down to 1908.

Mr. NIXON. No.

Mr. BURKETT. But by the Senator's statement just made I see it is reduced a year and a half. It occurred to me that if the Post-Office Department had directed this post-office to run along in this unusual condition for three years without advancing it to the proper grade whereby they could take care of it in the ordinary way, or if they had permitted two or three appropriation bills to come up and had not called the matter to the attention of Congress, and then had not put in any more favorable report than the Acting Postmaster-General has filed in this case, there ought to be some additional reasons presented to the Senate to justify us in passing this bill. My criticism is lodged more at the Post-Office Department than it is at this postmaster, for I do not know anything about the conditions, but I was on the committee when some of the cases of these other towns, to which attention has been called, were considered, and I can imagine the growth of those towns and things which bring about such a condition; but it does seem to me that when a condition of this kind prevails in a town, the Post-Office Department ought to realize that such a case will be brought to the attention of Congress, and that the department ought to give it enough attention to report exactly what the circumstances are and exactly the amount that was paid out, so that the matter might be brought to us in a more complete way than it has been in this case.

Then, so far as the report is concerned, we are simply to take the word of the postmaster there and the word of the Senator, which, of course, is based on the report of the postmaster there, as to the amount the postmaster expended, when it seems to me that the Post-Office Department, with an inspector in that section of the country, ought to look after these matters carefully enough so as to present to us in a satisfactory manner a detailed statement of just what the postmaster had to pay out.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. NIXON. Mr. President, I said that these figures were corroborated by Superintendent Hall——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the right of the Senator from Nevada has been exhausted.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say that this claim—which is a pure claim—has taken the course that always ought to be taken in such cases. The Committee on Appropriations is continually beset by just such cases as this, and is asked to put such claims onto an appropriation bill. In the interest of good legislation, the Committee on Appropriations is obliged to decline to do so, and always takes the ground that all such cases should go to the Committee on Claims, and be reported from that committee as claims pure and simple, for they can not, under the rules, be incorporated in an appropriation bill.

So far as I can see, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] has pursued the proper course. Instead of entreating the Committee on Appropriations to put it on an appropriation bill, where as a claim it is not permissible, he has gone to the Committee on Claims, which has considered it as a pure claim and has reported it as such. I do not see how the Senator could have done more than that. It seems to me that, under these conditions, the bill is properly before the Senate by the report of a proper committee, which has, I presume, fully considered it.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to an interruption?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. As I understand the report, it does not come from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE. From what committee does it come?

Mr. BURTON. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is just as well.

Mr. BURTON. It is so designated in the report on the calendar, No. 170.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the point as to what committee has considered the bill is not essential. I supposed that the Committee on Claims had considered it; but as the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads always considers such claims and reports them, it relieves the Committee on Appropriations from putting them onto an appropriation bill. Whether the Post-Office Committee or the Committee on Claims reported it makes no difference. It has gone the round of the proper committee, which is in charge of it, which, instead of reporting it as an amendment to an appropriation bill, has reported it as an independent bill before the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, this bill comes from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I was not present at the time it was last considered. My recollection is that the bill was favorably reported at a previous session and that the Senate then passed it. My recollection, further, is that the merits of the bill consisted in the fact that originally the town of Ely only contained 100 or 200 people, and the post-office was a fourth-class post-office, but the mining interests of that town and section developed so rapidly that the town reached a population of as high as 20,000. Of course a fourth-class post-office could not then transact the business. The department allowed a certain sum of money for clerk hire, which was soon exhausted by reason of these unusual conditions. The postmaster spent a considerable sum, and the Post-Office Department recommended that this amount be paid back by reason of the extraordinary conditions then existing at that town. It was a mining town, which sometimes had a population of 100, sometimes a population of 10,000, and sometimes more than 10,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Before the Senator goes further I wish to ask if he is a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

Mr. CLAY. I am now and have been ever since I have been in the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Was the Senator present during the consideration of this claim?

Mr. CLAY. Yes; when it was considered three or four years ago. My recollection is that this claim was before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and that it was reported favorably and passed by the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The point to which I direct attention is, Was the proof in the form of vouchers of the actual paying out of this money such that the report of the committee was unanimous in regard to the amount?

Mr. CLAY. My recollection is that when the bill came before the committee it was referred to the Post-Office Department. The Post-Office Department was asked to inform the committee as to the merits of the claim, how much money had been paid out, and whether or not it was a just claim. The claim was then referred to a subcommittee, and the subcommittee heard testimony and reported in favor of this amount. I was not a member of the subcommittee. I am sure, though, that the bill was reported by the committee unanimously, and I think it passed the Senate. I am not certain of that, but my recollection is that it passed the Senate without any opposition. I am sure that the merits of this claim were based upon the fact that extraordinary conditions arose at that town by reason of increase of population that could not be met by the amount of money that had been appropriated to carry on the business.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Georgia is entirely correct in stating that unusual conditions arose in that State during the period of mining excitement. I think he has put the population of the town somewhat larger than it actually was. The Senator is probably referring to the town of Goldfield, which quickly rose from a town of a few thousand up to 18,000 or 20,000 population, and then gradually contracted to 8,000 or 10,000 later on.

Mr. CLAY. I think there was a contraction in reference to that town later on.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; and the town of Ely was also subjected to one of those sudden expansions of population arising from the development of the mining interest; and I have no question but that the postmaster performed a really patriotic duty in keeping the post-office open during this period of rapid expansion.

Mr. CLAY. The towns in the Senator's State grow up rapidly, and sometimes they do the reverse very rapidly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Sometimes; but the general tendency is toward expansion.

Mr. CLAY. I do not recall at this time having seen an accurate statement of the items relating to this claim, and I could not say that I had before me at the time I voted in committee an accurate statement in regard to it; but my recollection is that the subcommittee that investigated it did report, and that we adopted the report of the subcommittee.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia if the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads did not, in January, 1908, refuse to recommend a deficiency appropriation to meet such expenditures, claiming that the $100,000 which had been appropriated for that fiscal year was sufficient, and that the Post-Office Department should so manage as to get along with that amount of money?

Mr. CLAY. I do not recall; it may be true or it may not. It is almost impossible for a Senator to recall everything that happens in a committee room for years, and I have been serving on that committee, I believe, for thirteen years. I do remember, however, that two claims were pending before that committee in regard to extra services of postmasters in Nevada; that one of them we passed and I think it became a law. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] referred to the town a few moments ago. I know that the other bill was favorably reported, and I feel reasonably sure that it passed the Senate. The Senator from Nevada ought to know whether or not the pending measure passed the Senate heretofore.

Mr. NIXON. This measure passed the Senate at the last session, but failed in the House simply because it was never reached on the calendar.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has charge of this bill, and probably he is familiar with all the facts in regard to it. I do not see him present in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of the engrossment and third reading of the bill the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRISTOW. I withdraw the demand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 12316) to provide for the government of the Canal Zone, the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, without prejudice.

The bill (S. 5485) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of areas of public land pending report and recommendation to Congress or for examination and classification was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am requested by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. NELSON], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber, to ask that that bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

ALLOTMENT OF MAKAH INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 4653) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allot all the remaining unallotted lands within the Makah Indian Reservation, and to provide for the conservation and the sale of timber on such reservation, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to allot all remaining unallotted lands within the Makah Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the members of that tribe or, with the consent of a majority of the members of the tribe, to set aside from allotment and arrange for the conservation of such lands and for the cutting and sale of ripened and matured timber therefrom, the net proceeds from such sale to be placed to the credit of the tribe and expended for its benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. MILLER.

The bill (S. 863) to correct the military record of John M. Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. I ask if there is a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. BACON. If it is not very long, I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report (No. 173) submitted by Mr. BULKELEY on the 3d instant, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 863) to correct the military record of John M. Miller, have given the same very careful consideration, and report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

An identical bill to this was considered by your committee during the Sixtieth Congress, was favorably reported and passed the Senate.

In this connection attention is respectfully invited to the report made at that time, which is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 376, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6006) to correct the military record of John M. Miller, have given the same careful consideration and report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

From a careful examination of the papers in this case it appears that John M. Miller was enrolled August 8, 1861, and was mustered into service to take effect from August 30, 1861, as a private, Company D, Forty-fourth New York Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years, and that he was discharged the service, as a private, December 24, 1862, to reenlist in the United States artillery.

The records show that he reenlisted December 29, 1862, in Battery K, Fifth United States Artillery, to serve the remainder of his term of enlistment in the Forty-fourth New York Infantry, and was discharged, as a corporal, February 13, 1864, by reason of reenlistment.

The records further show that he again reenlisted in the same organization on the same date (Feb. 13, 1864) to serve three years.

The next record of this soldier appearing on the rolls of his regiment reports him as absent, sick, from April 23, 1864, until finally dropped as a deserter on December 14, 1865.

In explanation of the record showing that this soldier was absent, sick, from April 23, 1864, until finally dropped as a deserter on December 14, 1865, claimant alleged under oath, in an application to the War Department, that when he reenlisted on the above-named date he was given a furlough of thirty days, and at the end of said furlough he reported to the battery at Harrisburg, Pa.; that at that time he was left in the hospital; that after his return to duty from the post hospital at Camp Curtain, near Harrisburg, Pa., on July 11, 1862, he was detailed on duty with the provost-marshal at Harrisburg, Pa., and relieved from that duty on September 28, 1864, and ordered to proceed to New York City and rejoin his regiment.

This statement of the claimant is borne out by the original order which was filed with the papers before your committee, issued at Harrisburg, Pa., September 27, 1864, and known as "Special Orders B, No. 171," and states: "Corpl. J. M. Miller, K Company, Fifth United States Artillery, will proceed without delay to New York, N. Y., and report to the commanding officer of his company for duty; the Quartermaster's Department will please furnish transportation." Signed by the captain of the Veteran Reserve Corps, post adjutant, by order of Capt. R. I. Dodge, United States Army, commanding post, and indorsed by the depot quartermaster's office, Harrisburg, Pa., dated September 27, 1864, stating, "Transportation furnished to New York City, N. Y.," and signed by E. A. Reichenbach, captain and assistant quartermaster, and P. Parsons, F. clerk.

Claimant further affirms that upon the order above quoted he proceeded to report at New York City, but on his way stopped at his home at Esperance, N. Y.; that he found his father had died and that his mother and two sisters were destitute; that he stayed at home and took care of them; that he was very deaf at the time, and has never recovered his hearing.

While the soldier admits that he stayed too long, he alleges that he had no intention of deserting, nor does it appear from the facts in the case that any such intention existed.

In view of the exceptionally long and meritorious service of this soldier, covering not only his original enlistment but two reenlistments, and the manner of the separation of this soldier from the service, that he is to-day well advanced in years, nearly totally deaf by concussion and crippled by rheumatism, your committee believe that relief should be afforded him, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Attention is respectfully invited to the following papers, on which the above report is based:

1. Communication from the Adjutant-General United States Army, dated February 24, 1908, addressed to Hon. M. G. Bulkeley, United States Senate.
2. Communication as above, dated March 5, 1908.
3. Letter from the claimant, John M. Miller, dated February 20, 1908.
4. Letter from the claimant, John M. Miller, dated March 2, 1908.
5. Special Orders, "B" No. 171, Headquarters, Harrisburg, Pa.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 24, 1908.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 22d instant, received to-day, in which you request the military record of John M. Miller, formerly of the Forty-fourth New York Infantry, and Battery K, Fifth United States Artillery, I have the honor to inform you as follows:

It is shown by the records that John M. Miller was enrolled August 8, 1861, and was mustered into service to take effect from August 30, 1861, as a private, Company D, Forty-fourth New York Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years, and that he was discharged the service as a private December 24, 1862, to reenlist in the United States Artillery. He reenlisted December 29, 1862, in Battery K, Fifth United States Artillery, to serve the remainder of his term of enlistment in the Forty-fourth New York Infantry, and was discharged as a corporal February 13, 1864, by reason of reenlistment.

He again enlisted in the same organization February 13, 1864, to serve three years. He was returned to (that is, pronounced fit for) duty January 26, 1866, from hospital, Key West Barracks, Fla., where he had been under treatment, and, failing to rejoin his company, he became a deserter on that date. He did not report his whereabouts or the cause of his absence to the military authorities, although he owed service until February 13, 1867.

Application for removal of charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge in the case of this soldier has been repeatedly denied, and now stands denied, on the ground that he did not complete his term of enlistment, and was not prevented from completing it by disability incurred in the line of duty, and because the case does not come within any of the other provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, which is the only law now in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion.

Very respectfully,
F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General.

Hon. M. G. BULKELEY,
United States Senator.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 5, 1908.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of yesterday in which, with reference to the recent correspondence in the case of John M. Miller, formerly of Company D, Forty-fourth New York Infantry, and Battery K, Fifth United States Artillery, you state that you are advised by Mr. Miller that there must be some error in the record, as he was never in the hospital at Key West Barracks, Fla., and that in fact he was never in Florida at any time, and that he alleges that after his reenlistment in Battery K, Fifth United States Artillery, on February 16, 1864, he was given a furlough of thirty days; that at the end of the thirty days he reported to the battery at Harrisburg; that he was left sick in the hospital at that place, and later detailed on duty at the provost-marshal's office, and from there ordered to report at headquarters at Fort Hamilton; and referring to your request to be further advised in this matter, I have the honor to inform you as follows:

Upon a reexamination of the medical records it is found that one J. M. Miller, private, Company K, Fifth United States Artillery, was admitted to the post hospital at Key West Barracks, Fla., on January 23, 1866, with intermittent fever, and that he was returned to duty January 26, 1866. Upon a further examination, however, of the regimental records, it is found that there served in Battery K, Fifth United States Artillery, during January, 1866, one John D. Miller, and in view of this record it is possible, and perhaps probable, in view of the applicant's statement, that so much of the medical records as shows that the name of the soldier who was treated in the hospital at Key West, Fla., during January, 1866, was J. M. Miller is a clerical error, and that that record pertains to John D. Miller, then a member of that battery. This probability is further strengthened by the fact that on the muster rolls of Battery K, Fifth Artillery, John M. Miller is reported as absent sick from April 23, 1864, until finally dropped as a deserter on December 14, 1865.

In his application for removal of the charge of desertion of September 7, 1891, Miller stated that he reported at Harrisburg, Pa.; was taken sick there and placed in hospital; that he remained two months in the hospital and went home on a hospital furlough, and that he was unable to report to his regiment for a long time, and that his regiment was discharged before he was able. In a later statement, of November 28, 1905, he alleged that he was in the hospital at Harrisburg, Pa., and from there was detailed at the provost-marshal-general's office; that he received orders to report at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor; that on his way he stopped at his home at Esperance, N. Y.; that he found that his father had died and that his mother and two sisters were destitute; that he stayed at home and took care of them; that he was very deaf at the time, and has never recovered his hearing.

It will be seen that there is a radical discrepancy between these two statements as to the manner under which Miller finally left the service and as to the cause of his failure to rejoin his command. The latter statement of Miller is partly corroborated by the records, which show that after his return to duty from post hospital at Camp Curtin, near Harrisburg, Pa., on July 11, 1862, Miller was detailed on duty with the provost-marshal at Harrisburg, Pa., and relieved from that duty on September 28, 1864, and ordered to proceed to New York City to rejoin his regiment.

It is proper to add that, admitting all that is claimed by the applicant in this case, it is beyond the power of this department to extend to him any relief under existing law. He was a member of the Regular Army, and there is no provision in the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, which is the law governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion that is applicable to his case, and that would warrant the removal of the charge of desertion and the issue to him of an honorable discharge.

Very respectfully,
F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General.

Hon. M. G. BULKELEY,
United States Senate.

NEW HAVEN, February 20, 1908.

United States Senator MORGAN G. BULKELEY.

DEAR SIR: I take the privilege of dropping you a line in regard to a pension. I will here tell you the circumstances. I enlisted August 8, 1861, in the Forty-fourth New York, Ellsworth Regiment. After a time I was transferred to Battery K, Fifth United States Artillery, and served faithfully in the battery until February 13, 1864, when I was given an honorable discharge and reenlisted and was given a furlough of thirty days. At the end of thirty days I reported to battery at Harrisburg, Pa. I was sick and was left in the hospital, and after I was able to leave I was detailed on duty at the provost-marshal's office and was there for some time. Then I was ordered to report at headquarters at Fort Hamilton. I started, and on my way I stopped at home and found my father dead and my mother with little children to care for. I stayed, and of course I stayed too long. I had no intention of deserting. The war was ended in two or three months after. I served my country nearly four years, the best years of my life, in active service. I am a man now 67 years of age, am nearly totally deaf by concussion and crippled with rheumatism. I sent a paper to the Secretary of War and received in answer that he could do nothing, that I must get some Representative to do it for me. I made application for a pension on this discharge which I received when I reenlisted (which I now send you) under the act of February 6, 1907. All papers have gone through, and everything is all right up to this thing, which I was informed must be removed before anything more could be done. Now can't you do something for me and get this removed so that I may get something in return for my services? I have been a resident of New Haven for twenty years. Trusting that you will do something for me, I am,

Yours, respectfully,
JOHN M. MILLER.
10 Asylum Street, New Haven, Conn.

(Please return discharge.)

NEW HAVEN, CONN., March 2, 1908.

Honorable United States Senator M. G. BULKELEY.

DEAR SIR: I received yours of February 25, and in defense of myself I would say that the War Department has my record entirely wrong. I was never in hospital, Key West Barracks, Fla. I was never in Florida. I can prove by a number of persons that my record was just as I gave it to you, and I have my order which called me from Harrisburg to New York, which I will send you that you may see I am right. It may do no good, for I knew the War Department would not do anything for me, but is there no other way by which this can be removed? I served faithfully about four years and was in a good many engagements. I was very deaf when I left the army, and am almost entirely so now. Will you kindly inform me what the provisions in the act of Congress, 1899, were? It seems as though I might receive some compensation for my service.

Very respectfully, yours,
JOHN M. MILLER.
10 Asylum Street, New Haven, Conn.

SPECIAL ORDERS B, No. 171. HEADQUARTERS,
Harrisburg, Pa., September 27, 1864.

Corpl. J. M. Miller, K Company, Fifth New Jersey Artillery, will proceed without delay to New York, N. Y., and report to the commanding officer of his company for duty.

The quartermaster's department will please furnish transportation.

By order of Capt. R. I. Dodge, United States Army, commanding post.

S. O. HUME,
Captain, Veteran Reserve Corps, Post Adjutant.

(Indorsed:) Deprt. Qr. Mrs. Office, Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 27, 1864. Transportation furnished to New York City, N. Y., E. A. Reichenbach, Capt. & Asst. Qr. Mr.; P. Parsons, F. Clk.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN OATES.

The bill (S. 864) to correct the military record of John Oates was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to review the military record and revoke the order of dismissal by general courts-martial of John Oates, late a private in Company D, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of September 21, 1864; but no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT HUDSON FORLORN-HOPE STORMING PARTY.

The bill (S. 1531) to grant medals to survivors and heirs of volunteers of the Port Hudson forlorn-hope storming party was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $2,000 to procure a suitable bronze medal commemorating the organization of the volunteer storming party against the works at Port Hudson, La., organized, pursuant to General Order No. 49, by command of Major-General Banks, commanding the Department of the Gulf, June 15, 1863, and present one of said medals to each of the surviving volunteers of the storming party, and in case of the decease of the volunteer the medal shall be given to his widow or oldest heir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Manifestly, in line 6, on page 1, the comma should be stricken out after the word "organized."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MARTINSON.

The bill (H. R. 2828) for the relief of William Martinson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY AT SPRINGFIELD, MO.

The bill (S. 3501) providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the confederate cemetery at Springfield, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THIRTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18364) to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved July 2, 1909. It is a bill of public importance, which ought to be passed at once if it is to be passed at all. It is a bill making slight changes in the census law.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on the Census with an amendment on page 3, line 14, after the word "enterprises," to insert:

Quantity of land irrigated in the arid region of the United States and in each State and county in that section under state and federal laws; the price at which these lands, including water right, are obtainable; the character and value of crops produced on irrigated lands, the amount of water used per acre for said irrigation and whether it was obtainable from national, state, or private works; the location of the various projects and method of construction with facts as to their physical condition.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not, under the amendment which is proposed, the Director of the Census would get information with reference to irrigation works by private capital? I notice it uses the terms "under state and federal laws." I do not know whether that would restrict the inquiry to such an extent as to cut out information with reference to purely private irrigation enterprises. I should like to have the Senator state what is the fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In my opinion it would confine the investigation to such irrigation enterprises as are authorized either by state or federal law. If the private enterprises of which the Senator speaks are under state regulation, are authorized by state statutes, then they would come within the scope of this inquiry. If they were not conducted under a statute, they would not come within this inquiry.

Mr. JONES. What I have in mind is that we have reclamation works put in under what is known as the "Carey Act," under which the State does the reclamation work through private parties. That is possibly what is meant by state law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir. I think those would plainly be included within the scope of the legislation.

Mr. JONES. Is that all that would be included under the term "state regulation?"

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Manifestly not.

Mr. JONES. For instance, in our valleys in Washington a great many private canals have been put in, not especially under authority of a state statute, but the persons simply went in and appropriated the water and reclaimed the land.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. This little private conversation over there has been conducted in such a low tone that I could hardly understand the gist of it. But I caught enough to get the idea that there is some proposition pending here to get information through the census——

Mr. JONES. The Senator from South Carolina did not have any difficulty in hearing me.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir; I had some difficulty in hearing you because you were discussing this matter in a private way with the Senator from Wisconsin—not that either of you is lacking in voice when you want to be heard, but you had the tone a little lower than is common.

If it is the purpose to get some information, what difference does it make whether it is under state or federal law? What we want are the facts, regardless as to how the irrigation came about.

Mr. JONES. That is my idea exactly; and I want to be sure that this provision is broad enough to cover it, whether the work is done by purely private individuals or under state or federal government. I should like to have the amendment enlarged with reference to that proposition, so that we will get all the facts with respect to irrigated lands and their cost, as nearly as possible.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think if there is a purely private enterprise on ranches or farms owned by individuals, it would not come within the scope of the proposed amendment. No information would be gathered with respect to it. It seems to me that would be entering upon a very large and expensive undertaking. It is estimated by the Director of the Census that the cost entailed upon the Government by this proposed amendment with respect to irrigation will involve an expenditure of from fifty to a hundred thousand dollars. If, however, this inquiry is to be carried to every little private enterprise on the farm or ranch of some individual, there is no telling what the expense would be. It certainly would be very heavy.

Mr. JONES. I desire to suggest to the Senator that if the inquiry does not get all the facts in reference to irrigation it will be of but very little value. I want to suggest to him another condition in the irrigation section, and that is that at the present time the great amount of land irrigated in the United States is irrigated by purely private enterprise; and if we do not get the information in reference to that, the information we would get would be of practically no value.

Take it in my section. For instance, there is one canal which has been put in by a purely private company, without reference to any state law, but simply by going to the stream and diverting the water, making an appropriation, and reclaiming several thousand acres of land. We would like to have that information, and we ought to have it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. WARREN. The water rights are all obtained, or should be, and I presume are, from state authority; and if this language would not bring them under the provisions of the bill, I think it ought to be changed. But as I heard it read——

Mr. JONES. I doubt if the language in the bill is broad enough to cover those enterprises.

Mr. WARREN. As I heard it read I thought it covered it. If not, I think it should be changed to cover it. I think in the Senator's State as well as in all others the rights all come from the State.

Mr. JONES. Yes; the water right does, either by express law or by custom; but I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Senator in charge of the bill hardly thinks it would cover these purely private enterprises.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think it would cover those private enterprises which are confined to operations upon privately owned property, where it was not necessary to proceed to condemn under state law or to bring the irrigation project within the federal statute. For instance, an irrigation project which begins and ends upon a farm, that is undertaken without reference to state or federal laws, I do not think would come within the terms of this proposed statute. The language is very plain:

Inquiries shall also be made as to the location and character of irrigation enterprises, quantity of land irrigated in the arid region of the United States and in each State and county in that section under state and federal laws.

That is substantially the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. I do not think it would be feasible; indeed, I think it would be imposing upon the Bureau of the Census an almost impossible task at this time to undertake to gather information with respect to every little irrigation enterprise on every small patch of land in the United States, and I think it would operate to defeat the whole purpose of the inquiry.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, did not the Committee on the Census consider that the provision which they adopted and reported is a large departure from the original purpose of the bill, and is going as far as it is safe to go in that direction?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It very much enlarges the scope of the bill as passed by the House——

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (continuing). And goes as far as the committee thought it was wise or possible to go, in view of the information furnished the committee by the Director of the Census when the bill was pending before the committee.

Mr. HALE. I hope, Mr. President, that Senators who seek to enlarge this amendment will realize that the committee has departed very largely from the House bill and has embarked upon and put the Government under its provisions to a very large and extensive work, and that they will not attempt to make it so large that it will be impracticable.

Mr. TILLMAN. I notice, on page 2 of the bill, in line 16—and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Maine to it—in the census law, as it has already been passed (and this is not connected with the amendment now proposed), there is this language:

The schedules relating to agriculture shall include names, color, and country of birth of occupant of each farm, tenure, acreage of farm, acreage of land under irrigation.

That is already provided for in the law, and why there should be an amendment, which is proposed here, of the "quantity of land irrigated in the arid region of the United States and in each State and county in that section under state and federal laws," and so on, I can not see, unless there is a purpose to get a separate schedule relating to the semiarid and arid States alone, because here is a provision, general in its terms, relating to every farm, which would provide the information. There is evidently a purpose in this amendment, or it would not be here, and I should like the Senator to explain why there is necessity for this additional legislation when you already have in the law this other provision which my eye happened to catch a moment ago.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not know that the Senator from South Carolina addressed his inquiry to me, but if he will permit me——

Mr. TILLMAN. I addressed it to anyone who can answer it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The line to which the Senator refers, line 16, on page 2, reading "acreage of land under irrigation," is not a part of existing law. That is the first amendment which this bill—the House bill—makes in existing law. It adds to the existing law the acreage of land under irrigation. That is the first provision amending existing law which the House incorporated in this bill, 18364, as it came to the Committee on the Census. That information can readily be obtained by the enumerators while performing their regular work of enumeration. That information would be gathered, under the amendment to the House bill. The amendment printed in italics on page 3 is of a different character and would require a different order of ability. That work must be performed by special agents. The information could not be gotten in such accurate form by enumerators as to make it of any practical value.

It was added because it seemed desirable to get that information—the amount of water used per acre on the land, the location of the various projects, the method of construction, with facts as to their physical condition, etc.—information of a somewhat technical character, requiring a different order of ability than that possessed by the enumerators in ascertaining the mere acreage.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the argument would recur to the original proposition advanced by the Senator from Washington, and that is, if you are going to get information in regard to the acreage of irrigated lands in the arid region, why not get it all, regardless of whether it is under the Carey Act or under the General Government?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Undoubtedly all the acreage would be obtained under the provision on page 2.

Mr. TILLMAN. With regard to farms.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With regard to farms, just as the acreage of the farms would be obtained. That can readily be obtained by the enumerator, but this more definite and specific and technical information can not be secured with any degree of accuracy by the enumerators and must be done by special agents, at a greatly increased cost.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not see for the life of me why a special agent is necessary.

Mr. HALE. The first provision applies only to the farms.

Mr. TILLMAN. To every acre of land under irrigation either growing hay or some other crop.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think a fair construction of this amendment would cover these desired inquiries. In the first place, we have the acreage of land under irrigation provided for on page 2. That is one proposition. Under the other, the proposed committee amendment, we will have an inquiry made as to the location and character of the irrigation enterprises. A great many of them are under construction, and a great many of them, while well advanced under construction, have not yet resulted in any large acreage of irrigated land.

To go a little further, as I read this amendment, if other States are situated as is the State of Wyoming, this covers it entirely, because this states the "quantity of land irrigated in the arid region of the United States and in each State and county in that section under state and federal law."

If I take water from a stream on my own land and use it on my own land, it is necessary for me in my State to record it and to have the privilege granted and the acreage defined. If not, some neighbor may come onto my land and take that water for some other land. So that, so far as the State of Wyoming is concerned, this would surely cover it through the water rights obtained through the States. I would hardly want the remarks of the chairman to stand above as the proper construction of the law, that private enterprises were not included in this amendment, because I think they are.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I of course am not familiar with the statutes of the various States with respect to irrigation, and no remarks of mine and no construction I might put upon this phraseology would be controlling with the department in its execution of this law.

Mr. WARREN. I may say that most of the States have adopted the same law. I am not certain about the State of Washington. The Senator from Washington can tell us about that. The State of Wyoming and, I think, the States of Idaho, Colorado, Utah, and Montana have similar laws.

Mr. JONES. Of course we have a state law covering the diversion of water and the appropriation of water, and so forth, but it does not seem to me that a purely private enterprise, taking out water by appropriation or actual diversion, would come within the language here, and it evidently is not the intention of the chairman of the committee, at any rate, that it should. So it seems to me we ought to have that made certain. I take it the chairman of the committee expresses the idea of the Census Bureau as to what they desire to do really under the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the Senator from Washington is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think this is a very important amendment, certainly to our section of the country. It is true that under the clause, in line 16, on page 2, they would be able to secure the acreage of land under irrigation, but there are a number of other items connected with the subject of irrigation which are covered alone by the amendment on page 3.

I doubt the propriety, however, of undertaking to enlarge this amendment. I think if we shall be able to secure the data with reference to irrigation, which is covered either by state or federal laws, it will be all we can hope to do under this law, or all that we should, perhaps, hope to do under a census law of any kind. And while I feel as the Senator from Washington does, that we should have the fullest data in regard to it, it does not seem to me it is necessary to extend the law so as to cover purely private enterprises. That is to say, enterprises which are in nowise connected with the state law or the federal law in the matter of reclaiming lands.

This would go sufficiently far to cover all projects of irrigation which are provided for either by the state or federal law. If an individual has an enterprise of his own, we would still have the information concerning the amount of land which he had irrigated, but it can not be of very much interest to know the other facts concerning his enterprise which are covered by the amendment.

Mr. JONES. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that it would be of considerable importance if we had the cost of the irrigation by private work in comparison with reclamation through state or federal agencies. It would be a very important item of information. I do not know how it is in the Senator's State, but in my State the largest irrigation works have been put in by private enterprise, reclamation work reclaiming many thousand acres of land, and the information as to the cost of those works—the cost per acre, and so forth—would furnish a basis which would be of great importance in comparing the cost of purely private and of public enterprises.

Mr. BORAH. It may be true that there would be some value to that data, but I doubt the propriety of undertaking to do it under the census law.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say that I would not want to do anything to jeopardize the enactment in this law of the provision the committee has brought here, because it is going, of course, in the right direction. I do not think that it goes far enough. I do not think that it would furnish information which we really ought to have or all the information we ought to have. But if the chairman of the committee thinks that to extend it further would really jeopardize the bill, I will not press the matter.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say, Mr. President, that I am very certain, if the committee had conceived that the duty was to be imposed upon the Census Bureau of ascertaining the cost of every little irrigation plant for irrigating 2, 3, 4, or 5 acres to be found upon the streams throughout that great section of the country, this proposed change in the law would have been reported just as it came from the other House, and there would not have been any disposition to have enlarged it at all. In extending it the committee felt that they were going as far as it was possible to go at this time and have the work completed within the census period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon the recommendation of the Director of the Census, I move, after the word "condition," in line 23, on page 3, to add the words "the amount of capital invested in such irrigation works." The Director of the Census says, in a letter which I have received from him, that that additional data can be obtained at the same time without any great loss of time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXTENSION OF PARK PLACE NW.

The bill (H. R. 16324) to authorize the extension of Park place NW. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABANDONMENT OF WIFE OR MINOR CHILDREN.

The bill (S. 3890) to amend an act entitled "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or of his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved March 23, 1906, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. There is an amendment to the bill recommended by the committee. On page 2, after the word "children," in line 3, it is to insert the following:

Provided, however, That prosecutions for nonsupport of illegitimate children must be brought within two years after the birth of the child or of the failure by the putative father to provide for such illegitimate offspring, and that there shall be no conviction for such failure to support illegitimate children except upon the testimony of two witnesses.

A second amendment corresponding with this one would be to strike out the provision where it now appears in the closing section of the bill. The amendment I now offer merely transfers the proviso to the end of section 4 from the place where it now stands at the end of section 5.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is just a transfer; that is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the second amendment proposed.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 5 strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That prosecutions for nonsupport of illegitimate children must be brought within two years after the birth of the child or of the failure by the putative father to provide for such illegitimate offspring, nor shall there be conviction for such failure to support illegitimate children except upon the testimony of two witnesses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossd for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPERINTENDENT OF WEIGHTS, MEASURES, AND MARKETS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 78) changing the title of the sealer of weights and measures of the District of Columbia to superintendent of weights, measures, and markets was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FRANKLIN STREET NE.

The bill (H. R. 16328) for the extension of Franklin street NE. from its present eastern terminus east of Twenty-fourth street to the Bladensburg road was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF NEWTON PLACE NW.

The bill (H. R. 16329) to provide for the extension of Newton place NW. from New Hampshire avenue to Georgia avenue, and to connect Newton place in Gass subdivision with Newton place in Whitney Close subdivision was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIGHWAYS WEST OF ROCK CREEK PARK.

The bill (H. R. 16336) authorizing certain changes in the plan for the permanent system of highways for that portion of the District of Columbia lying west of Rock Creek Park, north of Klingle road, east of Connecticut avenue, and south of Ellicott street NW., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRADE CROSSING ON Q STREET NE.

The bill (H. R. 11989) to provide for the removal of present grade crossing and construction of a new grade crossing on the line of Q street NE., District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GUIDES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3253) providing for guides in the District of Columbia, and defining their duties, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MASONIC TEMPLE ASSOCIATION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3889) to amend an act to incorporate the Masonic Temple Association of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF ALASKA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 5436.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am informed that no one is now ready to proceed upon the postal savings-bank bill. Otherwise, as heretofore stated, I should ask to have the unfinished business laid aside temporarily. Under the circumstances, I shall ask that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments, so that it may be perfected.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cullom	Gordon	Piles
Beveridge	Cummins	Gore	Richardson
Borah	Curtis	Guggenheim	Scott
Bourne	Davis	Johnston	Shively
Bradley	Depew	Jones	Simmons
Brandegee	Dillingham	Kean	Smith, Mich.
Briggs	Dixon	La Follette	Smoot
Bristow	Dolliver	Lorimer	Stephenson
Brown	du Pont	McCumber	Stone
Bulkeley	Elkins	McEnery	Tillman
Burkett	Flint	Martin	Warner
Burton	Foster	Money	Warren
Chamberlain	Frazier	Nixon	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Frye	Oliver
Clay	Gallinger	Overman
Crawford	Gamble	Page

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the bill be read for action on the committee amendments, in order that it may be perfected. The bill has already, on a former occasion, been read. I now ask that it be read for action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana. The amendments of the committee will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "attorney-general," to insert "and;" in the same line, after the word "interior," to strike out "a commissioner of education and health, and a commissioner of mines" and insert "and of mines, for the Territory of Alaska;" in line 9, after the word "reside," to strike out "in Alaska" and insert "therein;" in line 12, before the word "other," to strike out "four" and insert "eight;" on page 2, line 2, after the word "council," to strike out "at least four members of which;" in line 3, before the word "shall," to insert "The eight members last above provided for;" in the same line, after the word "appointed," to insert "bona fide;" in line 4, after the word "residents," to insert "and qualified voters;" in line 4, after the word "the," to strike out "district" and insert "Territory;" in the same line, after the word "Territory," to strike out "of Alaska, one" and insert "two;" in line 6, after the word "divided," to strike out "and;" in the same line, after the word "divided," to insert "The governor, attorney-general, commissioner of the interior and of mines;" in line 8, after the word "legislative," to insert "and other;" in line 9, after the word "them," to strike out "as a body shall exercise such powers and perform such duties as are hereinafter provided for them, respectively, and who;" in line 13, after the word "officials," to strike out "and as such legislative council;" and in line 14, after the word "governor," to strike out "of Alaska," so as to make the section read:

That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the period of four years, unless sooner removed by the President, a governor, an attorney-general, and a commissioner of the interior and of mines, for the Territory of Alaska, who shall reside therein during their official incumbency and have the powers and duties hereinafter provided for them, respectively, and who, together with eight other persons, to be also appointed by the President for a like term of four years, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall constitute a legislative council. The eight members last above provided for shall be, when appointed, bona fide residents and qualified voters of the Territory, two in each of the four judicial divisions into which the district is now divided. The governor, attorney-general, commissioner of the interior and of mines, in addition to the legislative and other duties hereinafter imposed upon them, shall have power to employ all necessary deputies and assistants for the proper discharge of their duties as such officials: Provided, That the governor shall be the presiding officer of the legislative council: And provided further, That the President may designate a member of the legislative council as vice-governor, and in the case of the death, removal, resignation, or disability of the governor, or his temporary absence from Alaska, the vice-governor shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the governor during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 23, after the word "be," to strike out "the governor" and to insert "The Governor;" on page 3, line 9, after the word "inapplicable," to insert "that the governor shall be ex officio superintendent of public instruction in said Territory, and as such shall have supervision and direction of the public and native schools in said Territory, and shall have supervision of the public health;" in line 16, after the word "Alaska," to strike out "to such executive department of the Government of the United States as may be designated by the President;" and in line 20, after the word "department," to insert "or departments as he may designate," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the official title of the chief executive officer shall be "the governor of Alaska." He shall maintain his office at the seat of government; he may grant pardons and reprieves, and remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the laws of Alaska, and also grant respites for offenses against the laws of the United States until the decision of the President can be ascertained; he shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint, and may veto any legislation enacted as hereinafter provided; he shall be the commander in chief of the militia, and shall at all times faithfully execute the laws, and he shall in that behalf have all the powers of governors of the Territories of the United States that are not locally inapplicable; that the governor shall be ex officio superintendent of public instruction in said Territory, and as such shall have supervision and direction of the public and native schools in said Territory and shall have supervision of the public health; and he shall annually, and at such other times as he may be required, make official report to the President of the transactions of the government in Alaska; and the President is authorized to place all matters pertaining to the government of Alaska in the jurisdiction of such department or departments as he may designate: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, delegate and assign to the governor such executive duties and functions as may in pursuance with law be so delegated and assigned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 24, to strike out section 3 in the following words:

SEC. 3. That the attorney-general shall have all the powers and discharge all the duties provided by law for an attorney of a Territory of the United States, in so far as the same are not locally inapplicable, and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make such reports to the governor as he may require.

And to insert as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That the attorney-general shall, when requested by the governor or the legislative council, give written opinions upon all legal or constitutional questions relating to the powers or duties of the legislative council or of the territorial officials; prepare, when requested by the governor or the legislative council, such bills as they may suggest for legislative consideration; prepare, when necessary, proper drafts of contracts and other writings relating to subjects in which the Territory is interested; consult and advise the several district attorneys in matters relating to the duties of their office; and, when requested by the governor, he shall attend the trial of any person accused of crime and assist in the prosecution, and shall perform such other duties as may from time to time be prescribed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 18, after the word "interior," to insert "and of mines;" in line 24, after the word "thereto," to strike out "and" and insert "perform such duties in connection with mines and mining as may be prescribed by law;" and on page 5, line 1, before the word "perform," to strike out "shall" and insert "and;" and in line 7, after the word "interior," to insert "and of mines," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the commissioner of the interior and of mines shall superintend all works of a public nature carried on pursuant to the authority of the legislative council or placed in his charge by Congress, and shall have charge of all public buildings, grounds, and lands assigned for the use of the government of Alaska, and shall execute such requirements as may be imposed by law with respect thereto; perform such duties in connection with mines and mining as may be prescribed by law; and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make such reports to the governor as he may require.

The board of road commissioners for Alaska, created by the act of Congress approved January 27, 1905, shall lay before the commissioner of the interior and of mines, for the approval of the legislative council, the plans and estimates for roads and trails which it is proposed to construct and maintain out of Alaskan revenues.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 10, to strike out section 5, in the following words:

Sec. 5. That the commissioner of education and health shall superintend public instruction throughout Alaska, including public schools for the education of Eskimos and Indians. He shall have supervision of sanitary matters, and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law and make such reports to the governor as he may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 16, to strike out section 6, in the following words:

SEC. 6. That the commissioner of mines shall perform such duties in connection with mines and mining as may be prescribed by law and make such reports to the governor as he may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 5, line 21, after the word "other" to strike out "four" and insert "eight;" in line 25, after the word "and" to strike out "that;" and on page 6, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the other eight members of the legislative council, appointed as hereinbefore provided, shall attend all meetings of the legislative council, and participate in all business of every character that may be transacted by it, and each shall receive as compensation, to be paid out of the United States Treasury, $20 per day for each day's attendance while the legislative council is in session, and mileage in addition at the rate of 15 cents a mile from his home to the capital and return by the nearest traveled route.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 6, line 7, after the words "United States," to strike out "enacted hereafter, including laws carrying general appropriations;" in line 13, after the word "by" where it first occurs, to strike out "Act of;" in the same line, after the word "legislative," to strike out "authority herein conferred on the legislative;" and in line 20, after the word "authority," to insert "jurisdiction," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the Constitution and, except as otherwise provided, all the laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within Alaska as elsewhere in the United States. That except as herein provided all laws now in force in Alaska shall continue in full force and effect until altered, amended, or repealed by Congress or by the legislative council: Provided, That the authority herein granted to the legislative council to alter, amend, modify, and repeal laws in force in Alaska shall not extend to the customs, internal-revenue, postal, or other general laws of the United States. And the legislative council shall pass no law depriving the judges and officers of the district court of Alaska of any authority, jurisdiction, or function exercised by like judges or officers of district courts of the United States.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question? I ask him if it is the intention of the bill to allow this council the power to repeal acts of Congress?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. CURTIS. The reading of the section indicates that they would have a right to repeal acts of Congress.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the Senator from Kansas was perhaps not here on the day when a statement as to the purposes of the bill was made in lieu of a report. The broad general purpose of the council is to prepare and enact a series of laws for what we now call the Territory of Alaska, all of which are subject, of course, to the approval or ratification of Congress itself. The Senator will find when we come to section 7 that there are very extensive limitations as to its power. That is gone into quite fully.

Mr. CURTIS. This is the provision to which I desire to call the Senator's attention:

That except as herein provided, all laws now in force in Alaska shall continue in full force and effect until altered, amended, or repealed by Congress or by the legislative council.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that is correct. That is what the bill means and what it intends to do. Here, as I stated to the Senate when the bill was reported, is a great mass of laws that have grown up during the last forty years, some of them applicable, some of them inapplicable, some of them harmonious, and some the reverse, and perhaps only a few of consistency, thoroughness, and value. That is inevitable from the fact that what was formerly called the "District" and what this bill now calls the "Territory" of Alaska is so peculiarly situated, so far away, so sparsely populated, its population so divided that it has apparently been out of the question for Congress, with the exception of a few laws, to legislate as wisely for it as a local body, of course, could do. When all these laws are passed by the legislative council, they are, of course, subject to modification, repeal, or amendment by Congress.

However, I would state to the Senator here that all I desire to do to-day is merely, while no Senator is willing to proceed on the postal savings-bank bill, to have the bill perfected by having it read for committee amendments. That was the purpose I had, merely that we might save this time and perfect the bill so that it may hereafter be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I wish to make a further inquiry. Under the statement just made by the chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. BEVERIDGE], I can see no objection to the bill going forward along the lines indicated, but I want to make this inquiry: If the amendments proposed by the committee are adopted, are those amendments still subject to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Senate; yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But not in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I think that was quite thoroughly thrashed out at the last session. Committee amendments when read may be amended as they are read or they may be agreed to in Committee of the Whole, after which, of course, they and everything else in the bill are subject to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; I understand that, but ordinarily an amendment in the Senate is very different from an amendment in Committee of the Whole. I did not really take in the significance of the statement of the chairman of the committee, but the bill is being read simply for the purpose of perfecting it, as I understand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is true; that is the parliamentary language. It is for that purpose, and for nothing else. The other day, when I asked to lay aside the unfinished business, under the statement that I originally made that the unfinished business would be laid aside from day to day for a reasonable time, so that the postal savings-bank bill might be considered, yet when I found that no Senator was prepared to go on with the postal savings-bank bill, it seemed to me then that perhaps I ought to have asked the Senate to perfect this bill, so as to save some time. That was the reason again to-day why it seemed to me to be a wise thing to do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, my only purpose in making the inquiry was—although I have no desire either to delay the passage of this bill or to take any part in the debate upon any amendment—that there are certain Senators on the committee who are very much interested in many of these matters and who have proposed amendments to the bill who are not now present.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that the chairman of the committee is just as anxious as any of the Senators to whom he refers that they shall have the fullest opportunity to examine those amendments and everything else connected with the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Undoubtedly, if those Senators had known that the bill was to be taken up to-day, they would have been present. Unfortunately, some of them are not present, owing to the fact, I suppose, that they expected the usual course which has been followed with this bill would be followed to-day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Frankly I say that would have been done, but that the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] informed me about three-quarters of an hour ago that no Senator was prepared to go ahead to-day with the consideration of the postal savings-bank bill, and so the way was open to us merely to make some progress with this bill. That is the only reason. I did not have any idea three-quarters of an hour ago that we would not lay this bill aside as usual. However, no Senator is being deprived of any right, nor will their rights in any wise be jeopardized. They are perfectly safeguarded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, they are not deprived of their rights.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry. If these committee amendments are adopted without any objection now, would the amendment of an individual Senator be in order as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments to amendments which have been agreed to in Committee of the Whole would not be in order, but every amendment will be open to amendment when the bill is in the Senate. New amendments, however, can be offered in Committee of the Whole after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. FRAZIER. Will amendments to amendments be in order during the consideration of committee amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendments of the Committee on Territories which have been agreed upon in Committee of the Whole can be amended in committee, but when an amendment is under consideration in Committee of the Whole of course an amendment will be in order to that amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before it is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before it is agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I want to call for a vote upon the particular question which was raised by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. It is proposed that—

All laws now in force in Alaska shall continue in full force and effect until altered, amended, or repealed by Congress or by the legislative council.

That, in effect, gives the legislative council of Alaska, as we create it by this bill, the power to repeal direct acts of Congress which have been made with respect to the district of Alaska. It seems to me that that is something that has never entered into any bill, territorial or otherwise, allowing any local legislative body, however constituted, to repeal a direct act of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming refer to an amendment already agreed to?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I refer to an amendment that was read a moment ago—the last one read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That amendment, the Senator will see by looking at it, was a mere verbal amendment—an amendment of verbiage. It read originally "repealed by act of Congress, or by the legislative authority herein conferred on the legislative council." That was an excess of terms, and so the committee amendment was inserted striking out the words "act of," and also striking out "authority herein conferred on the legislative" before the word "council," so as to make it read:

Amended or repealed by Congress or by the legislative council.

That was merely an amendment of verbiage.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is more than an amendment of verbiage; but I think perhaps the right to amend that section will still inhere in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the reason I did not insist on the amendment was that I understood the right to amend would be preserved in the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To everything.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In the Senate, yes; but not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not want any Senator to be deceived about that. After a committee amendment, as the Chair has stated, has been agreed to, it can not be further amended as in Committee of the Whole, though, of course, it may be amended in the Senate, but the remainder of the bill may be amended at any time in Committee of the Whole before it gets into the Senate. Committee amendments may be amended while in Committee of the Whole before they have been agreed to.

The Senator from Wyoming is right in saying, as he did a moment ago, that this particular provision still remains open to amendment in Committee of the Whole. There is no doubt about that, because the part remaining is not a committee amendment, but is a part of the original bill. Therefore it is open to amendment in Committee of the Whole as well as in the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator desired that no amendments be suggested in Committee of the Whole at this time to the committee amendments, but that we should take the matter up later.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that is all right.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the words "or by the legislative council." I would just as soon offer the amendment now as later.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just as the Senator prefers. I will state frankly, again, that what I desire to-day is merely to save time and to get the bill somewhat further along; but the Senator will have an opportunity in Committee of the Whole, or in the Senate hereafter, to offer that amendment, if he does not offer it to-day. If he offered that amendment now, I should simply ask that the matter be passed over and that we proceed with the reading of the other amendments, because it is not my purpose to-day to go into any subject which is open to controversy. Do I make that clear?

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator desires, I shall let the matter go over, and offer the amendment later on.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

Mr. CLAY. With the permission of the Senator from Indiana, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. If I understand this bill—I have only gone through it hurriedly this morning—it creates the office of commissioner of the interior and of mines?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. And the commissioner of the interior and of mines is to take charge of the public lands in Alaska?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Public buildings, public lands——

Mr. CLAY. Public grounds, and so forth.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That provision is in section 4.

Mr. CLAY. I want to ask the Senator, if this bill shall be enacted into law, will the lands belonging to the Government of the United States located in Alaska, the mines and so forth, be under the control of this commissioner, and will Congress and the Interior Department cease to be factors in disposing of such public lands?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. By no manner of means, Mr. President. As I understand the bill, even if it be true—which, from my reading of the bill, I do not understand—that the commissioner of the interior and of mines shall be the superintendent in charge of all Alaskan public lands, it would not relieve the Congress of responsibility. The Senator will find a little bit further over, when it comes to the section defining the powers of the legislative council, exceedingly careful restrictions about the whole thing.

Mr. CLAY. I note that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will observe that section 4 reads:

SEC. 4. That the commissioner of the interior and of mines shall superintend all works of a public nature carried on pursuant to the authority of the legislative council or placed in his charge by Congress, and shall have charge of all public buildings, grounds, and lands assigned for the use of the government of Alaska—

Lands assigned for the use of the government of Alaska—and shall execute such requirements as may be imposed by law with respect thereto; perform such duties in connection with mines and mining as may be prescribed by law.

What will be prescribed as to those duties I do not know; but no doubt it will be concerning the safety of miners, the regulation of mines, and everything of that kind. If the Senator means to inquire whether this bill intrusts public property to the control of one man to dispose of, I should answer unhesitatingly no. That is not my understanding of it.

Mr. CLAY. If this bill is intended to take from the Interior Department and Congress the control of the public lands in Alaska, then it is a very serious matter, because I regard their value of great importance to the people of the United States. If a pamphlet which I have been reading is correct, it is estimated that we have enough coal in Alaska to supply this country for two hundred years, and the question of fuel in the future is bound to be one of great importance.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is very right as to that.

Mr. CLAY. In running through the bill hurriedly, I was impressed by the idea that the proposed legislative council, and especially the commissioners of the interior and of mines, were to take charge of, control, manage, and dispose of the public lands in Alaska. Certainly there ought not to be any effort to do a thing of that kind. We have legislation pending here now, as I understand, providing how the public lands and the mineral interests of Alaska, as well as those of this country generally, shall be disposed of in the future; and the question of taking care of gas, oil, and fuel generally in the future is of vast importance to the great masses of the American people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is very accurate in his last remark. What he says is quite true.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Before this bill is laid aside I desire to propose an amendment. I will not press it at this time, but I desire to propose it. I move to strike out, on page 16, all after line 18 down to the end of that paragraph, on page 17, line 2.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would the Senator be willing to wait until we dispose of the committee amendments? What we are doing now is to read the bill for committee amendments so as to make some progress.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire, in the event of not being present, that this amendment shall be a matter of record.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment relates to the paragraph that authorizes the President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To employ an army officer.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the provision that authorizes the President to appoint for legislative duties in the government of Alaska an officer of the army, who is a member of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator again state the amendment, so that it may appear as a matter of record just what the amendment is?

Mr. HEYBURN. The present provision of the bill injects into the legislative body provided for Alaska the military arm of the Government, giving it a right to participate in the making of laws. I object to the principle, and, therefore, have introduced the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not catch just what the amendment was.

Mr. HEYBURN. Commencing with the word "Provided," in line 19, page 16, to strike out down to and including the word "commissioners," at the end of line 2 on page 17.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. Before the amendment is passed upon I shall desire to make a few remarks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was to strike out sections 9 and 10, as follows:

SEC. 9. That the legislative authority herein provided shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States hereafter enacted, and the legislative council shall have the power to alter, amend, modify, and repeal any and all laws and ordinances of every character now in force in Alaska, or any town or district thereof, not inconsistent with the provisions hereof.

SEC. 10. That the legislative council may grant franchises, privileges, and concessions, including the authority to exercise the right of eminent domain, for the construction and operation of works of public utility and service, and may authorize said works to be constructed and maintained over and across the public property of the United States, and may adopt rules and regulations under which the municipal government may grant the right to use and occupy such public property belonging to said municipalities: Provided, That no private property shall be taken for any purpose under this section without just compensation paid or tendered therefor, and that such authority to take and occupy land shall not authorize the taking, use, or occupation of any land except such as is required for the actual necessary purposes for which the franchise is granted, and that no franchise, privilege, or concession shall be granted to any corporation except under the conditions that it shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal by the Congress of the United States, and that lands or rights of use and occupation of lands thus granted shall revert to the governments by which they were respectively granted upon the termination of the franchises and concessions under which they were granted or upon their revocation or repeal: Provided further, That all franchises, privileges, or concessions granted shall forbid the issue of stock or bonds except in exchange for actual cash, or for property at a fair valuation, equal to the par value of the stock or bonds so issued; shall forbid the declaring of stock or bond dividends; and, in the case of public service corporations, shall provide for the effective regulation of the charges thereof, for the official inspection and regulation of the books and accounts of such corporations, and for the payment of a reasonable percentage of gross earnings into the treasury of the district of Alaska or of the municipality within which such franchises are granted and exercised.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 7. That the legislative power of the legislative council shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States locally applicable; but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States, nor shall the lands or other property of nonresidents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents; no divorce shall be granted by the legislative council, nor shall any divorce be granted by the courts of the Territory unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for two years next preceding the application; nor shall any lottery or the sale of lottery tickets be allowed; nor shall the legislative council nor any municipality interfere with or attempt in any wise to limit the acts of Congress to prevent and punish gambling, and, as may be prescribed by law, all gambling implements shall be seized by the United States marshal or any of his deputies, or any peace officer of the Territory, or of any of the villages, towns, or cities therein, and destroyed; nor shall spirituous or intoxicating liquors be sold, except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide; nor shall any public moneys be appropriated by the legislative council for the support or benefit of any sectarian, denominational, or private school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the government; nor shall the government of the Territory, or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision of the Territory, make any subscription to the capital stock of any incorporated company, or for any other than a public use, or in any manner lend its credit for the use thereof; nor shall the legislative council or any municipal corporation have power or authority to create or assume any bonded indebtedness whatever; nor to borrow money in the name of the Territory, or of any municipal division thereof; nor to pledge the faith of the Territory for any loan whatever, either directly or indirectly; nor to incur or assume any liability in excess of money duly appropriated therefor, nor shall the appropriation for any year be made in excess of the income or revenue of the Territory for that year from whatever source derived: Provided, That all indebtedness incurred, or warrants or other evidence of indebtedness issued, shall be paid in the order of creation, and all taxes shall be equal and uniform, and no distinction shall be made in the assessments between different kinds of property, but the assessments shall be according to the true value thereof; no tax shall be levied by the legislative council in excess of 1 per cent upon the assessed valuation of property in said Territory in any one year, nor shall any incorporated town or municipality levy any tax for any purpose in excess of 2 per cent of the assessed valuation of property within the town in any one year: Provided further, That said legislative council may levy a tax not exceeding 1 per cent on the value of the gross output of mines. If at the termination of any session of the legislative council, the appropriations necessary for the support of the government shall not have been made, an amount equal to the sums appropriated in the last appropriation bills for such purposes shall be deemed to be appropriated, and until the legislative council shall act in such behalf the secretary of the Territory and ex officio treasurer may, with the advice of the governor, make the payments necessary for the purposes aforesaid upon warrants signed by the auditor and countersigned by the governor as hereinafter provided; nor shall the legislative council grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise without the affirmative approval of Congress, nor shall it grant private charters, but it may, by general act, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for conducting business in the Territory of Alaska not exceeding fifty years, subject to such renewals as may be provided by law, for the following purposes, to wit: First, to construct, own, and operate ferries, railways, tramways, street railways, wagon roads, canals, vessels, trails, irrigating ditches, flumes, and telegraph and telephone lines; second, to acquire, hold, operate, and dispose of mines, milling, refining, and reduction plants; third, to acquire, own, or develop the fishing industry in all its branches in the waters of Alaska and those contiguous and adjacent thereto; fourth, to construct, operate, and dispose of smelters, electric and other power, lighting and heating plants, docks, wharves, elevators, warehouses, and hotels; fifth, to carry on banking, trade, transportation, agriculture, lumbering, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits; sixth, for the establishment and conduct of cemeteries, and for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any other benevolent, charitable or scientific association.

All laws passed or attempted to be passed by such legislative council inconsistent with the provisions of this section shall be null and void.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, this proposed amendment will give to the commission or the legislative body that is created by the act and by appointment very great power, notwithstanding the limitations provided. I asked the Senator from Indiana the other day what demand there is for this whole scheme of legislation, what complaint has come from the people of the Alaskan country which justifies this character of legislation. The distinguished Senator, in reply, said there are complaints, but at that time he did not go into any details.

Now, Mr. President, I have, with some care and industry, read almost all of the extremely interesting testimony taken by the special subcommittee that went up to that country in 1902, the report of that committee, and the testimony taken before the present committee, and, so far as I am able to draw any conclusion at all from reading the testimony and getting hold of the situation, there is no demand whatever from the people of Alaska for this type of legislation. There is an ambition there, as there always is in an outlying territory which has no territorial form of government, for a territorial form of government; but from the conditions that appear in that vast stretch of country, with communities isolated from each other, with impassable mountain barriers between them, and no continuity of sentiment, it does not seem that they are in any condition at the present time to justify the establishment of a territorial government. I want to ask the Senator from Indiana why those people are not all right just as they are? They have the best mining code; they have a splendid civil code; they have a code of civil procedure; they have established an effective system of courts; they have court commissioners in the different communities who can take care of local conditions there and who have probate jurisdiction; and they have a Delegate here in Congress to represent them. Now, to put upon those people a peculiar form of government, under which a legislative tribunal is created by appointment and given power to enact general incorporation laws, so that companies may be formed to go into mining enterprises, railroad enterprises, and other enterprises, perhaps for exploitation and abuse, it seems to me is questionable. I should like to hear what basis there is for the claim that we should enact a law like this for the people of Alaska.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, answering the last question the Senator put, it would seem to add very much to the safety of the public resources if corporations were formed under general laws enacted in Alaska, subject to the approval of and repeal and modification by Congress, than to have such corporations formed under the charters of the various States where they could be most conveniently organized. It would appear—and I say this without any very great study—that the public interests would be more greatly safeguarded by the enactment of general laws in Alaska, under which corporations could be formed, than for them to be organized in other States, and then going up there and exploiting the resources of the country.

Generally speaking—for there can only be a general answer to the Senator's large inquiry—the reason for the proposed change is what I have stated here before. Here is an enormous tract of country, embracing almost 600,000 square miles, a territory as large as one-sixth of the entire United States, with from twenty-five to thirty thousand people in it. It is as if the town of Richmond, Ind., were scattered over all of the United States east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio. The people of Alaska are separated widely in groups from one another. Therefore, an elective legislature becomes clearly out of the question. I went into that subject at some length in my first statement. So that disposes of that branch of the subject by elimination.

What, then, is the best practicable thing to do? It was believed by the President—and his connection with this bill is well known; it has been stated heretofore, and it is a view in which the committee concurred with him—that the legislation for this immense tract of country, with its enormous resources of wealth which are as yet unknown, and its small and scattered population, could be very much better cared for, safeguarded, and developed by a local body acting on the ground, whose legislation would all be subject to the extensive safeguards that have been provided in this section and, of course, to modification, approval, or repeal by Congress itself. So as a practical proposition the question narrows itself down to this: Can Alaska's development and the safeguarding of its resources and the welfare of its people be better taken care of here in Washington, as has been the course in the past, than by such a government as this?

It was believed that this was the most practicable method of procedure. It had worked very well elsewhere; and when the bill first came to the Senate, as introduced by myself, prepared under the direction of the President, it was drawn along the lines of the Porto Rican and Philippine legislative councils as they originally stood. The committee has extensively modified that, however—modified by careful limitations of legislative power. That section was discussed at considerable length, and members of the committee on both sides—I mean to say both political sides—took part in the drafting of it.

Those are the broad general reasons. For forty years Congress has been dealing with Alaska. It can not be said to have dealt with it, if you read its history, very attentively or very wisely except in a few particulars. Until a comparatively few years ago there was hardly any attention given to the exigencies of the people or the general needs of that tremendous area of country. Men would come down before the committees of Congress, and Congress knowing little about it, they would demand this law and that law and the other law. Sometimes they would get them through.

The attention of our committee was called in a hearing we had to the fact that the fish-tax law had actually been repealed by Congress. That meant a loss to the Treasury, and, while I do not want to speak harshly, at least an advantage to those engaged in the fish industry; and, of course, they are chiefly great corporations, doing a very useful business, but at the same time they were before paying to the Government a tax which was just. Yet the law got through Congress. When I heard it I wondered how it had ever passed our committee. As a matter of fact, it never got before our committee. It was gotten through another committee. I merely use it as an illustration of the laws that are sometimes passed. Other laws which are needed Congress has failed to pass, all for lack of sufficient practical first-hand information.

So, in answer to the question, I will say that in a broad, general way it has been believed that an elective legislature being out of the question the whole subject can be better dealt with by a legislative council appointed and subject to removal by the President. Certainly they would be compelled, not only as a matter of personal honor, but as a matter of personal safety, to carefully safeguard the resources intrusted to their care, because under any President, no matter to what party he belonged——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did the repeal of the fish-tax law pass since Alaska has had a Delegate in Congress?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have forgotten. It occurred two or three years ago.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it was before Alaska had a Delegate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would not be surprised. That is only an instance which came to my mind as I went along.

Take the immense volume of laws which have grown up from year to year, a little special act here and a little special act there. You will find that some of them are wise. Some are totally inapplicable. Some do not meet the case. There is no harmony.

I think there are three very excellent laws with respect to Alaska, considered by and large. I do not want to commit myself as to all of the provisions of those laws. But I think the civil and criminal code enacted ten years ago was a very excellent and a very thoroughly done piece of work. There may be exceptions. I do not know about that.

Then, again, the road law. It was the work of the subcommittee of this committee, made under the report of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who was appointed chairman of the subcommittee, drawn, I believe, by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and perhaps by all the rest of the subcommittee. The Senator from Colorado, Mr. Patterson, was a member also. It is the law which has most directly met the great, crowning, immediate needs of that district, which is the need of transportation. There are not any roads. There is no way to get about except on dog sleds and by water. The Senate is familiar with that. Those are two very excellent laws, but as to the rest of it I think the Senate will agree that Alaska has not been cared for with the greatest wisdom, because there has not been the greatest information.

It was the thought of the chairman of the committee some years ago that it ought to be investigated, and there are older Senators who will remember how toward the close of that session the chairman of the committee presented a resolution authorizing the appointment of a subcommittee, which was the origin of the expedition, and the members of that subcommittee, the Senators I have named, made the only thorough special examination on the ground ever made in Alaska.

I think at the same time there was another Senator who independently went up there. I am not sure as to my recollection. He came back and recommended—whether in the form of a bill or not, I do not know—a commission form of government. Then the whole matter was in abeyance, on account of the way Congress was occupied with other matters, until the President himself took up this matter and made his speech at Seattle, in which he proposed this form of government. That is the large, general reason.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. I am going to ask to have the bill laid aside in a moment. I am too hoarse to continue.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think we all remember the very thorough study of conditions made in Alaska by the subcommittee the Senator mentions, and Congress exhibited the greatest confidence not only in their powers of observation, but in their judgment in meeting those conditions by the legislation enacted. Certain legislation applicable only to Alaska was proposed by that subcommittee, acting through the full committee, and was enacted into law by Congress.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is, the Alaska road commission?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does the Senator believe it is the part of wise legislation to submit the law which Congress enacted along those lines to the approval or disapproval of this legislative assembly that is to be created by this act?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I should think so, offhand, subject always to the approval of Congress, and its power to repeal, amend, or modify.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that this legislative council will likely exhibit better judgment with reference to the laws which Alaska should have than the men who recommended the present laws?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All the laws as a whole, or this particular law?

Mr. BORAH. The laws as a whole.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should say so, undoubtedly. They will have more information, and their sole attention will be given to the needs of Alaska, whereas the Senator will find on examination that the laws now in existence in reference to Alaska have grown up in a haphazard fashion, some of them passed without sufficient information. I pointed out what I regarded as two admirable laws. One was the road-commission law, which the subcommittee devised after a very thorough examination. But you could not send a subcommittee to Alaska every year. That law was the result of their investigation. It is a wise one, from all accounts. Of course, the civil and criminal code was done ten years ago, and pretty well done, and that could be done without great local knowledge. At that, the members did have a lot of local knowledge.

Mr. BORAH. It is not necessary to change the criminal and civil code every sixty days or every year.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not proposed to do it.

Mr. BORAH. Many criminal and civil codes have been in existence for fifty or a hundred years. They cover general principles——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. And cover general propositions.

Alaska at the present time is very well situated in that respect, and if there are any defects in the laws which pertain to Alaska, they are defects which have arisen by reason of the inattention of this law-making body. It seems to me to create a council and send them there to enact laws, and then expect Congress to revise those laws and exercise any more wisdom than it did when it originally legislated, is something which does not stand to reason. If we are called upon in the first instance to enact laws, the duty is upon us, and devolves upon us, to make an investigation to satisfy ourselves as to the facts.

So it will result in the end in this peculiar and extraordinary legislative body taking practical legislative control of Alaska. As I said the other day, we are engaged here in creating a scheme and form of government which has never been tried under an American system except once, and then it went down in sixty days of its own weight; and we are sending it into a country where it is impossible for us to practically supervise it. I submit it does not make any difference who is President of the United States. It is impossible for the President of the United States to appoint a legislative council without getting information from a source which is liable not to suggest the best kind of legislative council.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator must permit me to remark, in reference to his statement, that this bill proposes to establish an instrumentality of government hitherto untried, except once, when it went down within sixty days of its own weight, that that is hardly entirely accurate. It has been tried several times. I did not intend to proceed on this occasion——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is speaking by my courtesy. I yielded to the Senator for a question. I am willing to give the Senator the floor or anything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do, with this remark before he goes on. When we come to debate the bill I shall show the Senator that this is not at all a novel scheme of government. It has been tried several times right here in this country as well as recently in Porto Rico and the Philippines.

I did not intend to precipitate the discussion to-day; I am suffering with a cold. I wanted the bill, if it was possible, to be read for committee amendments, and then if anybody objected, to have it passed over. That is the usual thing. But I wanted to make some progress.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to crowd the bill. I suggest that this bill is original as a matter of legislation, so far as this country is concerned, with one exception, and the history of that exception is such as to convince anybody that it is not a safe experiment. There are some thirty or forty thousand people in Alaska. They are mostly American citizens. They have gone from the States. They possess the same ideas with reference to government that we do and the same ideas with reference to citizenship, and they are as intelligent as any equal number of people to be found in any other part of the United States. They are energetic, industrious people, and I want to say that the things which have been done in Alaska which ought not to have been done have not been accomplished by the men who were there honestly developing the industries of Alaska, but have been accomplished by the carpetbaggers who have been sent in there. The people who are there and have undertaken to develop that country, to associate themselves with it, to become a part and parcel of it, are perfectly capable of self-government; and I submit that we ought to hesitate a long time before, in this age, we undertake to form a government for thirty or forty thousand American citizens which deprives them absolutely of all expression of opinion with reference to their local rights. It is impracticable, it is impossible, to legislate in this way for any country 7,000 miles away from the territory over which you are legislating.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senator concedes that it is impracticable to legislate for Alaska from Washington?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. Then, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, that being admitted, it comes down to the question as to which is the more practicable thing—a legislature elected or a legislative council appointed by the President. The debate has narrowed down to which is the more practicable means.

Mr. BORAH. I say that a legislative council could be provided for in this bill—not as full and complete as we have given to other territorial governments, but along the same principle—which would enable the people of Alaska to have their day in court, as it were, which would enable them to express their opinion, to present their view, and to have made known to the governor, or those who finally make and enforce the laws, what their views are. We see an example of it in this particular piece of legislation. I know that 90 per cent of the people of Alaska are endeavoring to prevent this legislation. They are opposed to it, but no more attention is paid to them than if they were aliens. The influence for the legislation can get here; the mass of the people are unheard.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says that 90 per cent of the people of Alaska are trying to prevent this legislation, and no attention is given to them. I suppose the Senator means through the Delegate, Mr. WICKERSHAM.

Mr. BORAH. I made no reference to Mr. WICKERSHAM. He seems to be able to take care of himself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He appeared before the committee and was given the amplest and fullest hearing, all he wanted and asked for, and a great deal more than in eleven years any Delegate from any Territory ever before asked, even upon the important subject of statehood. The Senator, I suppose, did not mean to infer that the committee had not paid any attention——

Mr. BORAH. I did not mean to say that the committee did not give Mr. WICKERSHAM all the time he wanted, but all they did give him was time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; as a matter of fact that was not the case. He was given, in addition to that, exceedingly courteous treatment, and we have incorporated in this bill nearly every provision—indeed, I believe every provision, perhaps, if I am not wrong about it—restricting the power of this legislative council. The committee took out of his bill and placed in this bill the whole section with reference to their restrictions.

Mr. CLAY rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I see I am to debate with two or three gentlemen at the same time. So the Senator from Idaho was more witty than he was accurate. We gave him a great deal——

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to say——

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is not——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I see Senators want to debate the bill. I said at the time that I wanted to take it up and forward it. I would be obliged, if Senators see fit to do so, all of them, if we might perfect the bill, and if any person objects to any amendment or any part of an amendment we will pass it over. I did not intend to take up the bill to-day for anything except that. Then I will ask that it be laid aside, because I can not go on with these remarks, being very hoarse.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to know if it is not the purpose of the Senator to have the amendments acted upon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, certainly, in the usual way, but if any Senator desires to amend any amendment or to discuss it, as is the usual method in handling a bill, the chairman will ask that that particular amendment be passed over, to the convenience of the Senator. But I should like to go on and get rid of as many amendments as we can.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply desire to say to the Senator that I have not risen out of a spirit of hostility to this bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am sure of that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I commenced to read the testimony taken by the subcommittee that went to Alaska two or three years ago with an absolutely open mind. I became very much fascinated by what I read, and I certainly compliment the committee on the thoroughness with which they investigated the situation and upon the clearness with which they made a report that is of incalculable benefit to the Senate.

It seems to me it will be helpful here, because it must go in before the grist is ground out to have, if it can be done in a practical way, the views that will be presented sooner or later, presented when important issues like the one raised by this amendment are before the Senate. I asked the Senator if any complaint had come from the people of Alaska against the present form of government. I do not understand from the Senator's answer that there has been any specific complaint, and I will pass that by. But I want to suggest to the Senator that the very climate of Alaska makes it an entirely different proposition from that which we have met in tropical countries, like the Philippine Islands and in Porto Rico, in both of which, as I understand, there is a tribunal, one branch of the legislature, representing the people of the islands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is now. There was not, practically, for many years.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I lived for a period of about ten years in a Territory, in a Territory to which the judges who tried our law suits came from distant parts of the country with commissions in their pockets, where the governor who presided over the Territory as its chief executive came in like manner; and I know there is no condition of things that so stings the pride and awakens irritation on the part of the people of northern climates, at least like this virile community which you find in Alaska, as to have presiding over them men who are not responsible to the people over whom they preside.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the situation now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And in my judgment it will be a source of irritation in Alaska. I am quite sure it is resented already that there is to be a legislative tribunal making laws for them, laws that will permit companies to be incorporated to exploit their resources, in the selection of which they have no voice.

Far better, in my opinion, leave it as it is now; and when the time comes that permanent communities have developed, you will have to establish, perhaps, three territorial forms of government—one at Sitka, one at Nome, one up in the Forty-Mile region, because they are entirely isolated from each other. They have nothing in common with each other in the way of intercourse back and forth now.

As I said a while ago, they are equipped with judges and court commissioners, and they have a splendid code of laws, both for mining and for other civil procedure and civil government; and I suggest that the proposition in this amendment to have a legislature appointed over them to pass all the laws that are enumerated here is one which will add to the irritation and difficulty and resentment from the people who are there.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall not remain in charge of the bill any longer this afternoon, because I have too bad a cold, but I want to say just a word to the Senator in answer to a little of what he said, and that is this: The very thing he has spoken of, a government appointed upon the outside, exists there now. The Senator knows it is composed largely of judges, who appoint commissioners who are ex officio justices of the peace, ex officio this and ex officio that. I am going to ask——

Mr. CRAWFORD. They have a Delegate in Congress.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If Senators see fit, perhaps we might defer the debate until we get to that part of the bill. I have not any desire to control that. They have a system of judicial government there, through the judges and the commissioners whom they appoint, from whom, as a practical matter, there is no appeal. They have jurisdiction in all cases up to $1,000; they have various kinds of jurisdiction. As a practical proposition there can be no appeal. That in itself is inherently one of the worst things about the Alaskan government.

However, the whole general matter has been gone into. I had not expected that it would come up to-day. Indeed, I have said, for the third time, that I desired, merely to make progress with the bill, to have the committee amendments read. I would just as soon go on with the debate to-day as on any other day except that I am hoarse. I do not intend to do so to-day, and I do not think I will longer occupy the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before the Senator from Indiana withdraws the bill, I wish to call his attention to one point. I understood the Senator to say there was nothing novel in this amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, no; nothing novel. Yes; I will say that, too, but what I said was in answer to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who declared that the whole scheme was new, with one exception, when it broke down within sixty days of its own weight, and I said his statement was not accurate. It has been tried before in this country. This amendment was compiled——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just pardon me, and then I must respectfully say to Senators I can not debate this any longer this afternoon.

This amendment is taken from the safeguarding provisions of the fundamental laws of a good many States and Territories. I think perhaps that is true of every line of it. There are some things that the committee put in here. One was put in at the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, about the levying of a tax on the gross receipts of mines. Some things of that kind were added to this amendment here. The restriction upon the legislative power is not novel at all. It is taken partly from the laws of the State of Washington and partly from the laws of other States. It has been compiled chiefly, and put together chiefly, and largely appears in the bill of the Delegate from the Territory of Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM], and to that the committee itself has made some additions.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My intention was not to call attention to matters not novel, but to suggest one thing I think is entirely novel, even to the Senator from Indiana, although his reading on the legislative history of the country may be sufficiently extensive so that it is not novel to him; that is, has the Congress of the United States ever given to any legislature, appointive or elective, the power to repeal an act of Congress, which this bill does?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is in section 6. I do not suppose a situation like this ever existed before. I am not able at the present time to answer that question as a matter of history. I can not do it offhand. I should say that even if that has not been done heretofore and a situation exists here making it wise that a new system of laws shall be framed for Alaska, and if as a practical proposition it can only be done in that way, it is wise for Congress to do it.

Mr. CLAY. I understood the Senator to say that the Delegate from Alaska, representing that Territory, came before his committee, and he was heard patiently and, of course, courteously, and that some of his views were engrafted into this bill, especially the views restricting the legislative powers of the legislative council.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that is the case.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator a question. I am informed it is true, although I may be mistaken. Is it not true that the Delegate representing the people of that Territory prepared, with the advice and counsel of his own people, a bill for a territorial government and asking for a legislature elected by the people of the Territory, and insisted that such a form of government should be given to the people of Alaska?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He certainly prepared such a bill. Whether he did it with the advice and counsel of the people there I do not know.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana allow me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; go ahead.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not desire to interfere with the Senator, but if he wants to lay aside the bill for the present it will be entirely agreeable to me to do so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am willing to answer any question. Go ahead.

Mr. FRAZIER. As the Senator is not feeling well——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am feeling perfectly well. I regret the fact that I called attention to it.

Mr. FRAZIER. The fact is that the Delegate from Alaska did appear before the committee and did present a bill. He introduced it in the House and he presented it to our committee. It was a bill giving a legislature elected by the people——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Elected by the people, of course.

Mr. FRAZIER. And with many restrictions which were not embodied in this bill even after it was amended by the committee. The Delegate presented to the committee a great deal of evidence tending to show at least that the people of Alaska want a bill similar to the one which he introduced and advocated. He presented to the committee the platform resolutions of the Republican convention which nominated him as a Delegate, and of another Republican body, independent Republicans, and also of the Democrats, all of those political bodies indorsing a territorial form of government with an elective legislature. He also presented before the committee a great deal of evidence showing that the public press of that Territory are almost unanimous in opposition to this bill and in favor of a territorial form of government with an elective legislature. I have in my possession here telegrams from various organizations, both industrial organizations and municipal organizations, and from mayors of towns in Alaska, protesting against the passage of this bill.

I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was well within the fact when he stated that 90 per cent of the white people of Alaska are opposed to the passage of this bill, and if, when the bill is reached for consideration, the Senate has any doubt about it, I will present evidence of that fact.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask that section 1, which was tentatively agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, be passed over for the purpose of offering an amendment to it in Committee of the Whole, which I prefer to do rather than to wait and offer it in the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no objection at all to that, Mr. President.

Mr. FRAZIER. It goes to the question of the election of the legislature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the votes amending section 1 shall be reconsidered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I ask that it be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to a reconsideration of the amendments to section 1? The Chair hears none and the section is before the Senate for amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right.

Now, Mr. President, I think we can continue with the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment inserting section 7 is now pending.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the pending amendment be laid over.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let it be passed over.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; that it be passed over.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well; that course is perfectly agreeable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over, and the next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 8, on page 12, to insert at the beginning of the section "That the enacting clause of all laws passed by the legislative council shall be 'Be it enacted by the legislative council of Alaska;'" in line 6, before the word "bill," to strike out "That no" and insert "No;" in line 10, after the word "he," to strike out the word "approves" and insert "approve;" in line 12, after the word "objections," to insert "in writing;" in line 15, before the word "council," to insert "legislative"; in line 17, before the word "council," to insert "legislative;" in line 23, before the word "council," to insert "legislative;" in line 24, in the proviso, after the word "That," to strike out "all laws enacted by the legislative council shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority, if deemed advisable, to annul the same," and to insert "all laws passed by the legislative council shall be subject to modification, amendment, or repeal by, and the same shall be submitted to, the Congress of the United States, and if disapproved, shall be null and void," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the enacting clause of all laws passed by the legislative council shall be "Be it enacted by the legislative council of Alaska." No bill shall become a law unless it be passed by a majority vote of all the members of the legislative council and be approved by the governor within ten days thereafter. If, when a bill that has been passed is presented to the governor for signature, he approve the same, he shall sign it, or, if not, he shall return it, with his objections in writing, to the council, which shall enter his objections at large on its journal, and proceed to reconsider the bill. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the legislative council shall agree to pass the bill, it shall become a law. But in all cases the votes of the legislative council shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislative council, by adjournment, prevents its return, in which case it shall not be a law: Provided, however, That all laws passed by the legislative council shall be subject to modification, amendment, or repeal by, and the same shall be submitted to, the Congress of the United States, and if disapproved shall be null and void: Provided further, That prior to the adjournment of the session of the Congress of the United States to which a law of the legislative council has been reported the President may suspend or annul such law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that the amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 13, line 10, after the word "council," to strike out "of Alaska," and at the end of the section to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no annual session shall continue for a longer period than sixty days, and no extra session for a longer period than thirty days.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the legislative council shall convene annually at the capital of Alaska on the first Monday in October. The governor may convene said council in extraordinary session by a proclamation issued with the prior approval of the President of the United States: Provided, That no annual session shall continue for a longer period than sixty days, and no extra session for a longer period than thirty days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, section 10, line 19, after the word "secretary," to strike out "and" and insert "of the Territory of Alaska, who shall be ex officio;" in line 20, after the word "treasurer," to strike out "of the district of Alaska" and insert "thereof, and;" in line 22, before the word "seal," to strike out "district" and insert "territorial;" in line 23, after the word "such," to strike out "other;" on page 14, line 1, at the beginning of the line, to strike out "of Alaska;" in the same line, after the word "council," to insert "by law;" and in line 6, after the word "by," to strike out "himself" and insert "the auditor," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That there shall be appointed by the President a secretary of the Territory of Alaska, who shall be ex officio treasurer thereof, and who, as secretary, shall be the custodian of the territorial seal and perform the duties required by law to be performed by the secretary of a Territory, and such other duties as may be prescribed by the legislative council. As treasurer, he shall give bond, approved as to form by the attorney-general, in such sum as the legislative council by law may require, not less, however, than the sum of $50,000, with surety approved by the governor; and he shall collect and be the custodian of the public funds, and shall disburse the same when appropriated by law, on warrants signed by the auditor and countersigned by the governor, and shall keep full and accurate accounts, showing all receipts and disbursements, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make to the governor such reports as he may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 14, line 12, after the word "the," to strike out "district" and insert "Territory;" in line 15, after the word "Alaska," to insert "and issue and sign warrants to be countersigned by the governor as hereinbefore provided;" in line 17, before the word "where," to strike out "provided that" and insert "Provided, That," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That there shall be appointed by the President an auditor for the Territory of Alaska. He shall have power and it shall be his duty to audit and control, in accordance with law, all public accounts pertaining to the government of Alaska and issue and sign warrants to be countersigned by the governor as hereinbefore provided: Provided, That where an appeal is permitted by law to the governor from the decisions of the auditor as to the legality of any expenditure or payment, the governor's decision shall be final only in such cases as his conclusion is the same as that of the auditor. Where a different conclusion is reached by the governor from that of the auditor, the matter shall be certified and submitted by the governor to the head of the executive department of the United States designated by the President, whose decision thereon shall be final.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 2, to strike out the first five lines of section 12, in the following words:

That there shall be paid into the treasury of Alaska:
The duties and taxes collected hereafter in Alaska under the customs and internal revenue laws;
All amounts received from the sale of timber, coal lands, and other parts of the public domain in Alaska.

Mr. JONES. I ask that that amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the request of the Senator from Washington, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 15, section 12, line 9, before the word "all," to strike out "And" and insert "12. That;" in line 14, before the word "treasurer" to insert "secretary and ex officio;" in the same line, after the word "the," to strike out "district" and insert "Territory;" in line 18, after the word "the," to strike out "district" and insert "Territory;" and in line 22, after the word "the," to strike out "district" and insert "Territory," so as to read:

SEC. 12. That all moneys derived from and collected for license outside of the incorporated towns in Alaska, and which are now deposited in the Treasury of the United States and known as the "Alaska fund," shall, after the passage and approval of this act, be paid to the secretary and ex officio treasurer of the Territory of Alaska by the Treasurer of the United States, and all such sums which are now or may hereafter be collected and not now on deposit in the Treasury of the United States shall be paid directly to the treasurer of the Territory of Alaska.

And provided, That no less amount of the said revenue shall be annually appropriated for the making and maintaining of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in the Territory than the average of the amount derived annually from the "Alaska fund" for this purpose since the establishment of the board of road commissioners for Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (16) 13, page 16, line 3, before the word "provided," to strike out "herein" and insert "hereinbefore;" in line 6, after the word "governor," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" in line 8, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred;" in line 10, after the word "interior," to insert "and of mines;" in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred;" after line 11 to strike out "the commissioner of education and health, $7,500; the commissioner of mines, $7,500;" in line 16, after the word "and," to insert "ex officio;" in line 19, after the word "one," to strike out "or more;" in line 20, after the word "by," to strike out "officers" and insert "an officer;" in line 21, after the word "active," to insert "or retired;" and on page 17, line 1, after the word "interior," to insert "and of mines;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That the salaries of all officers and all expenses of the offices of the various officials of Alaska appointed by the President as hereinbefore provided shall be paid out of the United States Treasury.
The annual salaries so to be paid shall be as follows:
The governor, $7,500.
The attorney-general, $7,000.
The commissioner of the interior and of mines, $7,000.
The secretary and ex officio treasurer, $3,500.
The auditor, $3,500.
Provided, That one of the offices created by this act may be filled by an officer of the United States Army. The official salary of any officer on the active or retired list of the United States Army so serving shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided by this act: Provided further, That in the event of any officer of the army being so appointed as commissioner of the interior and of mines he shall constitute one member and be chairman of the board of road commissioners.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask that section 13, embracing that part of it referring to the salaries of officers, be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that all the amendments relating to the salaries provided for in section 13 be passed over. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] asked that the proviso beginning in line 19 should be passed over.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask that the whole section may go over. The latter part of it refers to the objection made by the Senator from Idaho; so let the whole section go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection section 13 will be passed over.

The next amendment was, in section (17) 14, page 17, line 4, after the word "the," where it occurs the first time, to strike out the word "commissioners" and insert "commissioner:" in the same line, after the word "interior," to strike out "education and health, and mines," and insert "and of mines:" in line 6, after the word "and," to insert "ex officio;" in line 7, after the word "traveling," to strike out "and subsistence;" in the same line, after the word "expenses," to insert "exclusive of subsistence;" and in line 9, after the word "duties," to strike out "Accounts for such expenses shall be rendered and paid as are accounts of officers of the district court of the district of Alaska for like expenses" and insert "Itemized accounts, duly verified, for such expenses, shall be rendered to the executive department of the United States designated by the President and paid by the Treasurer of the United States," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. That the governor, the attorney-general, the commissioner of the interior and of mines, the auditor, and the secretary and ex officio treasurer shall, in addition to their salaries, be paid their actual traveling expenses, exclusive of subsistence, when traveling in the discharge of their official duties. Itemized accounts, duly verified, for such expenses, shall be rendered to the executive department of the United States designated by the President and paid by the Treasurer of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 14, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 15. That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, and the same shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States to the treasurer of Alaska.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask that section 15 be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, section 15 will be passed over. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to inquire if the record shows that section 7 was passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed over.

Mr. OWEN. I observe that section 1 has been passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 1 has been passed over.

Mr. OWEN. It may be amended in such a manner that it would of necessity involve other sections. I therefore ask that it may be understood that other sections which would require to be amended because of section 1 being amended are open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the amendments except those agreed to are open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole, and all amendments are open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I understand that, of course. I thought it might be necessary to make the reservation now, but it can be easily accomplished by moving to reconsider, which motion will be available at the proper moment.

Mr. BACON. I understand that the bill is now to be laid aside, and that it will still be open to amendment when again taken up and before it is reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Quite a number of amendments of the committee have been passed over, and one or two sections have been passed over. Of course, they will be open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. Or any independent amendment will be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, or independent amendments will be in order as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OWEN. Who has charge of the bill in the absence of the chairman?

Mr. PILES. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who has charge of the bill, asked me to take his place during his absence. I would be glad to go on with the bill for a while, or I am perfectly willing to lay it aside. There seems to be a desire to have it laid aside temporarily until certain amendments may be perfected and the bill more thoroughly investigated. I therefore ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Before that is done I should like to inquire whether the bill will be printed with the amendments already adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not unless the request is made.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I make that request, Mr. President.

Mr. KEAN. Is not that the form in which the bill now is? There have been no other amendments than committee amendments acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendments have been offered which do not appear in the bill.

Mr. KEAN. All the amendments appear in the bill as it has been printed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well.

Mr. HEYBURN. They appear in the bill, but motions to strike out do not appear in the bill. They will appear in the RECORD, but not in the bill as printed.

Mr. KEAN. Of course I have no objection to a reprint of the bill, if it is desired.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not asking for a reprint of the bill at all. I merely made the suggestion in order that it might be understood.

Mr. KEAN. The motions that parts be stricken out have not been agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. They have not been agreed to, but if the bill is reprinted the amendments of course should be suggested.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be reprinted. Certain amendments have been adopted and certain amendments have been passed over. I think it would be well for us to have the bill before us as it now stands, so that we may know exactly what we are doing.

Mr. PILES. I understand that nothing but a few minor amendments have been adopted, nothing of any consequence, but simply amendments correcting the bill in some places. However, I have no objection to a reprint. Do I understand the Senator from Wyoming to desire a reprint?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent that there be a reprint ordered.

Mr. PILES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that there be a reprint of the bill ordered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEAN. As no one desires to go on further with the bill this afternoon, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DEPEW. I should like to finish the consideration of the Hawaiian government bill.

Mr. KEAN. The Hawaiian government bill is a very important measure, but I withdraw the motion at the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. DEPEW. Has the Alaskan government bill been laid aside?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

GOVERNMENT OF HAWAII.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask that the bill (S. 3360) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 13, 1900, be taken up. The bill has been read, Mr. President, and then it was laid aside temporarily.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is interested in the bill and he is not here. He asked that it be laid over. If it suits the Senator from New York I should like to have the consideration of the bill postponed until the Senator from Florida can be present.

Mr. DEPEW. Of course I will assent to that; but in some way the bill got from Rule VIII to Rule IX when I was not here. I ask that it be restored to Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks that the bill (S. 3360) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 13, 1900, be restored to the calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it was at my suggestion that the bill was put under Rule IX. As the Senator was absent, I do not desire to oppose his suggestion, but I think I shall at some time when he is present move to put it again under Rule IX, because it is a very important bill, and it is a bill that should not be disposed of in the absence of a very full Senate. In view of the fact that the Senator from New York was absent, I will not oppose the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and the bill is restored to Rule VIII.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 15, 1910, at 12 o'clock noon.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 14, 1910.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 14, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee our Father in heaven for all the true, the noble, the brave sons of America who have contributed out of their substance to the life, growth, and character of our Republic. And we bless Thee that our Republic is not ungrateful, but cherishes in song and story, in bronze and granite their deeds of heroism and glory.

Especially do we thank Thee for that spontaneous outburst of love and gratitude to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. God grant that the simple story of his heroic life may be told again and again as an inspiration to coming generations, that the perpetuity of our Republic may be assured, and Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado and Mr. HARDY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. For the purpose of correcting the RECORD of the evening session of the 10th.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his correction.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I am recorded as voting on that occasion. I was not present, and did not vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote will be withdrawn, and the Journal and RECORD will both be corrected.

PRIVILEGED STATEMENT.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement in the nature of a privileged statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas rises to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HARDY. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement with reference to a speech heretofore made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas rises to a question of personal privilege, and asks unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HARDY. It is eight pages of reading.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, what is the nature of the gentleman's statement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not informed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, how much time does the gentleman ask?

Mr. HARDY. It is eight pages of reading and will take not more than ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to give notice that in view of the frequency with which these requests have occurred, that while I will not object to-day, I shall hereafter object to such unanimous requests to make a speech.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will state some fixed time, I will not object.

Mr. HARDY. Well, say ten minutes——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires more time he can ask an extension.

Mr. HARDY. Well, I will ask for fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to make a statement, and for fifteen minutes' time in which to make the statement.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the gentleman wants to state; what is it the gentleman desires to state?

Mr. HARDY. It is a statement withdrawing the part objected to of a speech made on the 28th of January, stating, in parliamentary terms, my reasons for believing it was not improper when it was made.

Mr. BURGESS. Well, I will not object to that if that is all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, on the 28th day of January, 1910, by unanimous consent, I was granted by this House leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a speech delivered by me at Cameron, Tex., on October 18, 1909. At the time stated I knew that a great many, if not most, of the Members of the House, and all of the Members from Texas, were fully aware of the contents of that speech, the speech having been published in four leading daily papers of Texas and in the Commoner, and having been published in pamphlet form and circulated by me at my own expense in my district, and many Members of Congress having been given copies of said pamphlet. Nevertheless, I made this statement to the House in description and specification of the speech:

Mr. Chairman, in September of last year Mr. W. J. Bryan made, in Dallas, Tex., a speech concerning the binding force of platform promises and pledges, and giving forth his views on Democratic doctrines and teachings as to the tariff. At a later date the junior Senator from Texas replied to that speech. On the 18th day of October of the same year I was requested by citizens of the city of Cameron, in my district, to make for them a speech, discussing the issues raised by the speech of Mr. Bryan and the reply of the junior Senator from Texas. That speech has been circulated within my State, and for its wider circulation, because I believe the questions discussed are nation-wide in importance and interest, I wish to extend my remarks by including it in the RECORD by the consent of the committee.

The Chairman said:

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Several hours after being granted this leave I was told by Hon. CHAMP CLARK that if the speech, as delivered at Cameron, was printed in the RECORD, it might cause unpleasantness, and that there might be an effort made to expunge it from the RECORD. For this reason the speech was withheld by me till February 2 and revised to the extent of eliminating every paragraph of the speech which seemed to me violative of any rule of the House or in contravention of any precedent or established practice of the House, and I then gave it to the Public Printer, and it was duly published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

After one day's time, that is, on the 4th day of February, 1910, the Hon. GEORGE F. BURGESS, of Texas, offered a resolution declaring that the speech was in violation of the rules and privileges of debate, contained language improper, and so forth, and criticisms of the proceedings of the Senate and the action of a Senator, "who is specified by name," and asked that his resolution be referred to a committee, with instructions to report to the House. This resolution was agreed to. Now, Mr. Speaker, on account of this proceeding and on account of the probable construction that may be reached that the speech is a technical violation of the rules, and on account of the fact that many of my friends expressed to me their belief that the speech is such a technical violation, and granting that I am not possessed of all knowledge and wisdom on the subject, and that my personal interest in the matter may bias my judgment, I wish now, with the consent of the House, to withdraw the Cameron speech.

While doing this, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I still believe, as I believed when the speech was printed, that it violates no rule of the House and no wise principle of parliamentary practice, nor any previous actual practice of this House; and I wish to state in parliamentary terms my reasons for so believing. The only rules of this House affecting the matter are Rule I, requiring that the Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and Rule XIV, requiring that Members shall avoid personality in debate. These are in substance the same rules as govern a court and attorneys in presenting a case before the court. There are parliamentary precepts handed down from English legislative practice and English writers, and partly adopted and frequently quoted in this country. One of these is that no criticism of the actions or utterances of the King shall be indulged in by members of Parliament. This rule was sought to be invoked as it might be deemed to apply to the actions and utterances of the President; but it was expressly abrogated by rulings in Congress. Another is that the proceedings or debates of the House of Lords may not be read in the House of Commons, or vice versa. This latter rule has many times been reiterated by presiding officers here as applicable to the House and Senate; but never in any case where the facts only involved the sole question of the propriety or impropriety of reading or commenting on such proceedings or debate.

So far as I know—and I have tried to investigate thoroughly—in every case where that rule has been invoked the facts accompanying its invocation showed that it was done to prevent a Member of the House or Senate from doing one of two things: First, using the action of the other body or a member of it to influence the action of his own House; or, second, to prevent him from indulging in criticism of or reflection on the personality, the character, or motive of the other body or members of it. Further, Mr. Speaker, the records of Congress show without exception that such rule has never been invoked to prevent a Member from continuing to read and comment on the proceedings or debates of the other body until after such Member had shown by his comments or actions that he was so reading and commenting with the purpose of using the actions or debates of the other body to influence the action of his own body, or with the purpose of making a personal criticism of or attack upon or reflection on the other body or its members. Under this practice and pursuant to his duty to preserve order, the Speaker has, when the danger signal appeared, or when a Member had already transgressed the spirit of the rule, stopped the Member and prevented him from further reading or commenting on the proceedings, votes, or debates of the other body. This has been done hundreds of times; but this is the extent and furthest extent to which this English rule has ever been followed here. On the other hand, thousands of instances have occurred in the House where the proceedings of the Senate and speeches therein have been read in this body and discussed with absolute freedom, Members here reading speeches from the Senate and replying to and refuting them or agreeing with them and using them to support their contention here. Perhaps every Member of this House who has spoken often has done this. I might illustrate this by unnumbered instances. Only a few days ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] read into the RECORD a speech or article published in Texas, in which the Senator from Rhode Island was irreverently called "Old Man ALDRICH," but no one moved to strike it from the RECORD. Just a day or two ago, during the discussion in this House of what action the House should take with reference to a suit against three of its Members, a distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee of this House discussed at length the action of the Senate, referring to such action plainly as the action of the Senate in reference to that suit, and another Member of the House read to the House from the speech of a Senator, calling him by name, on the same subject.

Notwithstanding this reference and reading appeared to be with a view of having an influence on the House and in conflict with the technical rule, neither the presiding officer nor any Member objected or moved to strike it out. Another distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee made reference, as I understand, though I was not personally present, to the same action and proceeding in the Senate, and combated its wisdom. The latter distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee was, as I am informed, more polished and more adroit, and did not call the Senate by name, but by circumlocution and by circumstance and application left no room for doubt as to what body he was referring to. In other words, he whipped the devil around the stump, but castigated his satanic majesty nevertheless; but no one moved to strike it out. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the English practice is applicable under the theory and the principles of our Government. The House of Lords and House of Commons avowedly represent two different and distinct classes of people, and are jealous of each other's distinctive prerogatives, rights, and privileges. The Lords must not be allowed in the Commons to intrude their influence, and the Lords, equally jealous, do not, in theory, allow the Commons to intrude their influence; but here both the Senate and the House represent, or should represent, the same great American people, and in theory and under the principles of our Government there should be no objection in either House to reading the speeches or proceedings of the other or to commenting upon them or to any criticisms of any Member of the other House which would not be equally objectionable if it had been made of a Member of this House, nor is there any American common sense in requiring a gentleman to surround a supposed rule in this House by phrases of circumlocution which leaves the purpose of the reference clear without uttering the name of the thing or person referred to. As showing the spirit of our actual practice, Mr. Speaker, I state that from my examination of the precedents through all the history of congressional annals up to this time there never has been an effort to strike a speech from the records unless that speech contained matter that was a personal criticism of or reflection on some Senator or Member of this House or the President. No one up to this time has ever asked to have a speech stricken from the records which was no more than a legitimate reply to an argument, advanced by either a Senator or a Member and couched in terms that would be deemed orderly and not personal if used in discussion between Members of this House. Mr. Speaker, I believe that every paragraph of the speech I placed in the RECORD is in order; that it would be proper in this House if used as to and in reply to a speech of a Representative; that it would be in order if used in a court as to and in reply to a speech made in a case before a court, and that it is therefore in order here.

Let me quote from an academic discussion of this matter which took place in 1890, though not agreeing with all that was then said. This discussion took place in the Senate. Most of those taking place are long since dead. I do not read the RECORD to influence any action of this House or to criticise. I trust it is history, but I read it to show that if I am not right in my views of the purpose and right limitation of the rules I have nevertheless distinguished company. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 4, 1890, page 8077, Mr. EDMUNDS, President pro tempore, states:

> He has observed with regret a growing tendency to allude in terms of severity and disparagement to the proceedings of the other House of Congress. It is a violation of the fundamental principles of parliamentary law to refer in either House to what is done by the other for any purpose whatever, except historically, after the transactions have occurred. The Chair hopes that the Senate, in preservation of its own dignity and in the protection of its own immunity from recriminations that might occur, will observe this limitation.

This shows the purpose of the rule and occasion of its invocation. Mr. Vest stated:

> It is my understanding that it is entirely legitimate to refer to what has been said or done in the other branch of Congress after the event has transpired; anything, for instance, that is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. But it is not legitimate to refer to proceedings of the other House in order to cause an argument or to influence the action of this body.

Mr. CULLOM referred to frequent reading of record of House debates on the tariff question and asked if it was parliamentary. Mr. Vest did the same, saying he had frequently done that, and that it was his understanding that he had a right to do it; that it was done on both sides of the Chamber.

Of course—

He said—

> I shall abide by the rule, whatever the Chair or the Senate may declare it to be, but it seems to me a harsh one, not based on any good reason.
>
> Mr. MORGAN. Is there any such rule?
>
> Mr. VEST. I am speaking of the construction of the Senator from Vermont, a construction that we can not use anything or quote anything that is said or done in the House of Representatives during this session. I understand him to say that.
>
> Mr. MORGAN. What I want to get at is, what is the rule?
>
> Mr. EDMUNDS (President pro tempore). This subject is not specially treated in the rules of the Senate, but is a question of general parliamentary law. Cushing says:
> "All expressions concerning the other House or its Members which, if uttered with reference to the House, of which the Speaker is a Member, would be disorderly; second, all reference to or introduction of the proceedings or debates of the other House for the purpose of commenting on them by way of answer, explanation or commendation, discussion or animadversion; third, introduction or reference to proceedings of the other House or the opinion of the sovereign for the purpose of influencing the determination of the House, of which the Speaker is a Member."

Mr. VEST. May I inquire of the Chair when this limitation expires?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has no opinion on this subject at this time.

Mr. VEST. Because, if there be no limitation, then we violate the rule by referring to the proceedings of the House of Representatives at the next session or the next Congress, and a privilege of all other citizens of the United States is taken away from the Members of the Senate, which is th right of free comment upon the proceedings of either branch of Congress.

All this discussion shows the purpose and application of the rule to be twofold: First, the prevention of influence by one body on another; second, the protection of the Members of either House from animadversion or criticism in the other to the same extent each House protects its own Members. These are the only reasons for the rule, the only possible commonsense basis for it. When the legislative matter is disposed of, is no longer pending or being considered, the first reason can not apply, the second reason always applies if it exists, and no Member of either House has the right to indulge in personal criticism or reflections upon any Senator or Representative, living or dead. Mr. Speaker, I might stress further the idea advanced by Mr. Vest that some constructions given to the rule take away the right of freedom of speech from Members of this House on this floor, a right guaranteed by the Constitution to every man and, I think, in all places. Freedom of speech, I mean, not license to abuse the freedom of speech. Twenty years have passed since that discussion in the Senate apropos of nothing then before the Senate. In that time Senators and Representatives have more and more exercised the right of freedom of speech, not abuse of speech, without let or hindrance here or in the Senate. Since that time few, if any, have heretofore sought to deny it.

I shall not boast that I am always right or challenge opponents to find a flaw in the armor of my perfection, but I shall never here make a speech to which I shall ask that no reply be made here or anywhere else. I hope and believe I shall see the time when no man in the Senate or in the House can make a speech that can not be specifically and categorically taken up and replied to, critically, boldly, and vigorously, here or in the Senate or anywhere else on God's green earth. If, in my opinion, a man representing the people in the House or in the Senate has attacked the institutions of my country, the teachings of truth and faith, or the tenets of my party, I believe that I have the right here or anywhere else to reply to and repel that attack with the weapons of reason, logic, and argument in every form, and I believe that the time will come when no man who represents the people, either in the House or the Senate, will ever ask that such a reply be stricken from the RECORD because it may violate some rule of interchange of courtesies between the two Houses, and when every Senator and Representative will realize that both his speeches and votes, and every other man's speeches and votes, must stand out without screen or protection where the white light of truth may beat upon it everywhere and before all the people.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks unanimous consent to withdraw the speech referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I send a resolution to the Clerk's desk and ask unanimous consent that it be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 393.

Resolved, That inasmuch as the speech of the Hon. RUFUS HARDY, mentioned in said resolution as referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, has on his motion been stricken from the permanent RECORD, the Committee on the Judiciary are hereby discharged from further consideration of said resolution so referred, and that the same do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time?

Mr. HARDY. I think, Mr. Speaker, it ought to be worded a little differently.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. HARDY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20686, the river and harbor bill, and pending that motion I move that the general debate be limited to two hours and confined to the subject immediately under discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20686, and asks that the general debate be limited to two hours and confined to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 20686) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is somewhat singular in its character, but not so much in method as in policy. It is an honest effort to return to the old custom of an annual river and harbor bill. From 1866 down to 1882, with the exception of the year 1877, a regular annual river and harbor bill was reported to the House each year and enacted into law. At that time it was upon the same plane as other appropriation bills. It was expected every year the same as the naval bill, the army bill, the pension bill, and the agricultural bill. Nobody expected it would not appear, and it never disappointed anyone.

But in 1882 President Arthur, after it had been sent to him, disapproved it, and although the bill was passed over his veto, the friends of rivers and harbors became greatly discouraged. Many Members who sustained the bill after the veto were defeated at the following election. Even the distinguished Speaker of the House, then a young Member of this body, who voted to carry it over the veto, found the campaign into which he was precipitated a few months afterwards one of the most fiercely fought in his experience of thirty-five years. This staggering blow greatly discouraged the friends of improvement, and resulted in a change of policy. Thereafter river and harbor bills became biennial.

But very soon conditions became intolerable. Large projects could not be handled without absorbing the greater part of the money, leaving smaller, but no less meritorious, improvements to shiver in the cold. Then Senator FRYE, for nearly a quarter of a century at the head of the Commerce Committee of the Senate, and one of the ablest, as well as most persistent, friends of river and harbor improvement in the country, proposed the continuing-contract system. This was in 1890, and it put favored projects upon the basis of an annual bill, thus relieving the strain. In 1896, however, President Cleveland, following the example of President Arthur, disapproved the bill, and again, although carried over his disapproval, the friends of river and harbor improvements were greatly discouraged.

The result of that veto was that bills came less frequently. Instead of being biennial, they became triennial; and from that day to this, with the exception of 1905, they have appeared three years apart, becoming so large that the Treasury must be consulted as to the condition of the surplus or the deficit. "Can we have a river and harbor bill this year?" "Will the Treasury stand it?" "Will the President veto it?" are questions immediately provoked when a river and harbor bill is suggested.

In the meantime a great sentiment has been aroused throughout the country in favor of river and harbor improvements. Beginning four or five years ago it has continued to increase, rapidly growing in strength, until this city, in the last three or four years, has witnessed the presence of a great Rivers and Harbors Congress, representing the friends of river and harbor improvements from nearly every State in the Union. This has four years, has witnessed the presence of a great River and Harbor Congress, representing the friends of river and harbor the old custom of an annual river and harbor bill. [Loud applause.]

As I have said, the bill presented is an honest endeavor to make an annual bill. Of course it is large, larger than it would otherwise be if three years had not elapsed since the passage of a regular river and harbor bill. Old projects and new projects of importance which have been pounding at our doors, could easily have been disposed of had a bill been formulated in 1908 and 1909. We tried to limit it to $34,000,000, the amount actually expended last year by the Engineer Corps.

If the corps could expend $34,000,000 in a year, then, for the present, that should be the standard of an annual bill. But there came to our door several large projects that we could not avoid, and so the bill has grown to $42,000,000, including seven millions of authorizations. This makes the cash appropriation $35,000,000, which is just about the amount that can be economically expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

Many manifest reasons exist why an annual bill will be a better business bill. The amount estimated each year by the engineers will be the amount that can be spent in the ensuing year.

Although the law requires that the estimates to be submitted by the Engineer Department shall be for the next fiscal year, under the old system of biennial and triennial bills sad experience had taught the local officers to include in their estimates for the fiscal year either a sum large enough to last for two years or at least an item for contingencies sufficiently large to take care of the plant after the year's work was done until such time as additional funds should be provided by the next river and harbor bill at an uncertain date in the future. The plant must necessarily be looked after and maintained to a certain extent, even when not at work, and these purely fixed charges often amounted to a considerable sum. Moreover, when the new appropriation was finally made, the plant that had been idle for one or two years, or even longer, owing to lack of appropriations, had to be overhauled and put in order to restore it to proper working condition. Not only did these items of expense make a serious drain on the respective appropriations, but valuable time was also lost in making these repairs. It is believed that it is not going too far to say that in many cases, where the bill became a law late in the session, the end of a working season arrived before the plant was in proper condition to go to work.

A single authentic instance may be cited where a new dredge lay idle for four years before funds were made available to pay operating expenses, and before doing its first real work had to undergo extensive overhauling and repairs, due to deterioration while lying idle. It is, moreover, a truism, I believe, among practical business men that vessels in ordinary deteriorate with equal or greater rapidity than those in commission.

The Engineer Corps controls and operates 462 boats of one kind and another—steamboats, dredge boats, snag boats, working boats, tugs, and so forth—and has a force of between 5,000 and 6,000 men and an unclassified list of between 10,000 and 15,000 men. Here is a fleet of vessels and an army of men that must lie idle much of the time between triennial bills. It will be otherwise under annual bills. For this reason there must be another bill next year or little will be available to work boats or men. For that reason this bill should be succeeded by an annual bill next year. [Applause.]

Projects which have been adopted by Congress and those which have been recommended, but not adopted, amount to $264,000,000, not including $75,000,000 for the Mississippi. Now, if you will add those together and divide them by thirty-two million, you will find that all the projects recommended to Congress and adopted by Congress can be completed in twelve years, with a bill of $32,000,000 a year, including maintenance. This shows that an annual bill need not embarrass the Treasury. There need be no call for bonds, no strain upon the Treasury. It will simply be a bill of between $25,000,000 and $35,000,000, which the Treasury can take care of.

The second distinctive feature of this bill is the limit of time in which the Mississippi and its tributaries can have permanent improved channels. The bill fixes the upper Mississippi River at twelve years, the Missouri River from Kansas City to its mouth at twelve years, the middle Mississippi from St. Louis to Cairo at twelve years, the Ohio River from Pittsburg to Cairo at twelve years, and the lower Mississippi from Cairo to the Passes in twenty years.

Engineers report that even after plants are increased, not more than $2,000,000 can be expended on the upper Mississippi in any one year, nor can more than $2,000,000 be expended on the middle Mississippi, or more than $4,000,000 upon the lower Mississippi, or more than $2,000,000 in any one year on the Missouri from Kansas City to its mouth. Doubt is expressed as to whether these amounts can be expended. The labor problem enters into it; the material problem enters into it. Nevertheless, by enlarging their plants—and parts of the appropriations made in this bill can be used for that purpose—it is believed that these improvements can be completed approximately in the time specified, provided these amounts are appropriated annually. And I am sure I am betraying no confidence when I say that the President unqualifiedly approves the plan for completing these rivers in the time fixed by the engineers and with the aid of annual river and harbor bills. [Applause.]

It is sometimes said that money is wasted in the attempt to improve the Mississippi and its tributaries. Engineers do not say so. On the Missouri, from Jefferson City to Gasconade, a distance of 45 miles, the old Missouri River commission made a permanent improved channel for a depth of 6 feet. Prior to that mean low water measured 2½ feet. After the improvement a depth was obtained from 14 to 24 feet—the river digs a deep channel when properly confined. When I passed down the third reach of the river in November last only three bars showed a less depth than 14 feet.

And yet before improvement that stretch of river, the worst between Kansas City and the mouth of the Missouri, showed only 2½ feet. This convinced me that the Missouri can be made into a navigable waterway. Read in the report of the committee what is said by Mr. Mitchell respecting the central Mississippi and by Colonel Bixby respecting the lower Mississippi, and then say whether money is wasted that is put into these great inland waterways.

I will speak of but one more improvement—that of the Illinois River from its mouth to Lockport on the Des Plaines. A paragraph in the bill authorizes the appointment of a board of five engineers.

The bill provides for the appointment of a board of engineers to consider, among other things, the advisability of cooperating with the State of Illinois in the improvement of a waterway by way of the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers from Lockport to the mouth of the Illinois River. In 1902 a board was appointed for the purpose of making an estimate of the cost of a 14-foot waterway from Lockport to St. Louis. This board reported in 1905, estimating the cost from Lockport to Grafton at $23,543,582, and from Grafton to St. Louis, $6,553,880, being a total of $30,097,462. The plans of the board covering the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers contemplated the canalization of the river from Lockport to Utica by 9 locks and 5 movable dams, the utilization of the open Illinois River from Utica to Grafton by removing the 4 existing dams and dredging the channel proposed by this board and connecting with the Chicago Drainage Canal by a lock already built in the dam constructed for the Sanitary District of Chicago at Lockport.

This report contained no recommendations as to the advisability of undertaking the project, because such opinion was not called for in the act ordering the survey, but after it was reported to Congress the River and Harbor Committee by resolution referred it to the board of review, which reported against its advisability on account of cost and the depth of water, but stated that it "believes that the commercial interests of the Great Lakes are entitled to an outlet to the Gulf of Mexico of as great a capacity as can be obtained at a reasonable cost."

In accordance with the river and harbor act of 1907 a board was appointed to examine the Mississippi River below St. Louis and report as to the practicability and desirability of constructing and maintaining a channel 14 feet deep from St. Louis to the mouth of the river, the law providing that this board should consider in connection with such examination the survey of the route from Chicago to St. Louis, reported upon in 1905, as stated above.

This board concluded that it was practicable to obtain a depth of 14 feet from St. Louis to the mouth of the Mississippi River at a total cost of approximately $128,600,000. This sum and the $30,097,462 estimated by the board of 1905 for the 14-foot waterway between Lockport and St. Louis would make a total for a 14-foot waterway from Lake Michigan to the Gulf of Mexico of $158,697,462. The report of this special board was referred, as required by law, to the board of review, which agreed with the special board that it is not desirable to construct a channel 14 feet deep, and that the present demands of commerce between St. Louis and the mouth of the Mississippi River are adequately met by the existing projects of 8 feet depth from St. Louis to the mouth of the Ohio and 9 feet thence to the Gulf of Mexico. The board of review stated, moreover, that it believed a waterway 8 feet deep from Chicago to St. Louis, to correspond with the present project from St. Louis to Cairo, would be desirable, having in view the demands of the commerce of to-day, provided its cost is reasonable, and that both present and prospective commerce would be adequately served by a through channel 9 feet in depth.

From this statement of fact it appears that the Engineer Board of Review not only expressed the belief in its report in 1907 "that the commercial interests of the Great Lakes are entitled to an outlet to the Gulf of as great capacity as can be obtained at reasonable cost," but added, in its report of 1909, that a waterway 8 feet deep from Chicago to St. Louis, to correspond with the present project from St. Louis to Cairo, would be desirable, provided its cost is reasonable. In view of this, and the further fact that the people of Illinois have now authorized their general assembly to appropriate $20,000,000 for the construction of a suitable navigable waterway from Lockport to the mouth of the Illinois in conjunction with the development of water power, the committee recognizes the importance of ascertaining, by means of a new board, to what extent the United States may properly cooperate with the State of Illinois in securing the construction of a suitable waterway through the Illinois River.

The United States has heretofore generously cooperated with other localities, notably in the case of Cold Spring Inlet in New Jersey, carried in the bill of 1907. There are also in the present bill 21 items in which appropriations are made dependent upon contributions by local interests.

In providing for a board to consider the question of cooperation, the committee has followed the usual course of procedure. In 1902 the river and harbor bill provided for the so-called "Ernst board," which was authorized to make an estimate of the cost of a 14-foot waterway from Lockport to St. Louis. Again, in 1907 this committee, in the bill of that year, provided for the so-called "Bixby board," which was directed, among other things, also to consider the route from Lockport to St. Louis. It was the latter board that reported in 1909 adversely to a 14-foot waterway.

Nor is it unusual to select one for service upon such boards who is not a member of the United States Engineer Corps. Two of the Bixby board of 1907, composed of five members, did not belong to that corps. One was an attaché of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the other a civil engineer taken from civil life. It should be noted, too, that the interests of the United States are safeguarded not less carefully than in the acts of 1902 and 1907, the present bill, among other things, authorizing the board to consider reports of former boards in which full consideration is given to anticipated expense of the United States, especially in connection with the withdrawal of water from Lake Michigan and the question of damages likely to accrue by the overflow of private property.

The proposed appropriation of $1,000,000 for this waterway is not made available in this bill. Indeed, the committee is informed by the Comptroller of the Treasury that until further future affirmative legislation by Congress it will neither be available nor will it be entered upon the books of the Treasury Department as a charge upon the Treasury. It is introduced at this time to indicate the committee's willingness to improve the Illinois River whenever Congress can, by suitable cooperation with the State of Illinois, make a proper improvement at a reasonable expense.

As I have said, the people of Illinois have authorized the legislature to issue bonds to the amount of $20,000,000 to build a waterway between Lockport and the mouth of the Illinois River for the purpose of a waterway and for the development of water power, and they simply ask the United States this question: What amount of cooperation will you give us? A fair, plain proposition, which the United States should not refuse to consider, especially when they are taking up propositions of the same character all over the country. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a cloud over the Chicago waterway. The fear obtains that the lake levels may be lowered by the diversion of water to the sanitary drainage canal, and that the exact facts may be before the House I beg to submit a succinct statement of the case.

This sanitary canal—an artificial channel extending from a point on the west fork of the south branch of Chicago River at Robey street, in the city of Chicago, to Lockport—was constructed by the Sanitary District of Chicago, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois. The project contemplated connecting this artificial channel with the Chicago River, and from time to time, while the work of construction was under way, the corporation made application to the Secretary of War for approval of plans for changes and improvements in Chicago River designed to correct the cross section of the river and regulate and control the flowage capacity and velocity of current. In response to an application from the corporation, dated June 16, 1896, the Secretary of War, by letter of July 3, 1896, approved the general plans for such work and subsequently from that date detailed plans for widening and straightening the stream, construction of bridges, changes of dock lines, and so forth, have been approved by the Secretary of War, and some of this work is yet under way.

In April, 1899, the said corporation represented to the War Department that such movable dams and sluices as were necessary to secure absolute and complete control of the volume and velocity of flow through the Chicago River had been constructed, and applied for permission to divert the waters of the said Chicago River and cause them to flow into the said channel at the point above stated. By an instrument executed May 8, 1899, permission was given the said corporation to open the channel and cause the waters of Chicago River to flow into the same, subject to the following conditions:

1. That it be distinctly understood that it is the intention of the Secretary of War to submit the questions connected with the work of the Sanitary District of Chicago to Congress for consideration and final action, and that this permit shall be subject to such action as may be taken by Congress.

2. That if, at any time, it becomes apparent that the current created by such drainage works in the south and main branches of Chicago River be unreasonably obstructive to navigation or injurious to property, the Secretary of War reserves the right to close said discharge through said channel or to modify it to such extent as may be demanded by navigation and property interests along said Chicago River and its south branch.

3. That the Sanitary District of Chicago must assume all responsibility for damages to property and navigation interests by reason of the introduction of a current in Chicago River.

This permission was granted in pursuance of the powers conferred upon the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers by section 10 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, and in accordance with the first condition thereof the questions connected with the work were presented to Congress in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, as will be seen by reference to page 40, volume 1, of said report.

Subsequently, it having been represented to the department by various commercial and navigation interests that the discharge from the river into the said channel sometimes exceeded 300,000 cubic feet per minute, causing a velocity of nearly 3 miles an hour, which endangered navigation, the Secretary of War issued an order dated April 9, 1901, directing the said sanitary district to regulate the discharge so that the maximum flow through the Chicago River and its branches should not exceed 200,000 cubic feet per minute. Under date of July 23, 1901, this order was modified so as to permit an increase of the flow to 300,000 cubic feet per minute between 4 p. m. and 12 midnight daily, the flow between 12 midnight and 4 p. m. to remain as fixed in the aforesaid order. By a further instrument executed December 5, 1901, permission was given the said sanitary district to regulate the discharge so that it should not exceeed a maximum of 250,000 cubic feet per minute throughout the twenty-four hours of the day, and since that time there has been no change in the amount of discharge permitted, except that, by an instrument executed by the Secretary of War January 17, 1903, permission was given to increase the flow from 250,000 to 350,000 cubic feet per minute from that date to March 31, 1903, at which date it was to revert to the former amount.

Two hundred and fifty thousand cubic feet per minute, or a little less than 4,200 feet per second, is, therefore, the discharge from the river into the canal now legally permissible under the sanction of the War Department.

In November, 1906, the Sanitary District of Chicago made application to the Secretary of War for permission to construct and maintain the Calumet sag channel, through which it proposed to reverse the flow of the Calumet River and thereby increase by 4,000 cubic feet per second the flow through the drainage canal. The application was denied. Later the United States began suit against the Sanitary District, praying that an injunction issue restraining the defendant from proceeding with the work. The Sanitary District, in open court, agreed to do nothing further until all questions in dispute had been disposed of by the highest court. In November last the United States had submitted all its testimony, and the defendant has recently notified the plaintiff that it is ready to offer its proof. It will be seen, therefore, that the Government has not at any time been blind to the danger that threatened the diversion of water from Lake Michigan or negligent in safeguarding its interests.

While admitting that the canal is of vast importance to the city of Chicago, the War Department, in considering the questions connected with this subject, has recognized the fact that the diversion of water from Lake Michigan may injuriously affect the interests of navigation, not only by increasing the current in Chicago River, but also by lowering the level of the Great Lakes. The effect on the current of the river was demonstrated when the discharge of 300,000 cubic feet per minute, under the first of the aforesaid permits, caused such an increase in the velocity of the current as to call forth vigorous protests from commercial interests, but the amount now allowed is scarcely noticeable on the level of the Lakes. At least, its effect has not yet been demonstrated. It can not be doubted, however, that should any considerable continuous permanent diversion of water from Lake Michigan be allowed through the drainage canal or other waterways, it must result in lowering the average level of Lakes Michigan and Huron, and thus affect the condition and capacity of the numerous harbors and channels leading thereto on these lakes. The questions whether, and to what extent, such diversions shall be permitted are therefore of vital importance and should receive the most careful consideration of Congress.

All this bill does is to authorize a board to ascertain what sort of a channel is proper and adequate, and there can not be the shadow of a doubt that the board appointed under this bill will be as careful and earnest to safeguard the interests of the United States and the level of the Great Lakes as was the board appointed in 1907 or that appointed in 1902. The only way for Congress to ascertain what is proper or improper to do is through the United States engineers, and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, following the precedents established in the last twelve years, have simply provided for a board which shall point out the way for Congress to act, and until that board has reported and the board of review and Chief of Engineers have approved and Congress has acted, nothing further can be done.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that the conclusions of a board of engineers relative to the commercial phases of the river alone would be liable to be so accurate as the finding of a board composed of sound business and transportation men?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I think so, and more accurate. The board does not confine itself to the commercial advisability. The board considers its cost and its advisability from every standpoint, but never limits itself to the commercial phases alone.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Does the gentleman find any valid objections to the creation of a board of business and transportation men to pass upon the commercial phase alone in cases where the department of engineers has reported favorably as to the feasibility and all other necessary phases of waterway projects?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do, because it is entirely unnecessary. There is no class of men in the United States who are better qualified to pass upon the commerce and the commercial needs of the scheme than the men who are improving it and studying it and who have made it a study for years and years. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I would ask this further question, Does this bill contain any items of appropriations for projects not favorably reported by the Board of Engineers?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Not one, so far as I know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania and Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as he is the nearer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman's description of the policy of an annual appropriation bill, it means that hereafter, unless there is an annual appropriation or a sufficient balance on hand, work upon unfinished projects must stop.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Work on every project must stop, excepting the few that are under continuing contract.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the new committee, of which you are now the honored chief, adopted any policy with regard to the distribution of funds according to the commercial importance of the stream?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. We have not adopted any general policy so far as I know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has that influenced the committee at all in the preparation of the present bill——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It has.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Even if there was a large tonnage upon one river and a small tonnage upon another river, would it make any difference to the committee so far as the appropriation was concerned?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It would make a decided difference; a large tonnage would always commend itself to the committee, but because a river did not happen to have much of a tonnage at the present time would be no reason for throwing it out. [Applause.] On the other hand, because a river has a large tonnage would be a splendid reason for giving it help.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Granting that it is fair that appropriations should be made to rivers in anticipation of tonnage which those rivers do not now yield, has the committee given any consideration to the revenues created at ports or on rivers, which revenues go into the distribution which the committee makes?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; it has heard and been told about the revenue received at places where improvements are asked for. That is one of the strongest points made by gentlemen for such improvements, and they have all been considered by the committee with great care.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that I am interested in a great coastal project along the Atlantic, but he will also agree, I am sure, that I have been unstinted in my efforts to promote the waterways development of the country. However, I desire to ask now whether, in view of the continuing-contract system, which the gentleman has enlarged upon in his argument, Congress is committed to make annual appropriations until all of these large projects growing out of the Mississippi and its tributaries are completed?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. This Congress certainly is committed to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has intimated——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. We can not commit a future Congress to anything, but this Congress can certainly commit itself to a bill next year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want the House or the gentleman to misunderstand me. I do not propose to oppose this bill, but I want the people to clearly understand what Congress proposes to do. The gentleman, on page 5 in his argument, says:

> Perhaps the distinctive feature of this bill is the attention given to the Mississippi River and its principal tributaries.

In view of this statement, I desire to ask whether it does not mean that if this bill is passed Congress is committed to put $4,000,000 per annum in the lower Mississippi, $2,000,000 per annum in the middle Mississippi, and $2,000,000 per annum in the upper Mississippi leading to St. Paul?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; this Congress is committed to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not it also a fact that by the passage of this bill Congress is virtually committed to the completion of projects on the Mississippi and its tributaries that will aggregate an expenditure of $264,000,000?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. If that is the correct aggregate, this Congress certainly is. We can not control the action of future Congresses.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken in his figures; I am quite sure he is. He has taken an aggregate of all the projects all over the United States.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I can count them up, I think, from memory. Eighty million dollars for the lower Mississippi, $21,000,000 for the middle Mississippi, $20,000,000 for the upper Mississippi; that makes $121,000,000. Then, for a permanent fixed channel in the Missouri, $20,000,000, and then the Ohio is about $62,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell me the combined tonnage of the Mississippi River and all its tributaries for which these sums are to be appropriated?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I can not; but I think no man on the River and Harbor Committee doubts that when permanent improved channels are completed on the Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Missouri, at least from Kansas City to its mouth, there must come a big commerce. [Applause.]

It stands to reason, for the Mississippi and its tributaries traverse the great breadbasket of this country. They also pierce iron mines and coal mines, and there is no reason, if permanent improved channels exist, why those rivers should not be freighted with commerce.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that we have had great difficulty in obtaining certain appropriations for eastern projects, which will be advocated in this House again and again. Therefore, I want to ask the gentleman, so that there will be a complete understanding, whether it is not a fact that the total commerce of the entire Mississippi River system, as reported by the Waterways Commission, of which he was a member, for the year 1906, according to the census report, was 19,531,093 tons, and of that 19,000,000 more than 15,000,000 came out of the Ohio River from Pittsburg and vicinity, leaving the total tonnage of the entire Mississippi River system, with all its tributaries excepting the Ohio, a little over 4,300,000 tons, or one-seventh the tonnage of the River Delaware alone? I will ask the gentleman if that is not the fact?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. If you are quoting from the National Waterways Commission report you are correct. I stand by that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am asking these questions in order that it may be thoroughly understood by this House when another great project comes before Congress that there will be merit in it, there will be tonnage behind it, and there will be revenue which will go into the Treasury of the United States for distribution throughout the Mississippi River country and the other great river sections of this country which are a part of this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. There has never been a time, at least in the last twelve years, since I have been a member of the River and Harbor Committee, that the generous hand was not extended to every harbor on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, and on the Great Lakes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If I have the time, I will yield to the gentleman such time as he desires.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I simply want to complete that sentence. The harbors of the United States have been treated with the utmost generosity, and they will continue so to be treated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to the State of Connecticut?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. And I was about to add that every tidal river on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts has been treated most generously and will continue so to be treated. [Applause.] Now, I will yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman direct his attention to the State of Connecticut and tell me how much has been appropriated by the Government since the beginning of time in that Commonwealth on all its rivers and all its harbors?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. You probably have it before you and can tell.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. About $5,000,000 on a present annual tonnage of 5,000,000 tons. And $5,000,000 appropriated to that State and all its rivers and harbors since the beginning of time is less than what you propose to put into the Mississippi for one year, where the commerce is not equal to that of the single State of Connecticut to-day.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Nature helped the harbors of Connecticut, as it helped many others. Great amounts of money must be expended on harbors where nature has had to be improved upon. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, an expenditure of $205,000,000 is involved in this plan, which comprises the upper, the lower, and the middle Mississippi River, the Ohio River, and the Missouri River. Am I correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is right.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And all that sum, except about $30,000,000, must be spent in twelve years. Am I correct in that?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; if future Congresses accept the policy of this bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Well, now, will the gentleman tell us how he proposes to finance that proposition? Is this a project looking toward an issue of bonds?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It is a project to avoid the issue of bonds. [Applause.] When an annual river and harbor bill is established, as it should be, and can be, it will not be a strain upon the Treasury. It will not exceed $30,000,000 in any year. If the gentleman will add all the projects adopted by Congress or recommended by the Engineer Corps and divide by 12, he will find an annual bill of about $23,000,000. Add to that eight or nine millions for maintenance, and an annual bill amounts to $32,000,000. If this should be continued for twelve years it will complete the projects of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and all other projects adopted by Congress or favorably recommended by the Engineer Corps.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not object to my asking him a few questions. I know it is impossible to debate at length any project involving the expenditure of $200,000,000. It is not like a question of raising a janitor's salary downstairs, when we would take all day and have a roll call. I should like just a few minutes for the purpose of developing the situation as to this $200,000,000 project.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Are you asking me a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am asking the gentleman from Florida if he will allow me to ask the gentleman from New York some questions.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. To ask me?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. You may ask in my time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In your remarks on the lower Mississippi——

The CHAIRMAN. In whose time is the gentleman talking?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In the time of the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have been yielded an abundance of time by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In your remarks on the lower Mississippi River, in your report, you call attention to the fact that the present plan for improvement is a development of the commission's report of 1882. I observe the name of Col. W. H. Bixby, president of the Mississippi River Commission. Who is Col. W. H. Bixby?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. He is an engineer of admitted ability, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, the engineer in charge of the Mississippi River between St. Louis and Cairo.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. He is not a former pilot under whom Mark Twain served? [Laughter.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Now, then, this report of 1882 is a very interesting one. It has been commented upon by Mark Twain, who was a pilot on the Mississippi River. In 1883 he wrote his book, entitled "Life on the Mississippi." In it he discussed the question of the possibility of "improving on nature in that river," as the gentleman from New York expresses it. If the gentleman from Florida will allow me, I should like to ask unanimous consent to print with my remarks certain observations drawn from Pilot Mark Twain's views at the time that the report of 1882 was adopted. I shall be very much obliged to him. Will the gentleman from Florida yield to me for the purpose of asking unanimous consent?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to append to my remarks certain observations made by Pilot Mark Twain in 1883 as to the engineers' report of 1882:

FROM "LIFE ON THE MISSISSIPPI," BY MARK TWAIN.

The military engineers of the commission have taken upon their shoulders the job of making the Mississippi over again—a job transcended in size by only the original job of creating it. They are building wing dams here and there, to deflect the current; and dikes to confine it in narrower bounds; and other dikes to make it stay there; and for unnumbered miles along the Mississippi they are felling the timber-front for 50 yards back, for the purpose of shaving the bank down to low-water mark with the slant of a house-roof, and ballasting it with stones; and in many places they have protected the wasting shores with rows of piles. One who knows the Mississippi will promptly aver—not aloud but to himself—that 10,000 river commissions, with the mines of the world at their back, can not tame that lawless stream, can not curb it or confine it, can not say to it, "Go here" or "Go there," and make it obey; can not save a shore which it has sentenced; can not bar its path with an obstruction which it will not tear down, dance over, and laugh at. But a discreet man will not put these things into spoken words; for the West Point engineers have not their superiors anywhere; they know all that can be known of their abstruse science; and so, since they conceive that they can fetter and handcuff that river and boss him, it is but wisdom for the unscientific man to keep still, lie low, and wait till they do it.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts pardon me if I indulge a moment's interruption? Does the gentleman remember that another humorist of national reputation, one Mr. Proctor Knott, once described the city of Duluth? Possibly the truth of his description of Duluth would compare favorably with that of Mark Twain in respect to the Mississippi River. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman objecting to my request?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. You may publish it all. I read it on the Mississippi River last November, and found it very interesting. In my opinion, no man knew better the enormous possibilities of that great country, and I wish every Member of Congress had his spirit and his love of that great river.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then do I understand the gentleman is objecting to my publishing the remarks? Because I have not heard the question put.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I understood the gentleman to say that this bill was formulated upon the idea that we should have an annual river and harbor appropriation bill. I understood him to say further that we could not attempt to commit any future Congresses as to what they should do in reference to a river and harbor bill.

Why is a river and harbor bill differentiated from any other appropriation bill to which Congress has been committed? We do not think of asking the question whether there will be an annual appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, or for any of the various other improvements or lines of work to which the United States has committed itself. Now, why, in the opinion of the gentleman, is there more uncertainty about an annual river and harbor bill than there is about annual appropriations for other works and improvements to which the United States has committed itself?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. If I understand the gentleman's question, my answer is that there should not be any more uncertainty about having an annual river and harbor bill than there is about having an annual naval bill or agricultural bill. [Applause.] Is the importance of the great commerce-bearing streams and harbors of this country less than the building up of a navy? I do not believe it is. I believe there is every reason why the river and harbor bill should be an annual bill.

Mr. SMALL. I agree with the gentleman; but the gentleman expressed a doubt as to whether we would have annual bills.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Oh, no. I said that we could commit no future Congress to such a policy. That is apparent without argument. We can commit this Congress, but we can commit no future Congress. You can not make a law in this Congress that a future Congress can not repeal; but we have done all we could to establish the precedent for an annual bill.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Is there any appropriation in this bill for any project that has not been favorably reported by the Board of Engineers?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Is not it the policy of the committee to require such favorable reports as a basis for an appropriation?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Absolutely. It has been the fixed policy of the committee since 1902.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I ask that question in view of the fact that there has been some criticism in my district because an appropriation for Monterey Bay has not been included in this bill, a project which has not been favorably reported upon; and I understand the gentleman to say that in accordance with the fixed policy of the committee it could not now be included in the bill for that reason.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Considerable emphasis has been laid upon the fact that this bill commits us to the proposition of an improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries that will involve an expenditure of over $200,000,000. I think it is a pertinent inquiry that the House would be interested in—to ascertain whether, if subsequent Congresses should not continue the present plan, the money which will be utilized under this and next year's bill would go for naught, or whether it would result in a permanent improvement of these streams, even though subsequent Congresses should not continue the policy.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman has put two questions, and I will answer them in order. First, we are adopting no new project in this bill except the Missouri River. The project for a permanent improved channel of the Mississippi is more than a quarter of a century old. The project for improving the Ohio River is about as old. We are adopting nothing new in this policy of improving the Mississippi and Ohio rivers.

Second, in the bill of 1907 we called for a report and survey of the Missouri River, and upon a favorable report we have given it an appropriation of $1,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. My question is whether, if succeeding Congresses should abandon the policy of making these annual appropriations, the work that is done under this appropriation bill would go for naught, or whether it would result in the permanent improvement of these streams, regardless of whether money will be continuously appropriated in the future?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Every dollar appropriated in this bill is appropriated in accordance with certain approved plans for permanent improved channels, and not a dollar of it will be wasted. The $56,000 a mile, amounting to over two million dollars and a half, from Jefferson to Osage, on the Missouri River, was expended between 1894 and 1902. It has never had a cent of maintenance since, and yet the deterioration in these twelve years does not exceed 2.3 per cent for revetment work and 3.9 for levees or dikes. There will be no waste whatever if these appropriations are carried out, as they must be, in accordance with the approved project.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. On page 3 of your report, under the head of "Work recommended and not undertaken," I see an item called for in March 2, 1907, $37,934,000. I think it might be interesting if the gentleman, chairman of the committee, would give a few of the items that entered into that act of March 2, 1907, as it seems to be the largest under that head.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman from New York will understand that all of these were surveys put into the bill of 1907 and have since been reported upon by the engineers, and they amount, as is stated, to about $45,000,000. I can not recall offhand what these projects are, but they constitute the great bulk of the new projects.

Mr. GOULDEN. The chairman does not remember any leading one?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The Missouri River, Humboldt Bay, East River, and Hell Gate.

Mr. GOULDEN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. PARSONS. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PARSONS. As I recollect the report of the National Waterways Commission, it said that one of the most important things was that the terminals at harbors and on rivers should not be controlled by the railways in the various improvements contemplated. Has the committee taken into consideration, before commencing the terminals, whether there are suitable privileges?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The committee has taken that matter into consideration. The question arose whether in an appropriation for the Ohio River we should put in a condition that some wharf at every prominent place on the river should be made public, so that all carriers could use it. Colonel Vance, president of the Ohio River improvement, having looked into the matter carefully, reported that it would probably be unnecessary, as that was being done.

Mr. PARSONS. Has the committee any statement of the places at which it is being done, and how large a proportion of wharves are owned by localities and how large a portion owned by individuals?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not know of any itemized statement; but in a general way the committee has knowledge.

Mr. PARSONS. I notice in the preliminary report of the National Waterways Commission this statement:
